To-day the legislature, instead of being the organized representative of those who protest against the government, is itself the government. Within its halls occur the conflicts for the control of the fortunes and destinies of the people. There is no outside enemy whose constant presence enforces harmony and mutual help. But two great parties, backed by their machine, stand face to face, and whichever masters the legislature, masters the people. The districts which elect representatives are no longer unanimous, but are usually quite equally divided between the two parties. The suffrage, too, has been widened. When a limited, local oligarchy selected a representative it had all the freedom of choice which is exercised to-day in private business by the directors of a corporation in selecting managers, agents and attorneys.

Again, legislation in the olden time was very meagre. The people were satisfied to live according to the customs of their ancestors. Government was simply a matter of administration; a representative system which could succeed then would fail now when legislation is the most intricate of arts, depending upon the profoundest of sciences and dominating the most vital of human interests.

Lastly, the private corporation with its professional lobby was unknown fifty years ago. The lobby and the "machine" have grown up together like Siamese twins. The professional lobbyists are nearly always the managers of the political machine. They carry in their pockets the political fortunes of the legislature. The "third house" is the legislature. It is not surprising that a representative system which sufficed for an era of isolated, petty industries should wither and rot in a day of private corporations with public functions and fabulous resources.

Proportional representation as a remedy for all these evils is the name of a plan for substituting a general ticket for the primitive district system. It would promote the independence of the voter and freedom from the rule of the party machine.

The secret of most of the evils under the modern highly organized political system is the fictitious importance given to organized minorities and groups which hold the balance of power. This is the necessary result of a system which elects single public officers by a majority or plurality vote.

Now, plainly, as human nature happens to be constituted, very few men will "bolt" their party nominees, no matter how bad they may be, when they know that the turn of a few votes means the success of the opposite party. Practically, there are never but two candidates to choose between. A third party, except in times of political earthquake, has no chance whatever. Nothing to the American is so culpable as "throwing his vote away." Consequently, the American way of bolting a ticket is to stay at home; and this only fortifies the more the party machine.

Freedom from the rule of the machine means first, power on the part of the voters to control the nomination of their party, and second, power to defeat obnoxious candidates of their own party without endangering the success of the party. Power to control nominations involves reform of the primaries and conventions. As it is well known, these are in the hands of the professionals and here is the source of power of the machine.

The main ground of machine rule in primaries and conventions is the system of exclusive majority election. The chairman is elected by a majority vote. He nominates committees, of course, only from the majority faction. Delegates also to conventions are elected only by the majority vote. This is wholly irrational. Why should a majority faction have all the delegates and the minority none? A simple device of proportional representation would remedy this serious evil. There would then be no "cut and dried" tickets, anti-machine delegates, and candidates could have some hope of nomination, and their supporters would have a motive for attending the primaries.

The importance of a reform like this which would impress the ability of representatives cannot be exaggerated. We are living in a day of agitation for industrial and social reform, yet there is scarcely a reform proposed which does not sooner or later involve legislation. The legislature holds the purse, the life-blood of the state. No wonder that in our country there is a marked tendency to deprive these bodies even of discretionary powers, and to bestow such powers on mayors, governors, judges and administrative boards. Yet why should we expect anything better of our representatives when we make them the tools of local politicians, and when by actual count it is found that one-half to two-thirds of the members of city councils, state legislatures and the National Congress are men serving their first term as law makers.

It is not maintained that proportional representation alone would cure all our modern legislative ills. Professor de Lavelege, of Belgium, has well said that the remedies for partisan abuses in representative government are three: Proportional representation, secret ballot and civil service reform. Indeed, these reforms are complementary and coöperative. The secret ballot has prepared the way for a simple application of proportional representation and it gives the movement an advantage which it by no means possessed when it was ably advocated twenty-five years ago. Again, legislative reform of this kind is impossible in the presence of a spoils system. It would result in constant deadlocks. United States senators could no longer be elected by legislatures. But spoils are not the proper quest for law makers.

With these three reforms coöperating there need be no fear of popular government. They are not make-shifts nor palliatives. They reach the sources of power. A reformed legislature would be the mightiest of engines for handling every other reform. It controls all other departments. It is nearest the people. With proportional representation it would include the best wisdom, integrity and enterprise of the people. It would represent the opinions and wishes of the people in the same proportion in which they exist at large. It would be the people themselves on conference. It would be a deliberative body in the truest sense, and not a side show of puppets worked by the party machine and the lobby. It would harmonize all social interests. It would promote a spirit of compromise instead of partisan advantage. It would give power to the majority, a hearing of the minority each in the persons of their ablest advocates.

WOMAN AS AN INVESTOR.*

BY MRS. CHARLES HENROTIN,
Vice-President World's Congress Auxiliary.

There is no more potent sign of the times than the fact that woman is attracting the attention of the financial world, and that her large property interests are being recognized as an integral part of the so-called "Woman Question." She has always been recognized as a worker, but as a worker along the lines in which her financial rewards did not render her subject to special consideration in the moneyed world. Now, however, all this is changed, the money or the savings which she accumulates are invested in moneyed institutions, as building and loan associations, real estate, insurance, railroads and banks.

The largest amount of money invested by women is undoubtedly in real estate and mortgages on real estate. The amount thus invested is in the hundred millions. In some of the eastern cities, New Haven, Providence, Hartford, the amount of real estate held by women in their own name or in trust for minors is enormous, and is usually the best paying property in the city.

The statistics of Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, department of labor, make the following showing: "The relative numerical position of men and women as investors in building and loan associations is as one to four. That is to say, twenty-five per cent of the building and loan shares of stock in the eastern and middle western states are owned by women.

"Of the $960,000,000 representing the net assets of building and loan associations in the United States, $192,000,000 worth is held by 2,400,000 women.

"The laws of Illinois, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and probably many other states, make building and loan stock taken out by women, where the dues upon said stock are paid by them, to be theirs in every particular, and not subject to attachment or execution for their husbands' debts.

*Read at Suffrage Congress, August 7, 1893.

"One association in New York City visited by the writer had sixty-three chambermaids among its membership, each earning by her own labor the money invested. In a teachers' building and loan association in New York City ninety per cent of the members were women earning their own money, many of them having built several houses for rent through the association.

"I have attended the meetings of scores of building and loan associations, and asked the female members as they came in what was their source of income, and I believe that less than fifty per cent of them derive their money from their husbands. That is to say, 1,350,000 women are investing in building and loan stock the money they earn themselves, and this self-earned money, as distinguished from the total held by women is, at a low estimate, $86,000,000."

From observation one would be inclined to say that the most careless people in the world in their investments are working women, for they usually depend on the advice of some friend, a doctor, or a clergyman, both proverbially poor business advisers, as to the institutions in which they should place their hard-earned savings; and after investing them they continue to advise others to place their money in the same institutions. It is a common thing to find that all the employés of a firm or family have invested in the same institution or purchased adjoining lots.

The statement showing the number of shares of national bank stock owned by women in the United States, exclusive of thirteen states and one territory, to April 15, 1893, and par value of same, also the number of women employed in national banks at that date and amount of salaries paid to same, as furnished by Mr. Hepburn, the late Comptroller of the Currency, is as follows: Number of shares owned by women, 1,703,759; par value of shares, $130,681,485; number of women employed in banks, 383; salaries of women employed, $185,797.

The tendency of men to put their money in the hands of women is becoming a very pronounced one, also most husbands and fathers consider bank stock a safe investment to leave to women. It is easily managed, the income is usually an assured one and in the present status of women's information on financial matters it does not require very much ability to draw little slips of paper against a definite sum; consequently that is regarded as an easy way of disposing of their future, and this is the point of view to be combated.

Were the women of this country once to realize their power, the sense of ethical responsibility born of power would rise within them. They would no longer content themselves with giving their proxy to the first man who asked for it, and never voting themselves or attending a stockholders' meeting.

It is imperative to my mind that woman now should take a new stand in the financial world, and be informed as to the financial condition of the country; and not only that, but she should have that sense of responsibility which would make her attend the meetings of the institutions in which she holds stock, and vote to the best of her ability for good men or women, as the case may be, as directors.

There is also another side to this. The men are constantly saying that they are overworked; this is made the excuse for the bad management of many corporations. There are a large number of intelligent women in this country, owning great financial interests. These women would make excellent directors; they are conservative; with a little exertion they could acquire the requisite knowledge of finance, and relieve the men of some of the tremendous burdens from which they now suffer.

One of the best known bank examiners of the country has said that the failure of many banks is due to the fact that the large number of business men, or men in active outside business who are officers of banks, are so busy they have no time to devote to the affairs of the bank, and are often more surprised at its failure than are outsiders. This is especially the case in country banks. Farmers delight in being the directors of banks, but these directors are often so scattered that they rarely have a quorum present at business meetings, so they absolutely know nothing of the management of the institution.

The statistics on women as bank employés show that but a small number have entered banking offices though women are admirably fitted for such employment. The work is well systematized, the hours fixed, there is no night work, comparatively speaking, and they are expert in the handling of money.

I have written to every woman bank cashier in this country and I have received many interesting letters, among others one from Mrs. Annie Moores, president of the First National bank of Mount Crescent, Texas. She says that she had never had her attention drawn to this point before, but that she immediately made it a subject of investigation and was perfectly amazed at the result. She happened at the time she received my letter to be in Virginia, and her first investigation was in the county of Sussex. She found eight stockholders of the bank of Monsmont were women possessing by inheritance one-third of the stock, which they all voted by proxy. Further investigation has proved that two-thirds of the National Bank stock of this entire county of Sussex is owned by women. Mrs. Simpson, who is president of the Simpson bank of Columbus, Texas, gives very much the same figures, and adds that women, to be capable of investing funds wisely and judiciously, must be possessed of three essential qualifications—a knowledge of matters of finance, self-confidence and firmness. Mrs. Simpson states that all which is lacking to woman's financial success is the acquisition of knowledge of financial matters.

The key-note of the relation of the sexes is really a financial one; this may appear a very materialistic view to take of the situation, but the readjustment now in progress between the relative position of the sexes is largely of that character. Life was comparatively a simple thing when the law recognized but one responsible head to the family of arbitrary power over its goods and chattels. The position of a married or unmarried woman in the household was that of a dependent. Only a widow and she, in a very limited sense, ever thought of commerce, and no consideration was given to women as investors, "their nearest of kin among men" doing the investing for them. Within the last thirty years public opinion and the laggard that always follows it, the law, have revolutionized the financial standing of women.

The Code Napoleon was the forerunner of the financial emancipation of women, recognizing as it did, her financial status as a partner in marriage, consequently, French women are financiers and are more largely engaged in commerce than the women of any other nation, and not as employés, but as employers and partners; because the Code conferred on them early in the development of the "woman question" a financial standing, and far from being a source of danger to the family it has proved in France to be the surest foundation on which the family can be established. The French woman of to-day is conservative, her constant participation in the commerce of the nation is creating of that country the financial stronghold of the world—prosperous, wealthy and economical.

The baneful influence of the English common law in regard to marriage can never be overestimated, causing as it has between husband and wife the feeling that the finances are exclusively in the hands of the husband; so that money is an unfortunate subject to discuss after marriage and one to be scrupulously avoided before marriage. Many a girl marries a man ignorant of his financial resources, and most men in this country marry a woman without any discussion as to her financial prospects from her family; that so many happy marriages take place under such barbarous conditions speaks well for human nature.

The constant tendency of modern legislation is to rehabilitate the family as a partnership, and while the laws relating to the property of married women have modified and liberalized until her position is approximately one founded on justice, these laws are of so recent enactment that the feeling of ethical responsibility as to the making, managing and spending of money is not yet developed. Bank stocks are also largely in the hands of widows of a certain age, women who are not conversant with the needs of the younger generation, and consequently carry out old-fashioned methods of giving their proxy to any man who desires to vote it. If once the feeling of moral responsibility toward the financial interests of the country could be aroused in woman it would be greatly to the interests of the country. In her heart of hearts she dearly loves a plain statement, especially about financial matters. She hates to be in debt and extended lines of credit present no charms to her. She would be a tremendous conservative factor.

I am not one to clamor for laws favoring the financial independence of women, but which are virtually aimed at her further enslavement—too much, protection is often dangerous. Her estate should be equally liable with that of her husband for the living expenses of the family, but where her money is being actively employed in business she should be given the rights of an acting partner, and sufficient time allowed her by law at his death to wind up the partnership affairs, or create a new partnership if she so desires.

There is also no reason why a woman should not go into business with her husband; it is a mistaken idea that business should not be discussed at home, and a far greater mistake for a woman not to have the right of entrance at her husband's office. That woman is doubly valuable who can discuss the finances of the country and the finances of her home; she is a thousand times a better companion to her husband for knowing the whys and wherefores of the markets; and standing a little outside with full knowledge of the inside, makes her an invaluable counselor—and is the security of a man at his death, knowing he leaves behind him a woman able to direct her own affairs, and with the knowledge if his bequest be but a dollar, that dollar will be put to its best use.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XV.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

THE DUNN TRIAL.

On the 30th day of January, 1874, a suit for $10,000 damage was brought by David Johnson and Wm. H. H. Dunn, druggists of Hillsboro, Ohio, against the temperance people engaged in the work of reform, known as the "Woman's Crusade." This suit was called an "action of trespass," and was tried at the May term of the Court of Common Pleas, in the year 1875, before the Hon. T. M. Gray, R. T. Hough being clerk of said court, and Cary T. Pope, sheriff. Counsel for the plaintiff were, Sloan & Smith, Collins & Dittey, Henry L. Dickey and Judge Safford. Counsel for the defendants—A. F. Perry, Cincinnati, M. J. Williams, Toledo, James H. Thompson, A. G. Matthews, and George B. Gardener, of Hillsboro.

The eventful morning, 17th of May, 1875, when "the ladies" were requested to take their seats in the court room, came at last. There was much curiosity as to the conduct of the Crusaders, but the slow, solemn peal of the old church bell at eight o'clock satisfied all that they had not forgotten their morning prayer meeting. Every woman was at her post promptly on that morning, and our bright, brave young ladies, who were so true and useful during those Crusade days of self-denial and cross-bearing, were on hand in full force, and never did their sweet, clear voices ring out with such pathos as on that occasion.

Precious promises from God's own Word were read by the leader. "My faith looks up to Thee," was sung with much feeling, then a few, brief, earnest prayers were offered, just to the point, notably, Mrs. Foraker's, which made a lasting impression upon all hearts; she appealed to the Lord, "in His righteousness to confuse and confound the lawyers who were engaged in prosecuting the women of Hillsboro (who were His believing children) for trying to remove the stumbling blocks out of the way of the weak, and to establish His righteous laws for the protection of the sons and daughters of our community."

After joining with "one heart and one mind" in the amen to that prayer, the doxology was sung; then, two and two the line of march was taken up, with modest mien but brave hearts, for the court of justice.

The Crusaders were conducted to the seats assigned them, and after quietly taking in the situation, the first thing that attracted attention was the heaps of law books profusely marked, that were piled upon the table by which sat Judge Safford (senior attorney for Dunn). Naturally, we "poor, weak women" felt: Can there be so much against us in those books of doom? But we cried still more earnestly (in our hearts), "O Lord, undertake for us!"

For some time after we took our seats the judge seemed very much absorbed examining these books and marking new points of law; finally he took his glasses off, placed them in a bright morocco case, laid them down on the table (unfortunately too near the edge), and gracefully turning himself, so as to give attention to the speaker, who was very earnestly "opening the case," lost sight of his spectacles. Quick as thought, our officious little dog (named "Busy Bee" by his little master because of his perpetual motion) danced up on his hind legs to the table, where he spied the bright spectacle case, and taking the tip end between his little white teeth, darted off under tables and seats to—nobody knew where! Very soon there was occasion for some of those marked portions of legal lore, and the spectacles were in demand, but search was made in vain; the "confusion" that followed was "confounding." I was too much embarrassed by the situation to "rise and explain,"—hence, remembering that the time had arrived for me to meet an expected guest in my home, I quietly departed; but as I was passing out, Mrs. Foraker drew me down to her, and with her expressive face all aglow, said, "I do believe I prayed a little too hard, for I never saw such confusion. I really feel sorry that the judge lost his glasses!" The dear old lady did not know of Bee's naughtiness, for she was seated pretty far back upon a low chair, but she did know that she had honestly, and in faith, prayed that "confusion might come into the camp of the enemy," and she accepted the answer from her faithful Lord.

The court-room was crowded every day by visitors from town and vicinity and from a distance. In the hope of convicting the Crusaders of damaging Mr. Dunn's trade, many witnesses had been subpœnaed. Examinations and cross-examinations were indulged in on both sides to the utter weariness of all concerned. Finally the argument in all its variety commenced, and as the minutes have it, "arguments, reason, logic, pathos, humor, impassioned defense, and malicious personalities, which are better forgotten than recorded"; after which the judge charged the jury. The eagerness with which its action was awaited can well be imagined. The countenances of the Crusaders said in legible lines of unrest, "Vain is the help of man," remembering the rulings of the judge; but when the bell rang, hundreds from the outside, willing to shout for the winning side, flocked to the court-house to hear the doom! The jury, obliged to base their decision upon the legal proofs in the case, as allowed by the court, found the defendants guilty of trespass. And as it was proved that Mr. Dunn lost the sale of a gallon of coal oil and some other trifling matter in consequence of the presence of the ladies on his steps and sidewalks, the damages were put at five dollars instead of ten thousand! But that was enough to throw the costs upon the temperance men. Immediately a bill of exceptions was made to Judge Gray's rulings by counsel for the defense, and the case was sent to the superior court.

Expectation was quite general that the decision would be reversed, but it never was, because the active member of the firm, Wm. H. H. Dunn, soon after took the benefit of the bankrupt law, and his assignee declined to defend the suit in the supreme court. The costs were settled, and the wrath of man became as "stubble fully dry," and was "devoured," as was promised in Nahum 1:10.

Hillsboro, O.

FRENCH SENTIMENT ON DRUNKENNESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There is a notion common in the United States that the French never consider the temperance question. Least of all that they ever discuss it at a dinner table or in a salon. I had the idea in coming to France. I kept it for some time, for I often found French people who were stupefied at the idea of a country where a great number of persons not only did not offer wine at their tables, but believed that even the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic drinks should be prohibited. In more intimate association with French people of the educated class, I have found abundant reason to change my mind. They do discuss—not prohibition, not temperance reform on the lines we follow in the United States—but subjects which are closely akin, and which show that there is an earnest sentiment among a large class on the use and abuse of wines and liquors.

For instance, not long ago I was at a table where there were a number of young men, some of them still working at their theses for the doctorate and so entitled to be classed as students. Two or three of them turned down their wine-glasses. The act started a discussion. Why did they refuse the wine? Simply because they believed they were physically better off without it. They had made a series of experiments on themselves and were convinced that they could do better work if they used no stimulants.

The observations they made were fine and just, but it was not that which interested me so much as the manner in which what they said was received by the company. Nobody scoffed at the idea. Nobody denied the correctness of their judgment. Indeed, most of the company seemed inclined to believe that the use of wine is a questionable proceeding from a hygienic standpoint.

So much for the scientific side of the question. As for drunkenness, the abuse of drinks, I have never heard stronger disapproval. Alcoolism, as the French term it, is considered a degradation. I have never observed in talking with French people any of a kind of pity which we give the drunkard, but rather an impatient disgust and irritation. I was very much struck by this only last evening at a dinner where certain guests had just returned from a walking trip in Lorraine.

"I have only one criticism on the people of that country," said one of the number, "they abuse their wine."

One of the most interesting "temperance talks" I ever heard was in a salon where the hostess is a Bretonne. Now there is no corner of France which the Parisian loves to talk about more than Bretagne, and in this house the hostess is often begged to "tell us something about your country." One evening it was the peasants and their customs.

"The peasants of Bretagne," said Madame, "are becoming a race of drunkards," and she told tale after tale of their drinking habits. Alcohol is their favorite drink. Not content with the famous Normandy cider they use pure eau-de-vie. They put it in their coffee, in their milk, in their food. They drink it clear.

The women are even more besotted than the men. It is not in Bretagne as in so many lands, the husband or the wife alone drinking, one of them often being kept sober even if disposed to drink by the sight of the degradation of the other.

"A frequent sight," said my hostess, "is a couple after mass or vespers on Sunday, hesitating before a cabaret about going in. It usually ends in their entering and coming out arm in arm staggering and hilarious."

It is not the peasants alone that drink. My host recounted a tale of a dinner party where he had been a guest at which he computed that the wine drunk amounted to a bottle and a half apiece and where six different kinds of liquors were served, not in the petit verre, common in Paris, but in veritable wine-glasses.

This gentleman, a professor in one of the leading institutions of Paris and a philosophical writer of value, tried once during the time of his summer vacation in a village of Bretagne to do something towards checking the terrible waste of life he saw going on. He knew the villagers were friendly towards him, so he decided to give a conférence, or lecture, on the abuse of alcohol. He had a good audience and of course afterward tried to find what an impression he had made on the consciences of his auditors. To his great joy several of them assured him they were going to stop drinking.

The only argument which had touched them, he discovered, was that of heredity. That a man or woman who drinks passes along to the children tendencies to diseases, feebleness of nerves, impaired intellect, an unstable character, was something of which they had never thought and which seemed to appall them.

"Never," declared the village druggist, a notorious tippler, "will I get drunk again. If my babies are going to suffer because I drink, it's ended. And if Monsieur M— says it's so, why it is!" And when Monsieur M— left the town at the end of his vacation the druggist was still fervent in his purpose to prevent all possible evil to his unborn offspring.

All of these accounts were listened to with the greatest interest, and a long discussion followed on what ought to be done. Nor are these isolated examples. I remember being in the dining-room of a French country house and noticing in the collection of pottery on the sideboard two familiar-looking yellow mugs decorated with blue bands, exactly like the shaving mugs I had seen in the country in the United States. I immediately asked where they came from. "Those," said my French hostess, "are the cups which are used in Bretagne by the peasants to take their morning sip of alcohol. They are filled almost full and emptied at a draught. The quantity the cup holds more than fills one of my teacups. I brought them back as curiosities, and I always show them when the conversation takes a turn toward wine-drinking."

And I might multiply examples. But it is enough to show that if France is a wine-drinking country, it is not a country totally indifferent to the effects of the habit, and that it seriously considers the glaring abuses of alcohol which exists in different provinces.

W. C. T .U. AT BAY VIEW.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There is no more beautiful Chautauqua ground in the whole country than Bay View, Mich. As the name implies, it looks out from its terrace ascents, upon the lovely Little Traverse bay, far out to the waters of Lake Michigan, and it has one great boon denied to most resorts east of the Rockies—an outlook upon the western sun dropping into the water, with all its glorious train following upon cloud and lake.

To the beauty so lavishly bestowed by nature, appreciation has come, and every effort is made by Mr. John M. Hall, in charge of the Chautauqua, to make the intellectual attractions on a level with their setting. The program at Bay View is varied and rich, comprising the best platform, pulpit, musical and miscellaneous talent of the country. And here again good judgment is asserted, the W. C. T. U. being an integral and equal part of the Chautauqua, under the same regulations and privileges. It seemed a novel thing to have a young man at the door of the school of methods, inquiring for tickets, but it was only a seal of the position of that part of the whole meeting.

Mrs. Buell, for the third year, had charge of the W. C. T. U. school of methods, in session July 20 to 31, two meetings each day. The program was varied and full of interest from beginning to end. The close of the hour always came too soon, with the regretful word, "I wish we might have more." Mrs. Lilian Hollister discussed "Best Methods of Doing Local Work," and the Y's; Mrs. G. S. Barnes, "Best Methods of Temperance Work in Sunday-schools"; Mrs. J. R. Nichols, "State and County Fairs an aid to Temperance work," and also "Industrial Education for Girls as a Preventive of Vice"; Mrs. Carrie Faxon sent a paper on "The Legal Status of Women"; Miss Pugh presented finance and also "Proportionate Giving the Duty of All"; Mrs. Rastall furnished a paper on "Temperance Literature"; Miss Guernsey one on "The Loyal Temperance Legion"; Mrs. Law gave an address on the "Need of the Hour," and Miss Phenix one on "Necessity of Physical Culture"; Mrs. Helen Stoddard, a paper on "The Ethics of the W. C. T. U."; Mrs. Buell discussed "Constitutional and Parliamentary Law." Dr. Kellogg sent a substitute in Mr. Wakem, with two very important papers, "The Foot, its Uses and Abuses," and "Obesity, its Cause and Cure," with many large plate illustrations. Mrs. L. S. Rounds, most acceptably, had charge of the question-box, and the series of meetings terminated with a symposium, "What Have I Gained by this School of Methods?" Thus one can see the wide range and the practicability of the subjects made helpful to all. On W. C. T. U. anniversary the address was delivered in the great auditorium by Mrs. J. R. Nichols, to the very great pleasure of her large audience.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Chicago, Ill.

BY SARA G. JOHNSON.

Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt.—Matt. 15:28.

We are often encouraged and helped by the interest manifested by the little ones in our beautiful Temple. Mrs. H. L. Lambert, of Kingston, Mo., writes as follows: "Little ten-year-old Lena Spivey sends the contents of her mite-box, $3.65, which she has been very zealous in collecting, by washing dishes, taking care of her little brother, etc. We expect her to make a grand woman some day." We are sure she will, if she fulfills the promise of her young girlhood. Nothing develops the character more than such a spirit of helpfulness as she has shown. Mrs. C. M. Fortue, of Roanoke, Va., sends $2, and writes that it is from the children for the Temple. They would like to send more, but their society is small and the children all work in some way to earn their own money for temperance uses. Mrs. R. A. Bamford, of Oakville, Ore., sends $3.65—part of this the birthday pennies of her Sunday-school class, and $1 each from her two temperance boys, who have now gone to the Temple "not made with hands"; $1.70 comes to us from Lura Stuart and Cora Britt, earned by selling boutonnières. Anna Parker and Milo I. Shaw, both earnest workers for the Temple, send a contribution entitling them to the Columbian souvenir. Ernest A. Smith, of Riverside, Cal., sends $1, and says he shall like to think that he helped a little. Mrs. A. H. Conn, of Wilton Junction, Ia., sends $2.10 for her babies, Harold and Reina. The same amount is contributed by Russell and Maurice Smith, of Brigantine, N. J., two L. T. L. boys, who want to see the temperance cause win.

Little Fostoria and Frances Macklin, of Germantown, O., send $4.60, the contents of their mite-box. The following letter from Mrs. S. I. Collins, of Penn's Manor, Pa., explains itself: "Inclosed please find money order for $3.65, the contents of my Temple mite-box, and I want to tell thee of an act of unselfishness in my grandson, a boy of eleven years. Our little country W. C. T. U. offered a premium of one dollar for the best essay on temperance sent us by any child under twelve years; this boy (L. Arthur Wallen) was awarded the prize, and while he had plenty of wants peculiar to boys, he voluntarily came to me with the money for my box and the cause of temperance. He is a staunch temperance worker in L. T. L. and elsewhere, and I am glad and proud to believe that he will make 'King Alcohol tremble' when he shall grow up."

The letters accompanying personal memorial gifts are very touching as the following from Mrs. G. R. Wilbur, from Wayne, Neb., will show: "Some time in June my little boy sent for a mite-box. He dropped a penny in every day until we moved from Fort Pierre, S. D., to Wayne, Neb., in July; then the box was packed with our things so he could not drop them in. I had promised him he should have a penny for every day and when we were settled he could drop them in the mite-box; but before we were settled he was called to his home in heaven. I am sure he is safe in the arms of Jesus, for he certainly was a Christian boy. He was only ten years old, but he was a strong temperance boy, and very much interested in the Temple. I found twenty-one pennies in the mite-box, which I send to you." Two dollars and sixty-seven cents has been received from Cassie L. Smith, of Ocean Grove, N. J., who writes that it was found among the things of Mary Hill Gulliver after she had entered the rest of Paradise. She was a loyal white-ribboner and though nearly ninety years of age was in touch with all the interests of the work. Mrs. Lide Aten, of Wellsville, O., sends $5.84 that was found in her dear mother's pocket-book after she had "gone up higher." She writes that for a long time she felt she could not part with it, but when so many unkind things were said of our dear Temple Builder she could keep it no longer and sends it here to swell the Temple fund and help lift the debt from the Temple. Mrs. Henri Pomfret-Anderson, of Spottiswood, Cal., sends a piece of money which was very sacred to her on account of its associations with a dear sister, a devoted W. C. T. U. woman who died last March. Such gifts are indeed precious, and we appreciate them very deeply.

Ohio has a great many loyal Temple friends, not the least of whom is Miss Hattie Crooker, of Ashtabula, who is paying for a tablet in honor of her mother, Mrs. O. H. Crooker. Miss Crooker has paid $50 towards this object, and whenever she has an opportunity to speak before a union, has good advice to give concerning raising money by the mite-box plan. The Oregon, Wis., W. C. T. U. sends $4.99, $1 of which was contributed by Mrs. R. P. Maine. Mrs. Fanny J. Brugh, president of a union in Virginia, sends $3, and writes that, desiring to show visible evidence of her interest in the Temple, she earned this money by dusting and sweeping a school-house during a season of revival meetings which were held in it. Douglass, Kan., W. C. T. U. sends $10 to be applied on the Butler county pledge. This money was raised by the earnest endeavors of the members of Douglass union. An unknown "Pennsylvania Friend" sends $5 to assist in enabling the W. C. T. U. to become owners of the Temple.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"THE REASON WHY."

BY "SELA."

"Margaret, will you tell me why Walter will never prescribe liquor of any kind?" The fair face flushed, as it always did at mention of the loved name. "So many persons speak of it to mother and me, and Dell Sanford," there was a little angry gleam in the bright eyes now,—"said she never should have gotten well if she had not changed physicians, for Dr. McIntyre ordered beer right away, and she began to have some appetite. Of course I think that whatever Walter does is all right, and no one could shake my confidence in him, but since our engagement so many people have spoken of this peculiarity of Dr. Richardson that I should like to know his reason why. I—I don't quite like to ask Walter—yet—I never knew a physician before who did not 'recommend' at least a little tonic to build up the system. I never saw any harm in beer, did you?"

The two were driving leisurely along the old shady road, the morning sunlight gleamed fitfully through the great trees. Young Mrs. Scott handed the lines to her questioner, and took baby Marjory into her lap, untied the little cap and brushed carefully back the fluffy curls, but a sudden shadow was in her eyes.

"There, Margaret," said Elsie penitently, "I'm sure I've hurt you in some way! You mustn't pay any attention to my foolish questions! Whatever reason Walter has, it's all right, isn't it, you precious little blossom!" and she buried her face in Marjory's soft, dimpled neck, an attention the little one reciprocated by clutching a handful of the golden hair so temptingly near.

Mrs. Scott released the smiling prisoner, and there was a little tremor in her voice as she slowly replied: "My dear girl, your questions were not foolish, neither did you hurt me: on the contrary I'm glad you asked, for Walter, I know, is very anxious that you should share his views on the subject of 'tonics.' We'll just drive out to the park and back, by that time my Marjory's eyes will be tightly closed. I'll tell you a story while she sleeps. Over thirty years ago, Elsie, in Boston, there was a sorrowful little wedding; the bridal party stood by the bedside of a peaceful, grayhaired woman whose feet were fast slipping over the brink, and whose voice was very feeble as she blessed the young couple. As her kind, loving eyes closed on the solemn scene, the little bride felt that she was doubly orphaned, for the dear aunt had taken her, a forlorn orphan mite, into her tender heart and cheery home. She turned to her young husband—Aunt Hannah had given her to him,—and on his breast she shed her tears, and was comforted.

"But another trouble came; they had scarcely gotten into their pretty new house when Philip was ordered to St. Louis to take charge of a branch house. The place was one of responsibility, and it spoke volumes for the young fellow's ability, that he was chosen from among a hundred other clerks; so the little home was emptied of its treasures, the young wife—she was only seventeen—Elsie, sadly bade good-bye to the friends of her lifetime, and turned her back on all the old, familiar scenes.

"They found the strange city most hospitable, and soon set up their new home under a cozy roof. The good pastor of a neighboring church welcomed them to his flock, and found in each a heart full of love for Christ and humanity. Busy with her household and the many little kindnesses which seemed to flow naturally from her hands, time passed rapidly and joyously to the young wife. A year sped, and then there came to them the blessing of a little one, whose eyes were like the velvety pansy the girlish mother loved so well. There never was such a baby! and sleepless nights were forgotten in the joy of the days in which dimpled hands clung to theirs, and a rosebud mouth smiled for them.

"As spring crept upon the land with its smiles and tears, its buds and blossoms, the strength of the young mother began to fail; she could only drag listlessly from room to room. She turned every day in distaste from the table, and the tiny, blue-eyed boy wailed almost continuously for the food he craved but could not obtain. There was no mother to come with her thoughtful care and experiences, no hand to prepare the little dainties which might have tempted the appetite back. She was 'not sick, oh, no! she did not want a physician—but so tired all the time,' and the long, hot, western summer lay outstretched before her like a Sahara.

"As the days went by, bringing no improvement with them, Philip took the matter into his own hands, and one evening walked in with the great Dr. Russell, who lived in the next block. He took a look or two at the small figure in the great chair, examined pulse and tongue, peeped at the young heir who lay fretting in his pretty cradle.

"'There is no occasion for anxiety, sir, none at all! Your wife is simply exhausted; the care of the babe, and the debilitating heat to which she is not accustomed have combined to pull her down. She just needs a little tonic to build her up, sir, build her up! Now, you are very near Uhrig's Cave, and every morning I want you to send over and get a pitcher of fresh beer—their beer is excellent—and you will find it will give your wife strength and appetite, and this little fellow here plenty of food. Good evening!'

"It required many hours of persuasion on the part of Philip before the young wife would consent to put to her lips the bitter, foaming stuff; but—where could she turn? who was there to counsel her?—and so against her better judgment, she yielded.

"Time went speeding on; the physician's prescription seemed to work wonders, and Philip's heart grew light again; but, somehow, in spite of the improvement there seemed a shadow in the blue eyes so dear to him and, at times, avoided his questioning glance. One evening, standing together by the sleeping child, she told him, with great tears rolling over her cheeks, how that now, when she had no further need of the beer, she found she could not, she could not do without it! She had tried to give it up—no one knew how hard she had tried, but she was miserable without it. She was so ashamed to tell him! She was terrified at the thought that she might be a drunkard; and then handsome Phil just threw back his head with a long laugh and took his little wife into his arms while he soothed her fears.

"'Of course she missed it—that was perfectly natural. Keep some in the house—take a little less every day; she would soon get tired of the stuff;' and thus he dismissed it from his mind.

"A brown-eyed lassie found her way to the home-nest to be a companion for the two-year-old rascal whose eyes opened wide in wonderment at his first glimpse of 'little sister.' Again there was excuse for the beer, and again mother and child seemed to thrive, but the husband even could be blind no longer to the deadly desire which was coiling round the will of his shrinking wife, though there was never a word spoken. Only God knew of the struggle going on in that young mother's very being; of the bitter, sleepless nights as she fought against the weakness; of the days when yielding to the tempter, she lay on the low couch, intoxicated, while two little babes cried piteously for 'pretty mamma' to waken. Worn with suffering, wan and haggard from sleepless vigils, tired of the terrible struggle, the poor girl—she was only twenty then—begged the sorrowful young husband to take her to an inebriate asylum—think of it, Elsie—near her dear, old Boston. There seemed no other alternative, and one bright fall morning Philip left within the somber walls the flower-eyed, gentle wife, and went back to his desolate home and motherless children.

"Many a flying visit he paid her. One short year later and they sent for him and the little ones. Her release was at hand. She was going home to her all-pitying Father, and she was glad. Together they consecrated the manly little fellow, whose dark eyes were never tired of gazing at his 'pretty mamma,' and the tiny daughter with her golden curls and dimpled face to the Lord and his service,—and then she went to the rest and peace of the Heavenly City; he to the turmoil and cares of his shadowed life; she, to wait; he, to work."

There was silence for the space of five minutes, while the thoughts of each were busy with the sad little story, then Mrs. Scott said: "Do you wonder, Elsie, that those two children should hate the deadly stuff, that they were taught to loathe and fear it,—to flee from it? Look at the lines of suffering and sorrow on our noble old father's face, and ask him if there is no harm in beer!"

"WHAT, rob a poor man of his beer,
And give him good victuals instead?
Why, really, I think you are queer,
Or a little bit gone in the head.

"What, rob a poor man of his drink,
And give him a bright, happy home;
From such strange doctrines we shrink,
And beg you will leave him alone."

WORDS TO THE WISE—THE STORY OF PRINCIPLE.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

Mis' Fuller declares that to begin at the beginning and follow up the life and behavior of the principle of Oneness is as interesting as beginning at the beginning and following up the chief character of a many-volumed novel. In the first-mentioned case, Oneness, to begin at the beginning, is to begin with the universe. Uni-verse. Its very name signifies the many combined in one. Thus it is not a diverse. It is a unit, with the One Life connecting and ruling the whole.

We are told that the universe is a mass of solar systems, our own included. Obviously this special one of ours could not take itself out and carry on its own affairs apart. Such separation would cause a general disaster in which itself would be involved.

Now in this private solar system of ours is our still more private possession, namely, the small planet called earth, and as to that, why surely its very existence depends on maintaining a family union with its planetary kindred. Imagine it trying to be exclusive! Strict obedience to the law of oneness is the necessity forced upon it, death being the only alternative.

And as with the earth so with the things of earth. Beginning here with the mineral kingdom we come at once upon our principle working away, quietly but surely, by means of its appliances known as the cohesive and chemical forces. Only for these every rock, stone, pebble, crystal, mineral, would fly asunder, yes, and disappear. Safety lies in union.

In the next higher plane, vegetation, the examples are as plentiful as vegetation itself. And here again we find our friend, Oneness, alive and stirring. Suppose it absent. Suppose that in a tree, for instance, the leaves took greedily the biggest part of the sap, of the shine, of the rain, of the dew, of the various chemical foods. Or suppose these special advantages were appropriated by any of the other tree-members; by the bark, the bloom, the woody fibres, the fruitage; what would happen? It is plain enough what would happen. General and individual disaster. And the part which had been specially advantaged would share the disaster. All hail, then, to the hero of our story, the chief character in the story of the universe, Oneness! The good of each and every makes the good of the whole and the prosperity of the whole depends on the prosperity of each and every.

Still advancing upward and onward we enter upon our closing volume, entitled, "The Human Creation." In the first chapter, so to speak, the bodily or animal chapter, how clearly is it shown that the different parts of the body are truly members one of another. How plain the truth that neither can say of any other, however insignificant seemingly, "I have no need of thee. What concerns you does not concern me. Your weakness or inefficiency, or pain, or lack of development is no affair of mine."

Passing to the real human being, composed, we will say, of character and intellect, or as some put it, heart and mind, together with the spiritual, or soul of things, it is clear that only the complete development of each, and their union as one, can make the complete and perfect man. We must have the noblest qualities of character, full activity of the mental powers, and in unison with these must be the spiritual nature, one with all, yet dominant over all and making all things possible for all.

Now of the different phases of life thus briefly considered, our chief concern as human beings is with the world of humanity. And as this world of humanity is a part of the universe, it must conform to the Great Law of the Universe—Oneness. There is no choice? Yes, there is choice. It is obedience or destruction. For any community of people, for the American Republic, its one condition of life and prosperity is conformity to the aforesaid law. A civilization founded on a separation of interests is not civilization. Exclusiveness, self-interest, greed, rivalry, all these may assert themselves, but the result will be segregating, not integrating, and we have seen that this means disaster to each as well as to the whole. "United we stand, divided we fall." Not united merely as states, or as municipalities, but united in individual interests.

For any nation, then, the first step to prosperity is to enthrone this grand principle of Oneness, recognizing all it implies of equal opportunities; equal opportunities, that is, for developing the whole nature, physical, mental, moral, spiritual. Those assuming the management of humanity must see that the needful conditions are furnished.

Let us next consider what would be the practical workings of this principle, Oneness; also, what is meant by "the good" of every one, when, for instance, we say, the good of each and every makes the good of the whole, and the good of the whole depends on the good of each and every.

MAY'S FANCIES.

BY ESTHER T. HOUSH.

"See," May cries, "the sunshine stayed
In the grass, and God made
It a dandelion; and next day
Little sunbeams came that way,—

"Oh, a host! and that is why
The clouds came over the sky.
How many sunbeams, did you say,
In one dandelion?" said May.

"Why, one for each golden leaf,
And a lot for the center sheaf
Where the honey hides. The bees
Unlock the honey chest. Keys?

"Why, yes; each bee has a ring
Of keys; how else do they bring
The sweet from the clover blows,
The violet and the rose.

"The angels were washing the sky,
When a great wind, hurrying by,
Broke the eastern window through,
And down fell the bits of blue

"To make violets. See, here
Under the rose-bush, and there
By the stump, in heaps they lie,
Just as they fell from the sky.

"Only one thing for sure I know—
The angels go to and fro,
In gardens and fields so fair,
And flowers are everywhere."

THE WASTE-PAPER CLUB.

BY VICTOR GAGE KIMBERT.

Madge Wyburn had sat gazing into the fire utterly oblivious to everything around her for at least a half hour. Her little lips were puckered and a tiny frown between her brows indicated that merry Madge was doing a bit of earnest thinking.

Her brother Fred, unable to bear her silence longer, at last exclaimed: "Do, Madge, for mercy's sake, wake up; there are two lines between your brows deep enough to lay a cambric needle in, and you look as sober as a judge. What's the matter, anyway?"

"Why, nothing," answered Madge, rousing a little, "only I was thinking."

"Then I hope mother will forbid your thinking in the future. It's altogether too much for you," and Fred reached over and pulled one of her bright curls.

"Don't tease your sister, Fred," interposed Mrs. Wyburn. "If you are in trouble, Madge, perhaps I can help you. What is it, dear?"

"Why, nothing much, mamma; only when I went to Aunt Ada's yesterday she wrapped my vail in a paper till I got off the car, and when I went to throw the paper away a girl asked me to give it to her. She said she was so hungry for good reading. Then last week when I was at Mrs. Osgood's she gave the servant some papers to kindle the fire with, and it seems a pity that some people should destroy good papers that to others would be a delight."

"That's an old problem, one that has puzzled wiser heads than yours. I do not believe you will solve it, either," said Fred.

"I shall not attempt so great an undertaking," answered Madge, lightly. "I'll leave that for you with your superior mental ability. But really, mamma, I have an idea, although I do not know that it is practical."

"I will give you the benefit of my judgment, if you wish," said her mother pleasantly.

"Well, you know Edith, Grace, Hattie and I have been looking for something to do ever since we have worn our white ribbons, but we have not found anything special, and I thought perhaps the next time we met we might make some bags of red calico and leave them at houses where the people were willing to take them and put old papers in them; and then we could gather them once a month and lend them out to those girls who cannot afford to buy them. What do you think about it?"

"I think the idea very good, indeed, but I am afraid there will be some difficulty in carrying it out. It might be well to speak to Dr. Armstrong and see what he thinks about it."

The next day four young maidens waited upon Dr. Armstrong and told him their plan. The kind minister listened with interest, but stopped them when they apologized for troubling him about so little a thing.

"There are no little things in life," he said, "and I am glad you are willing to gather up the fragments, as our Master bids, instead of waiting till something great comes in your way. Go on and make your calico bags and I will help you dispose of them."

The next Sabbath the doctor gave his hearers a sermon on "Fragments," and finally said: "Your homes are full of literature filled with gems from the best authors. Your library shelves are weighed down with costly volumes which you seldom read. I do not ask you to turn your homes into a public reading room, but I do ask you to pause ere you throw in the waste basket papers and magazines which will be better than food or drink to some of the poor around you. I have often regretted this waste of our religious weeklies and the best magazines, but it was reserved for four young girls in their teens to suggest a way whereby it may be stopped."

He then told them of the plan, asking all who were willing to accept a bag to give him their names. Many responded, and not a few told the girls when they left the bags that they always hated to destroy their papers but they accumulated so rapidly that they knew not what to do with them. A few women dropped a half-worn book into the bag and one a year of a bound magazine, so that when the girls met in Mrs. Wyburn's attic, which she had given them for their work, they found some real treasures among their papers.

Dr. Armstrong announced at the chapel on Seventh street that good reading matter would be loaned at Mrs. Wyburn's on Saturday afternoons; and Grace Brown's father had an item published in two papers to the same effect, so that very soon there were plenty of applicants. One of the girls, and sometimes two, stayed in the room to wait upon them, and so learned much of the material wants of many which they would never otherwise have done, and they carried blessing and comfort to many a home whose occupants would never have made their necessities public, but who gladly availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain good literature.

They continued their work for six months in Mrs. Wyburn's attic; then it grew to such proportions that kind friends rented a large room near the chapel, and two of the girls (the number in this particular work had increased to a dozen) were present all day Saturday, and were kept busy giving out the eagerly sought-for papers. A taste for good reading was formed by many, and some were led to the Master by the strong, earnest, helpful words that went on and on in their mission of good. The girls will know little of the harvest that shall follow the scattering of the good seed in the hearts and brains of those who availed themselves of their kindness, but if "he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a benefactor," then the members of the "Waste-Paper Club," who provided free, wholesome reading to the poor, have benefited many.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

DO IT NOW.

This is for you, boys and girls. It is a bad habit—the habit of putting off. If you have something that you are to do, do it now, then it will be done. That is one advantage. If you put it off very likely you will forget it and not do it at all. Or else—what, for you, is almost as bad—you will not forget, but keep thinking of it and dreading it, and so, as it were, be doing it all the time. "The valiant never taste death but once"; never but once do the alert and active have their work to do.

I once read of a boy that drooped so in health that his mother thought she must have the doctor to see him. The doctor could find nothing the matter with the boy. But there the fact was, he was pining away, losing his appetite, creeping about languidly, and his mother was distressed. The doctor was nonplused.

"What does your son do? Has he any work?"

"No; he has only to bring a pail of water every day from the spring. But that he dreads all day long, and does not bring until dark."

"Have him bring it the first thing in the morning," was the doctor's prescription.

The mother tried it and the boy got well. Putting it off made the job prey on the boy's mind. "Doing it now" relieved him.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have been watching for many months through this high window of our Cozy Corner, the growth of a beautiful building. Beam upon beam, stone upon stone, the busy workmen have been placing it in position until now it rears its head thirteen stories in the air, its pointed towers pointing five fingers to the sky.

And I have been thinking how each stone in these vast walls was a necessary part of the whole and how perfectly each iron beam was fitted to its place. What an amount of time, labor and material was spent to make a solid foundation which would bear the weight of the solid mass of iron and masonry above. How happy the builders must be now that the work is completed and their labors crowned with success. No part lacking, all complete and ready!

Then a verse from our beloved Book came to my mind; it was this:

All the building fitly framed together groweth into an holy temple unto the Lord!

You may not all be builders of material houses, but each one of you can uprear the structure of a beautiful character, upon the solid foundation of God's love, by patient and earnest effort. Won't you try?

Yours, to build in this spirit,

God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

A PRACTICAL PHASE OF THE FINANCIAL CRISIS.

The terrible financial depression still continues, daily plunging new thousands into hopeless want and misery and wrecking princely fortunes. Many hope that the worst is over and that the country will begin slowly to gather up her scattered wealth and recover from the collapse. Others, however, prophesy that worse depths are before us and in the meantime all eyes are turned anxiously upon Congress to see what measures will be taken by that body to restore confidence. The dreadful fact which should impress itself upon every thinking mind is that whether sooner or later the country regains her prosperity it is only temporary, that as surely as the revolution of the earth brings forth the seasons so surely will the revolutions of the financial world bring in due time the periodical financial crash with all its miseries. It is one of the incomprehensible mysteries of life that these constantly recurring disasters of our present system arouse people to no action beyond measures for mere temporary relief. It would seem that people living on the crater of a volcano whose periodic irruptions brought loss of life and property would either move to some other and safer place of abode or devote their energies to putting out the volcano. Surely the inevitable, periodic financial crashes incident to our present social system, are proof positive that we dwell habitually on the crater of a very active volcano, yet few seem even to dream that there may be some way of averting these terrible visitations. When any new social order is suggested a general outcry is raised at once and all sorts of terrors are brought forward. It may well be retorted, especially just now when people are in condition to realize the force of the reply, that scarcely anything worse could be imagined than the present system to which such disorders as those we are now experiencing, are inherent. We are not prepared to say that a solution of the problem is just at our hand and we have only to grasp it. What we do urge is that the part of wisdom bids us seek not only means to relieve the present distress but also to find if there are any measures by which such calamities may be averted in the future. If Congress can do nothing more than establish a permanent bureau whose duty it shall be to keep watch over and investigate the financial affairs of the nation, at least a step would have been taken towards getting at facts which might enable our descendants, if not ourselves, to reach a solution of the problem and avert these panics which bring untold misery to a large proportion of the human race.

In the mean time various remedies for the present crisis are proposed, and different parties are clamoring for Congress to adopt diametrically opposite measures. None of them, it seems to us, go to the root of the matter and offer any permanent relief. Some urge the free coinage of silver on a basis which makes the actual worth of the silver dollar about fifty cents in gold. Others go still farther and ask the government to issue paper money. Both of these parties claim that the present stringency is due to the fact that the money in actual circulation is not sufficient for the transaction of the business of the country, and that the stamp of government can make a silver dollar, of whatever intrinsic worth, or even a valueless bit of paper, worth any gold dollar. The opposite party demands the restoration of gold by a readjustment of the standard so that the silver in the silver dollar shall actually equal in value the gold in the gold dollar.

In regard to the first two propositions, it must be said that without doubt the money of a country must bear a certain proportion to the business of the country, and it is possible that the money of this country does not at present bear that necessary proportion, in which case additional coinage would be desirable. The character of the money is, however, an all-important question. The depreciated silver dollar would of course make money plentiful, but the question arises, would anything be gained thereby? Cheap money necessarily means dear bread, dear meat, dear clothing, dear commodities of every description. The proposition seems to us very like the delusion of children who imagine that because they have exchanged their one silver dollar for two halves they have therefore doubled their wealth. The second proposition also seems to us a mischievous error under existing circumstances. We fully believe that a condition of affairs is both possible and desirable in which the mere pledge of the government would be good for its whole face value, but it is in an entirely different social system from the one in which we now live. The promise of the government to give to an individual a definite portion of the nation's wealth in whatever form he may choose to have it, would be good and subject to no variation if the government were in actual possession of the nation's wealth; but the mere pledge of the government to give what does not really belong to it will, as it always has, amount to nothing. If the government instead of private individuals owned the land, the telegraph system, the railroads, the manufactories, all the commercial interests of the nation, just as it does own the postal system, and all citizens were government employés, then the written certificate of the government that a citizen was entitled to the specified equivalent of his work would possess a surer value than gold or silver, and money might be abolished. But to expect that the mere stamp of the government upon a piece of paper, or upon a silver coin worth in the market but fifty cents, can make them worth a dollar each in gold, while at the same time all the commercial interests of the country are in the hands of private corporations who are constantly striving to enhance the value of their own products and depress all others, is a ruinous absurdity.

The truth which these people perceive is that the fact that money itself is a marketable commodity is a misfortune. It is true that it is for the interest of the man who owns money to make money scarce that his commodity may bring a high price in the market just as it is for the interest of the man who has raised a large crop of wheat to have wheat scarce, and under our present system we cannot see but that one is just as legitimate as the other. It is true that because of the office of money, a "corner" in money brings more wide-spread distress than a "corner" in wheat, but with our present system which makes of money a marketable commodity in itself, aside from its functions as money, it is useless to expect advantage will not be taken of the fact for the enrichment of the few and the poverty of the many.

The difficulty, as it seems to us, with all the remedies proposed, is that they deal with the symptoms and do not strike at the root of the matter. They attempt to adopt means which are possible only in a different order of society, and which adopted under present conditions only prepare the way for deeper abysses and greater distress. If depreciated money of any kind is adopted, the money market would be temporarily relieved, but speculation would be encouraged to go the wildest lengths and in a few years another and more dreadful financial crash would be the result. If money has an intrinsic value aside from its mere function as money, it becomes a marketable commodity and may be used as any other marketable commodity, and because of its double character it gives to those who possess it an unfair advantage over all other producers. But if money possess no value aside from its function as money its value depends upon the credit of the government, and as yet no means has been found under our present system by which that credit can be sustained so as to give to the money the unquestioned value necessary to keep the business of the country on a secure basis. We believe that under our present system it cannot be done, that it is possible only under the conditions already stated in which the government shall be actual owner of the business interests of the country as it already is of the postal service.

But no such social revolution as this can be undertaken at present, and the first thing, though it ought not to be the last thing, to be done is to relieve the immediate distress of the country. The point to be kept carefully in mind is that what might be done under different conditions does not bear on the matter. We must take things as they are, and adapt our remedies accordingly. A system which makes money a marketable commodity, which makes usury possible, may be a very wrong system, nevertheless it is the system with which we have to deal. If we ignore it, we shall but prepare the way for worse disasters in the future. Free coinage of depreciated silver or unlimited issue of paper certificates might be just the thing to do in a different financial system, but it would be folly under present conditions. If any one doubts this, he need only consider what has been. Under the Sherman bill the government has been buying four million five hundred thousand ounces of silver bullion monthly, to be coined at a rate which made the silver dollar of much less value than the gold dollar. If government had refused to redeem its silver in gold to the amount of its face value, confidence would have been at once shaken and a panic precipitated. Consequently, government has attempted by gold redemption to keep the inferior silver dollar of equal value with the gold. The result has been that money holders have taken advantage of the situation to buy up gold for half its real value. Foreign nations have sent their depreciated silver to us to exchange it for gold, and hence the immense exports of gold which have created the distrust occasioning the hoarding of money and the consequent collapse.

In President Cleveland's message to Congress the situation is strongly and clearly discussed. He urges the repeal of the Sherman bill and emphasizes the need of immediate action. The country will await anxiously the action of Congress, and we doubt not that body will do its utmost to determine and apply the best measures for the present relief of the country. Whatever may be done, nothing can relieve the sufferings of the laboring classes resulting from the ruin thus far, and we repeat that Congress and the nation should not be satisfied with measures which will merely restore confidence for the present and prevent additional distress. Such calamities as these, which visit us periodically, are of infinitely more importance than all the seal fisheries in the world, than the annexation of Hawaii, Canada or Great Britain herself. Our financial problem is worthy the best thought of the age, and its solution would bring immortal fame to any statesman.

THE LADY MANAGERS.

Notwithstanding the ill-timed animadversions of the press, and especially the Chicago press, concerning the Board of Lady Managers, the fact cannot be gainsaid that as an official body it has been an important factor in the World's Fair management and has contributed largely to the success of the great Exposition. And while the newspaper paragrapher, with his accustomed liberality (?) where our sex is concerned, is dealing out criticism and perpetrating weak jokes at the expense of the Lady Managers, the women of this nation and the women of other nations are mindful not so much of the six dollars per day compensation as of the admirable work accomplished by the board for women and among women.

The progress of woman is one of the chief and most significant features of the nineteenth century. All doors are opening to her and the very existence of this woman's board is valuable proof of the progress of our nation, it being the first body of women to be officially delegated by government to aid in carrying forward a great national enterprise.

The duty of the Lady Managers has been to secure an exhibit of woman's work worthy the women of the nineteenth century, and led by Mrs. Potter Palmer (who has given her time and talents for two years, and who by her graciousness and tact has enlisted the active coöperation not only of her own countrywomen, but of the women of all civilized nations), the result of their efforts has been such as to place the government of these United States, not less than their women, under a debt of gratitude which no money consideration is able to cancel.

In her report in 1891 of a trip abroad in the interests of the board, Mrs. Palmer says: "We American women will find it difficult to come up to the expectations formed of us abroad. We are considered very advanced, especially in the matter of organization. We have been given an opportunity such as has never before occurred, and if we live up to our possibilities we shall open a new era for women." And through the laborious and painstaking efforts of the president of the board and her associates, American women have come up to the expectations formed of them at home and abroad; they have opened a new era for all women, and thereby added greater dignity and more brilliant lustre to the name of our republic.

We would naturally expect the male citizens of this country, and especially of this city, to publicly thank the Lady Managers for their valuable aid, but instead, when we read a Chicago newspaper (supposed to be the mirror of male opinion) we discover them finding fault. It is curious, but when an organization of women meet, transact business and adjourn in a universal spirit of sisterly love and good-will, the critics deride such as a "mutual admiration society"; but when another organization, deliberating upon affairs of an international enterprise, fail to agree upon every point and take no pains to conceal their disagreements from the public (which is ever ready to make mountains out of molehills), these same critics point the finger of scorn and proceed forthwith to supply gratuitous advice as to the proper conduct of a "female" board.

We feel sure, however, that the would-be crushing comments of the press do not voice the popular sentiment. We believe that the great mass of American manhood recognizes and appreciates the work of the Lady Managers. While we admit that they have made mistakes, as is the manner of all human kind, they have at least steered clear of the quagmires and quicksands which have entangled the feet of a certain official body of men, and made it a laughing stock in the eyes of the whole world. To an unprejudiced observer, which merits in greater degree the public confidence and esteem, the World's Fair Directory or the Board of Lady Managers?

To say that the board was opposed to adjournment as long as the nation's funds remained at its disposal proves that many of the dwellers in glass houses are—to put it mildly—devoid of tact. Did we never hear of legislative bodies voting themselves an increase of salary and extending the session for the sake (understood but not expressed) of the per diem consideration? To any one familiar with the social demands of the World's Fair city and particularly with the hospitality incumbent upon the Lady Managers, the sum of six dollars per day seems an inadequate compensation.

The Chicago Tribune says that the president of the board in "extorting" a sine die vote of adjournment last Saturday, "did more to save the government funds than Mr. Carlisle, and did it in better form." We cheerfully admit that it is extremely "bad form" for politicians to object to further meetings of the Lady Managers on the ground of economy. Oh, these watch-dogs of the treasury; how they snap and snarl and growl when woman approaches the sacred precincts over which they so zealously stand guard! But they will grow accustomed to her footsteps in time and she will, ere long, enter there, as she will enter everywhere, without protest or comment.

The Tribune further remarks that "it is certain that the conduct of the board has been such as to create an unfavorable impression of the advisability of caliing on women to take an active part in the management of great undertakings." Now we think that in the opinion of the people generally the Lady Managers have conclusively demonstrated woman's fitness for managing just such great undertakings; so much so, indeed, that we feel assured that whenever a World's Fair comes again to America we shall see our government hastening to secure the coöperation of woman and unhesitatingly extending to her authority to "manage," and we venture to predict that, as a result of the work of the American Board of Lady Managers, a similar board will hereafter be regarded as a sine qua non of all great exhibitions in whatever country held.

While declaring that "the cause of female suffrage and female political control has not been promoted in the least," the Tribune at the same time affirms that the members of the board were not "representative women," not the "flower of their communities," for it continues, "women have been sterner critics of the proceedings of the board than men have." Then it follows that if these women were quarrelsome and avaricious, representative women are not so, therefore the conduct of the Lady Managers cannot in justice be regarded as proof that woman will not lend the "tenderness, delicacy and grace to American politics" which we are pleased to note the Tribune thinks the world has reason to expect.

For many reasons we would prefer to have the Board of Lady Managers continue in session until the close of the Exposition. As long as there is a Fair to be "managed" we believe it to be for the interest of all concerned that woman should have a hand in that management. THE UNION SIGNAL, representing an American constituency of 200,000 women (besides men and children), takes this opportunity of thanking the retiring board for the very able manner in which it has discharged its duties, to the nation at large and to the women of the nation in particular.

DIRECT LEGISLATION.

The World's Congress Auxiliary, on August 12, closed a a week of work probably more potent in destiny for republics than any previous period of its history. The present status of suffrage, under every representative system, was thoughtfully presented and broadly discussed, with special reference to the alarming evils which so-called democratic governments have accrued.

The remedies universally proposed and most vigorously recommended were, "Proportional Representation" and "Direct Legislation"; the most popular method was the Initiative and Referendum as practiced in some of the Swiss cantons. The pivotal point of this system is the protection of the minority; it maintains that "no higher degree of political freedom and justice can be obtained than by granting to the least possible minority the legal right to propose a law and to the majority the right to accept or reject it." The foundation principle of this method is that the ideal of a true democracy is one in which every community shall so subdivide its functions that the individual shall be protected in his original sovereignty.

Under the Initiative every citizen has the right to propose a measure of law to his fellows; under the Referendum this measure, reduced to its lowest terms, is referred back to the sovereign people for their simple yea or nay. Under a true democracy "the citizen remains uninterruptedly sovereign; under a representative government he surrenders sovereignty to officials—legislative and executive."

It is claimed by J. W. Sullivan, W. D. McCracken and other distinguished advocates of the system that this condition has been more nearly attained by the Swiss Confederation than by any government on earth; that it is nearest the ideal of a true democracy—government by the direct rule of the majority. They affirm that in the United States, county, state and federal governments in form are not democracies, but quasi or complete oligarchies compounded of sempiternal rings of politicians and corporations of pultocrats, who indirectly, by patronage and purchase, are the real law-makers, and control the officers whom the people imagine they have elected to execute their will. It is further claimed for direct legislation that it will annihilate political "rings," "bosses," "heelers"; that "word fresh from the people will be law," and officers will be their servants and not their rulers. It deals with the unit of area and with the social unit (the citizen), yet, as was said by Dr. Cridge, "best preserves the collective power of the people in administering the collective interests of society," or, in other words, is the materialization of Herbert Spencer's axioms that the "highest individuation must be joined with the greatest mutual dependence," and "the law of progress is at once toward complete separateness and complete union."

It is not the purpose of THE UNION SIGNAL here to discuss the modus operandi of Direct Legislation, but to call attention to the able presentation in our columns of the subject and of Proportional Representation by W. D. McCracken, whose long residence in Switzerland gave him exceptional opportunities for investigation, and by Professor John R. Commons, of Indiana University, and by Dr. Alfred Cridge, of San Francisco, the well-known champion of Minority Representation on the Pacific Slope.

These are subjects of vital importance to the governmental life of the United States and to every advocate of free republics; least of all can the temperance man in this country afford to be ignorant or indifferent concerning the remedy proposed for his chronic condition of minorityship in legislation and hopeless "slump" at the ballot box. The life of this republic depends upon the reformer learning how to make his vote "count," and how to make his voice heard in the political centres of the nation. His prayers in the church are useless unless they lead him to be the most alert, honest and intelligent citizen. The American citizen should be an ideal politician, with all the acuteness of the "boss" and none of his tricks; with all the élan of his inherited nobility of purpose and grandeur of ideal in government,—yet to be wrought out—and with all the wisdom that his experiences should have wrought in him.

These new methods in democratic government are a bow of promise spanning the political skies, and bridging the social chaos threatening from so many quarters. Will the American people study its colors and resolve them into a white light which shall forever illuminate all political science; or, with proverbial American optimism, arrogance and boasting will they continue to think things are "all right," that we are "the greatest people on earth" just as we are, and need no "variableness or shadow of turning"? It is "the miracle of miracles to see things as they are. To open men's eyes to see the fountains in the wilderness is as divine a work as to smite the waters from the rock. To see things as they are is the gift of the seers; to make other men see them is the work of the prophets."

"People who hope are generally people who help."

It may not be widely known that the first World's Fair was originated by Prince Albert, the universally beloved consort of Queen Victoria. Ever on the alert to promote peace and good-will among men and to draw together in friendly relations all nations of the earth, he conceived the idea of an international exhibition, and in 1851 opened the first great world's exposition in London. How it would have rejoiced the peace-loving heart of Albert the Good if he could have foreseen the great gathering of nations in 1893 with its significant congresses and international federation in various lines of reform! Especially would he rejoice, we believe, in the evidences of a growing public sentiment in the civilized world against war and in favor of peace and arbitration.

God's plans never miscarry. God is not waiting for some lost equation of His problem. Nor is it for material advancement, public highways, international codes, reduced postage and flying machines. God is waiting to grow a man. We grasp for supernaturalism, the mysterious, the miraculous. God wants the honest, the practical and true. We long for amended constitutions. God wants converted hearts. The church is gasping after "the larger hope." God wants us to have a firmer faith. We beg for newer revelations. God wants us to walk more squarely and honestly in the light we have. We want a "new theology." God wants us to have a new character. "Little by little" this must come. God has promised to establish righteousness in the earth. "Thy land shall no more be termed desolate." "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." God has promised to "set judgment in the earth." "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Let us not worry nor fret. The times may be out of joint, but God's plans are never thwarted. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." He has been lifted up, and they who crucified Him enthroned Him. There He died, but on that cross He reigns. The stars of His delayed but mighty plans fill the whole firmament and shine with glorious radiance above the gloom. The race must be lifted, educated, cultured, but it must be saved. The time may be near or it may be far, but the time is set for the final enthronement of Jesus Christ. Not evasion nor procrastination, doubt nor theory can hinder the final result. All human powers, emoluments and gifts shall at last be brought and laid at Jesus' feet.

The following incident of the white ribbon is an actual occurrence. A lady whose every dress and outward wrap is adorned with a little bow of white ribbon so that no time of day or emergency of haste can find her without it, was visiting the Fair recently. At breakfast one morning she found herself seated by the side of a lady who, though a stranger, was likewise a wearer of the white ribbon. The two formed an acquaintance and lady number one learned that her new acquaintance lived in a town with some of her own relatives who were very dear to her but whom she had not seen for a number of years. The second white-ribboner knew these friends by sight though she had no personal acquaintance with them. That night lady number two sought lady number one and told her she had met those friends on the Fair ground, had told them of number one's presence in the city and had made arrangements for them to meet the next day at a specified time in a certain one of the buildings. The meeting took place and arrangements were made for a second visit before the friends should part. In the meantime the relatives of the white-ribboner met other very dear friends of both and brought them to the second meeting. One of this second party of friends was an old school-girl friend and she had met at her boarding house two other school-girl friends. The result was that a few days later four women who had loved one another as girls and had during their early life been in constant, close companionship, but who had been separated for years, met together, talked over old times and took up again the broken cords of the old friendship. Moral.—Always wear your white ribbon.

ON DUTY.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

TEMPERANCE MOVEMENTS.

In the absence of our official reporter it may not be amiss for another to send the California letter to THE UNION SIGNAL.

The greater part of the annual county conventions have been held, and most satisfactory reports of their work have appeared. They evince a development of workers in the rank and file, all along the line. There has been no unusual demonstration of enthusiasm, but everywhere can be seen a brave and tenacious persistency that while yielding no point, quietly seizes the next, evidencing the training of veterans in the service.

The demands for local temperance legislation are growing in frequency and emphasis. Measures of various kinds are being urged in many parts of the state.

Berkeley, the seat of the State University, with its "one mile law," has long been a strategic point. Year after year the untiring efforts of the temperance people, particularly the women, to bring violaters of the law to justice, have been defeated by the apathy, indifference or connivance of officials. At last a town council and marshal have been elected on that issue, in sympathy with prohibitory laws, another law-breaker has been arrested, and it is confidently hoped will suffer the just penalty of such crimes.

Santa Clara county, one of the most populous in the state, has passed an ordinance closing all saloons in the county on Sunday. The city of San José first passed such an ordinance, but its object was partly defeated by the open saloons outside the city limits. This state of things suggested the county ordinance, which works well in itself and sustains that of the city.

Santa Cruz county has passed an ordinance requiring an applicant for saloon license to present a recommendation signed by a majority of tax-payers in the precinct.

Merced county, a fine agricultural section, with a strong rural sentiment for temperance, and only one considerable town, has closed its last saloon by high license.

Several counties are circulating petitions for local option, and some small towns think of incorporating for that purpose.

San Francisco is waging war on the "ladies' entrance." Two years ago the W. C. T. U. presented a petition to the city authorities signed by several thousand names, asking that license be withheld from all saloons having a "ladies' entrance." It was utterly ignored. The women let go without losing sight of the matter, and worked with the citizens' league in the anti-dive movement which resulted in the election of a non-partisan board of supervisors, by whom an ordinance has been passed prohibiting the employment of women in dives; that is, the selling of liquors by women in low theatres and similar places of amusement. This law is now being tested in the courts.

In the meantime the foul murder of a young woman in the rear room of a water front saloon has called public attention to the "ladies' entrance." The victim was not one of the baser sort, but the wife of a respectable reporter on a morning paper, the man by whose hand our anti-dive petition was drawn last year at the headquarters of the W. C. T. U., when in pursuance of duty he had called for an item, and in keen sympathy with the work, helped to frame that document. Such a tragedy shocked the city, and simultaneously the Woman's Alliance, The Women's Council, The Anti Ladies'Entrance League, The Daughters of the Good Shepherd, The Citizens' Anti Dive League and the High License Association appealed to the city fathers to close the "ladies' entrances." The W. C. T. U., through the county president, Mrs. Rose French, renewed its plea and reminded the board of the 12,000 names presented two years ago. The other societies followed in urgent solicitation. The reporters drew the ladies' pictures, poked a little fun and helped somewhat by long reports. The board referred the matter to a committee and at the request of the liquor dealer's attorney have twice postponed a hearing. An interesting point in the case is the fact that the chairman of the Democratic county committee has notified this excellent non-partisan board that it will not be safe for them to antagonize the liquor traffic. A hearing is promised September 8th to give, as one supervisor said, the opponents of the proposed ordinance time to prepare one to suit themselves.

The union of Sacramento has presented a petition with one thousand nine hundred signatures to the authorities of that city, asking them to close ladies' entrances.

The various departments of work show a healthy activity. A state conference in the interest of social purity was lately held at Oakland, under the auspices of the state president, and Mrs. Teats, superintendent of that department.

The Demorest contest work grows apace and is fulfilling its mission.

Several unions held Fourth of July celebrations, [illegible] 9 of which Mrs. Peet gave the oration.

The annual school of methods at Pacific Gro[illegible] was not as fully attended as usual, probably owing to the attractions of the World's Fair, but did not fall below its standard of merit. The state president, Mrs. Peet, conducted the school with tact and skill, congratulating herself that while the places of the beloved absentees could not be filled, the program did not suffer, as her women have become minute women filling every part without hesitation, herself filling the pulpit on Sunday morning and delivering a scathing rebuke to Christians who are compromising conscience with party politics.

A characteristic feature of this school is its annual object lesson in the way of an evening entertainment. Two years ago the ladies enacted a session of a "Board of Education"; last year a "Trial by Jury"; this year the climax of satire and sense was reached in "An Extra Session of the California Legislature." It was aptly characterized by a gentleman in the audience as "the most stupendous irony." A bill to give school suffrage to men was brought before a legislature of women. All arguments, pro and con, familiar in the discussion of woman suffrage, were brought out, and when reversed, gave the best proof that it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. The assembly in session, the lobby and committee room were rendered true to life. Histrionic honors were divided between Mrs. Hoppin, state treasurer, and the Rev. Dr. Siux.

The author of this witty and double-edged satire is Miss S. M. Severance, of Gilroy, Cal. It only adds one more to her laurels, but should be the means of adding many more to her way of thinking, for it carries conviction with its irresistible humor. It is understood that Miss Severance will publish the "Extra Session," if sufficient encouragement to justify it shall be given.

Sho Nemoto arrived from Japan on the 25th, and was given a reception at headquarters by the state union. Closely as all had tried to follow Miss West's work in that country, his graphic account exceeded all that we had previously comprehended, and left upon his hearers a deepened appreciation of the importance of the World's union.

NORTH DAKOTA.

JOTTINGS.

Hunter, Cass county, is holding silver medal contests and trying to enforce the law. They recently had an ice cream social which netted them a generous fund.

Lisbon, Ransom county, reports good news. It is that they have a home of their own. Lisbon has a fine new school building, and when they "moved out of the old house up into the new," the board of education tendered the use of a room in the old building to the W. C. T. U. Greatly rejoiced, they proceeded to fit it up for headquarters. Each member brings a free-will offering in the shape of some article to furnish the room and thus each will feel a special and precious interest in it. I greatly wish every union could have a continual abiding place. I believe it would strengthen them and give a sense of abiding that cannot come from living in "tents."

This union recently met with a loss by the removal of its president, Mrs. C. D. Austin, to Minneapolis. The Flour City seems to have magnetic attractions for Lisbon W. C. T. U's, but Lisbon is rich in efficient laborers, and will at once find another for the place. This union furnished the funds to keep one of the state workers at Bismarck during the session of the last legislature.

Pembina county held its sixth annual convention the middle of the month, at Cavalier. Thirty-three voting delegates besides several honorary and many visiting members were present. It was unanimously declared that this was the best county convention of its history. Miss Preston was present and aided in many ways, giving Bible readings and an address on purity. There are reported nine W's and two Y's in the county. About one hundred dollars more than last year has been raised for work. Every union circulates a variety of literature, on White Cross, Sabbath observance, anti-tobacco and general Christian temperance topics, in five different languages. This seeding Pembina county with literature I predict will yield a bountiful harvest of good thoughts by the people. Add, dear sisters, mothers' work, and thou shalt hear, "well done."

Cavalier takes the banner for gospel temperance work; Hamilton for prosecuting illegal liquor sellers; Drayton for purity work, money raised and membership, both active and honorary both for W's and Y's; Bowesmont, the baby union, a month old, for increase in membership and amount of work done in the shortest time. There are five L. T. L's with one hundred members and forty UNION SIGNALS are taken.

Grafton, Walsh county, held a strawberry festival during institute week and cleared over twenty dollars. They have placed an ice-water tank on one of the business streets.

The fifth annual convention of Walsh county was prosperous from beginning to end. The weather was perfect. Twenty-eight delegates brought in encouraging reports.

Forest River has paid the expense of one drink-cure patient; Park River had thirty-eight members and fifty dollars in the treasury. The evening meeting was largely attended and the facts stated by Miss Preston on purity work were such as to set people to thinking. The reports by the superintendents of departments were gratifying and special work was done to increase the number of subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. The county officers for coming year are: President, Miss Ivey Fox, Ardoch; vice-president, Mrs. Alice B. Phelps, Grafton; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Dora Carpenter, Ardoch; recording secretary, Mrs. Gertie V. Titus, Minto; treasurer, Mrs. Bertha Farup, Park River. An interesting paper on non-alcoholics in medicine was read by Mrs. M. L. Wylie. Attorney-General Standish closed four saloons at Grafton on the second day of the convention, for which the women gave thanks.

W. C. T. U. women are all Prohibitionists in principle, but we sometimes seem to get confused as to our conditions and necessities. We have prohibition in our state constitution. It cannot by any process of law be repealed for a term of years. What we need is to have the law strictly enforced. Let us work to that end.

As superintendent of purity work, I have issued circulars with which I hope to reach every preacher in North Dakota without any regard to denomination, asking him to preach a sermon on purity during August. Let all the people pray while the preacher attempts to proclaim our Christ's holy truth. The glad day of holier living and higher conception of our relation to our Creator and to one another, dawns. Let us labor and pray and make ourselves fit temples for Christ to dwell in.

THOUGH their numbers are few, the W. C. T. U. of Ritchey, Mo., is thoroughly in earnest and is determined to drive the whisky traffic from its stronghold. Two temperance lectures have been given by the resident pastor and the other by the state evangelist, Mrs. Rebecca Hall. The two Demorest medal contests have been very successful. A prohibition club is also a part of the temperance forces of Ritchey.

The New Bread

As endorsed and recommended by the New-York Health Authorities.

Royal Unfermented Bread is peptic, palatable, most healthful, and may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort even by those of delicate digestion, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

To make One Loaf of Royal Unfermented Bread:

1 quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder,* cold boiled potato about the size of large hen's egg, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less, according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½ by 8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes' baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake immediately after mixing. Do not mix with milk.

 Perfect success can be had only with the Royal Baking Powder, because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.*

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and, as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly.

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

A NOTABLE STATE CONVENTION.

The ladies of the local W. C. T. U. of Puyallup deserve great credit for the pleasant state convention held in their city this summer, it being the tenth annual state convention of West Washington. The church was handsomely decorated. Frances Willard's picture was daintily draped and placed underneath the motto, "For God and Home and Every Land." Flowers were tastefully arranged about the church. The railroad time table changed just at this juncture making it impossible for many of the delegates to arrive in time for the morning session.

At the executive committee meeting the devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Etta Jones. Business was entered into with spirit by those present. Mrs. M. R. P. Johnson gave a report of the Seattle orphanage. Heads of departments were nominated, followed by a half hour of prayer led by Mrs. Beavers. During the afternoon session Mrs. M. A. Shaffer delivered her annual address which was not lengthy but was true to the spirit of the W. C. T. U. The corresponding secretary's report showed a steady advance all along the line. Mrs. Emma Barrett reported a grand work done among the sailors at Port Townsend. About thirty men have been converted in the gospel meetings held by the union of that port.

Chehalis, Clark, King and Island counties all gave good reports. A question box was placed on the table. Refreshments were served in the church dining room three times a day—breakfast, dinner and supper, giving a fine opportunity for sociability, visitors as well as delegates being welcome—such is western hospitality.

The evening session was opened by Mrs. Reese who spoke at some length of the Crusade, read the Crusade psalm, and all joined in singing the Crusade hymn. Mayor Hill, of Puyallup, welcomed the convention in a few well-chosen words. Rev. Mitchell, pastor of the church, welcomed the delegates and visitors in behalf of the clergy. "The sight of the convention fills me with enthusiasm," he said. "No great cause was ever carried on without enthusiasm, miscalled fanaticism. . . Martin Luther claimed the forty-sixth Psalm as his battle hymn in the great reformation. . . It will always remain an honor to women that they took the lead in this work, not because it was the fashion but with a great purpose." He paid a fine tribute to woman's work in the downfall of slavery and referred to a band of earnest women in Boston who met to consult together in regard to that great evil. The mayor of the city tried to dismiss their meeting saying they were endangering themselves by the course they were pursuing. The president of the little band arose and said, "If this is the bulwark of freedom we may as well die now as ever."

Mrs. Tallmage, of Puyallup, gave a very interesting address of welcome, taking up the work of prominent women through the ages and pointing to them as landmarks along the stream of time. Mrs. M. R. P. Johnson then made an appropriate reply to these cheering words of welcome. Mrs. Shaffer then introduced Mrs. Leavitt as the honorary life president of the World's W. C. T. U., and one whose name is heard in the prayers of all W. C. T. Unions. She made a fine address which was much appreciated.

Wednesday morning Mrs. Unruh, a fraternal delegate from Oregon, conducted a thankoffering service from Judges 9. Each union had been notified to bring a thankoffering in money for the blessings they had received the past year, with a Scripture text illustrative of their sentiments. Reports of heads of departments were next in order, some were very good but too many responded "no report." Dr. Frances Cady, of Kansas, and Isabella Kinmer, of North Dakota, were introduced. The Prohibition party of Lewis county sent greetings. Mrs. Stubbs, of Tacoma, one of the oldest evangelists on the Pacific coast, spoke to the convention.

Wednesday afternoon devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Beavers. Mrs. Reese gave a report of evangelistic work. Mrs. Stubbs reported work among sailors, saying she had labored for them for eighteen years past. A missionary had been the means of converting a number of heathen to Christianity, only to see his work overthrown by wicked sailors. She said her blood boiled with indignation to think that we had begun at the wrong end, for had we converted the sailors they would be missionaries to every port. A report on work among lumbermen, which presents a wide field in this state, was then read. Mrs. Etta Jones reported Sabbath observance, Mrs. D. W. Kennedy, social purity. Dr. Ella Fifield, of Tacoma, gave the reports for the White Shield Home and Maud K. Wilbon, the department of purity in literature and art.

Mrs. Hidden reported legislation and petition. She said no woman should be tried in the courts without a Christian woman by her side. E. E. Pierce read the report of the department of peace. The secretary, Mrs. Simison, read a report of work for the Temple. Mrs. Butler led in suggestions and discussion. The question box was well filled.

Wednesday evening Mrs. Wm. Butler led the devotions. Mrs. Reese was the first speaker, her subject being the Crusade, which she declared was not an unorganized movement, but was like a whirlwind from the Lord.

Mrs. Leavitt then took the platform and gave glowing pen pictures of her travels, of scenery, life and temperance in foreign lands. Mrs. Unruh, of Oregon, followed, making a short, spirited speech. She spoke of man's rights—one of which is a pure-souled, clean life and innocent lips. In visiting the schools she found the higher rooms swarming with girls, but boys were conspicuous by their absence. She went out and found the boys on the street lounging at street corners. She visited the reform school and found the reverse, there were seventy-nine boys and only nine girls.

Thursday morning Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden led the devotions. A number of amendments to the state constitution had been proposed a year ago, they were now put to vote. A report from the superintendent of literature was read showing many thousand pages had been reported, and there is always more done in that line than is ever told. The election of officers resulted as follows: president, Mrs. M. Shaffer; vice president, Mrs. Wm. Butler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Maud K. Welbon; recording secretary, Mrs. E. K. Simison; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Franc Lee; treasurer, Mrs. E. A. Saunders; auditor, Miss J. Tibbitts; organizer, Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden. A new department of work was created, that of song, and a superintendent appointed, and other business was disposed of.

Delegates to the National Convention were elected as follows: Mrs. Mattie Graves and Mrs. Eva Hunt; alternates, Mrs. Dr. Simons, and Mrs. Emma Barrett. It was moved and carried that we send our state treasurer, Mrs. E. A. Saunders, to the National Convention, and pay sixty dollars of her expenses. Two petitions were brought before the convention; one to the commissioners of the World's Fair to close the gates on the Sabbath, the other to our own state exhibit to close on the Sabbath. The petitions were acted upon and ordered sent forward. Stirring resolutions were passed.

A suffrage meeting was held on the last evening and notwithstanding many of the delegates had gone to their distant homes, and the fact that the remaining ones had been up two nights in succession, the house was crowded with an intelligent, appreciative audience. The evening opened with devotions led by Mrs. Beavers, and music by local talent exceptionally fine. Mrs. Shaffer said she had a number of written questions handed in on the subject of woman suffrage which she would like answered.

The first question was, "Who gave suffrage to the women of Washington?" Mr. Ezra Meeker, long a resident of the state, replied, saying: "The legislature voicing the wishes of the people, encouraged by the press, gave suffrage to the women of Washington. Only one church organization opposed it."

Second question: "Who deprived woman of this right?" Mr. John Meeker answered this question: "The loss lies with a political party, but whisky was behind the whole matter."

To the fourth question—"What are the practical results of woman suffrage where it has been given a trial?"—the response was: "In Utah women had suffrage but they stood strong for polygamy, and those women are not free. 'The voice of the people is the voice of God.' The Mormon women are not free. Wyoming women have the ballot and are free. There the voice of the people is the voice of God. In Kansas the women voted on schools as their husbands told them, but they were not quite free; now they have municipal freedom and all is changed."

Fifth question: "Is this statement of Dr. Buckley's true that the women of Washington were not interested in voting when they had the right?" To this Mr. Meeker said: "That is not true, for local option won because of the women voters."

Good music followed these answers of which I have only given a few sentences. Mrs. Clarke next spoke from a Bible standpoint. Christ said man and woman were equal, all the Mosaic laws were equal to men and women and as much was expected of one as the other.

Mrs. Hidden was the next to address the audience. She said this should be called the woman's year instead of Columbian year.

Mrs. Le Fevre made a few remarks, Mayor Hill sang "The Public Cradle" and Mrs. Beavers read an original poem entitled "Columbia." Mrs. Tallmage of Puyallup is a fluent speaker and despite the lateness of the hour was listened to with great interest. She says she was educated equally with her brother but when both taught school he received double the wages that she did.

The ladies of the convention were invited to visit the White Shield Home in Tacoma the following day. As many unions have furnished each a room in the home they felt an added interest in seeing it and quite a company took advantage of the occasion.

SOUTH CAROLINA DOTS.

We read in the Bible of the prophet whom the ravens served with a meal that strengthened him for a forty days' fast, so we came from our annual meeting with our faith increased ready for the trials that awaited us. The famous dispensary law is upon us and every one has to think for himself on which side to stand. Temperance people were divided, some favoring the law because it would close the barrooms and thinking it a step toward prohibition. Others believed it wrong to make a compromise of any kind; if selling liquor was wrong it was wrong every way; as wrong for the state as for the individual.

Great excitement has been created by this dispensary law. God alone can bring good out of it all. In His wise, loving hands we lay the tangled web trusting all to Him. The W. C. T. U. are not all of one mind about this law, but it is a part of our creed, you know, to agree to disagree. The dispensary law is none of our work; the men made it and the men must fight its battles.

The Charleston unions are all alive and at work; they were never better attended. Union number one conducts the home, paying a rental of forty dollars per month, besides giving assistance to the constant application of strangers for lodging, food and clothes.

A committee from this union visits and holds a service at the almshouse every week, always taking with them papers, magazines and dainties. The hospital is visited in the same way weekly. Gospel meetings are held every Sunday in the chapel at the home, and the ladies have secured admittance into the drink cure, recently established in Charleston, for two inebriate physicians. House to-house visiting among the poor is strictly attended to.

Union number two has gospel meetings three times a week. Jail and cottage meetings are held on Thursday evenings. The Y's meet with them and hold parlor meetings with readings, music and recitations, attended by the honoraries.

At one of the meetings of union one, a bar-keeper's wife, who had herself sold liquor, was present. She said she "came to find out when Mrs. Chapin was going to close the bar-rooms, for everybody knew that she was the ringleader for years before Tillman thought of it." She stayed to the meeting and claims to have been converted in it by a Bible reading from Mrs. Chapin. She joined the society, paid her dues and has attended church ever since.

The Y's of Charleston gave a Demorest contest, July 14. The medal was won by Pearl Smith. The speaking was excellent. They are now getting up some charades.

Newberry L. T. L. numbers one hundred and thirty. They meet every Tuesday. The order of exercises is so varied that the children do not get wearied. They are well taught in the temperance catechisms. Mrs. Redus, the president, reads an extract from some lecture on temperance, then appoints two girls or boys to prepare a short essay for the next meeting.

Mr. Geo. S. Mower has nobly taken up the expenses of the Legion. He fitted up and furnished their temperance hall, which is tastefully decorated with fine paintings. A large portrait of his mother hangs where it faces the children, and looks on them in such a natural manner that it almost seems as if she was present.

They have a distributing library, numbering about one hundred volumes. They keep each year a Mower memorial day, at which time they have appropriate recitations and songs and an address from some minister. So the memory of this true and faithful sister is not to die, but she, "being dead, yet liveth." Mrs. Redus, their present beloved president, is spending the summer in Maine.

Miss Ellen Murray, the tireless superintendent of colored work, reports an Independent temperance society, numbering one hundred and fifty, in Cheraw, called the Shiloh Lodge No. 3. At Frogmore, Miss Murray writes, the worst enemy of temperance was a colored woman who sold rum. At her death her daughter was asked if she was going to continue her mother's business; she answered: "No, indeed. I do not want to have all the union women praying against me." One elderly woman was very ill; the doctor ordered wine or whisky, but she steadily refused to take them; she said: "I want to wear my white ribbon in my coffin for the Lord to see. I ain't a-going to break my pledge." She recovered and was welcomed back to the union with great enthusiasm.

The union women voted not to go into the "liquor store" (the dispensary) at all unless unavoidable, and in that case to give the reason of their going to the union. This has had the effect of keeping all respectable women out of the place. They still hold monthly meetings of the Loyal League or young people, and union meetings every fortnight. They hold Demorest contests.

OHIO.

Y'S IN COUNCIL.

The Y. W. C. T. Unions of Southern Ohio met in annual conference at Wilmington, July 13 and 14. Miss Frances H. Ensign, state superintendent of the Young Woman's Branch, presided with unusual ability. Indeed, one has seldom the privilege of seeing so young a woman conduct a convention with such dignity and success. The session opened at two o'clock on Thursday afternoon, and closed with the evening meeting on Friday. In opening the conference Miss Ensign took her keynote from the Word of God, and followed it with an exhortation to earnestness of purpose and faithfulness to duty. Her words were very impressive.

Addresses of welcome were given by Miss Rida Brann, in behalf of the Wilmington Y, and by Rev. J. O. Pierce, pastor of the Presbyterian church, in which the conference was held. The response was given by a London Y. One of the most attractive and helpful features of the program was a parliamentary drill by Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel, of Columbus, our state parliamentarian.

On Thursday evening a reception was given to the delegates and their hostesses in the Y parlors. A choice program was rendered, consisting of piano, violin and vocal music and several selections by the mandolin club of Wilmington. Miss Nellie Brown, from the Emerson School of Oratory, of Boston, now teacher of elocution in the Ohio Wesleyan University, added greatly to the pleasure of the evening by her charming recitations. A nice collation was served, and was followed by a real social feast.

Friday morning, after devotional exercises, was given to five-minute reports from the auxiliary unions. Many of these were most interesting and well delivered. Miss Ensign showed much tact in calling the attention of the delegates to the strong points and helpful suggestions of each, asking them to take notes for the benefit of their unions. In the afternoon an excellent paper on "Social Purity," by Miss Ida Robbins, of Jackson, was read. A question-box, conducted by Mrs. Bethel, brought out many practical features of the work, and added spice to the program.

Miss Sara E. Coates, of Portsmouth, a graduate of Vassar College, spoke on "Physical Culture as a Part of Y Work," and with a class of young ladies from Zanesville, whom she had trained, illustrated it with a fine dumb-bell drill.

Miss Ensign presented the interests of the Oak and Ivy Leaf, THE UNION SIGNAL, and Ohio Messenger and of the Y literature, also emphasized the necessity for the prompt payment of dues, and all other financial obligations.

Friday evening vocal solos were given by some of the best talent of Wilmington, and selections by the Mandolin Club. Miss Nellie Brown again delighted the audience with her fine recitations. Miss Ensign gave the address of the evening, which was entertaining and inspiring, and formed a fitting close to an excellent convention. The Wilmington Y's had omitted no effort that could add to the comfort and pleasure of their guests, and the entire meeting seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed.

One great disappointment, however, came to the conference at its opening. Word was received that, by reason of sickness, our state president, Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe, of Xenia, and her daughter, Miss Henrietta, formerly our state recording secretary, would be unable to be present. Mrs. Monroe was to have given the address of the second evening, and was on the program for other important duties. Only those who know her helpfulness in such meetings can estimate the loss the conference sustained. But, with the tact so characteristic of her, Miss Ensign marshalled the forces at hand and suffered not the interest to lag.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The annual meeting of the Belmont county W. C. T. U. was held at Colerain, June 22, in the new headquarters recently erected by that union. Mrs. Mary T. Springer, of Bridgeport, presided. The convention opened with the singing of the doxology, followed by Scripture reading and prayer. After the regular meeting, a Bible reading and address was given by Mrs. Hester Wilson, of South Bellaire, superintendent of evangelistic work. An excellent dinner was served. At the opening of the afternoon meeting, the committee on resolutions brought in a ringing report on suffrage and social purity, which closed with an expression of the sincere appreciation of the long and devoted services of Mrs. Anna E. Albert, the county president. Miss Lilian Turner presented a beautiful banner to the Colerain union, which was received with a rising vote of thanks.

The address of welcome and response evidenced much thought on leading topics. In the absence of the president her address was read by Mrs. Henthorne. An excellent paper on "Christian Politics" was read by Mrs. Alice Kirk, and was directed to be placed in the hands of the press superintendent. Mrs. Colyer, of South Bellaire, conducted a parliamentary drill. Mrs. Dora Webb, state superintendent of social purity, spoke on the work of her department. Mrs. Webb is known throughout our organization as a most courageous woman, strong in her convictions, practical in her methods.

Reports from local unions showed that the work deepens in interest. A volunteer choir of young ladies and one gentleman added brightness to the program. The evening exercises consisted of an entertainment of music and recitations.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Franklin county held its annual school of methods at Flint. Despite heavy clouds and pouring rain most of the unions in the county were represented. Fifty pupils were enrolled. The papers were every one good and showed much earnest thought. The discussions following each paper were spirited and several were quite witty. In short, everything passed off happily. Dr. Anna H. Shaw delivered her address, "Fate of Republics," to a crowded house.

On flower mission day Franklin county united with the other counties of the district and distributed flowers in the Columbus institutions. Though they had a large quantity of beautiful flowers four times as many could have been used. Much valuable literature was also distributed.

The Logan county annual meeting was held at Zanesville and is reported an interesting convention. The one motive drawing those present together was to advance the temperance cause. The burden of every prayer was that the war against the saloon might soon be victorious. Love for each other was manifested, and above all, love for Christ and a desire for the advancement of His kingdom. The convention was favored by the presence of the state president, Mrs. Monroe, which added greatly to the interest of the meetings. "Christ in our Work," was the theme of her evening lecture. She showed how He is the center of every department of our work, sending out His light and truth.

In the resolutions all Christians were urged to withhold patronage from the World's Fair unless it shall be closed on the Sabbath.

The thirteenth district W. C. T. U. met in annual convention at Mt. Gilead. The devotional exercises invoked God's blessing upon the convention and for His direction. Words of welcome were spoken by Mrs. Wood and by Rev. Frazer, pastor of the Presbyterian church, in which the convention was held. Responses were given by Mrs. Eggleston, president of Licking county, Mrs. Meeker, of Morrow county, Mrs. Smith, of Delaware and Miss Plummer, of Knox. The noontide prayer was offered by Mrs. Trego, the district president, in which loving mention was made of our state and National leaders, and all hearts joined in the petition that health and strength be restored to our National and World's leader.

The Denver National Convention was reported by Mrs. J. M. Graham, who in strong, clear voice brought us face to face with that grand gathering. Mrs. Graham is district superintendent of Temple work and has done much in arousing interest in that enterprise. She gives a lecture on Alaska, one-half the proceeds of which are given to the union employing her and one-half to the Temple. The Mt. Gilead union has done good work in its first year and promises well for the future. The entertainment extended by them was most cordial. A large audience assembled in the evening to hear Dr. Anna H. Shaw. The entire convention was one of inspiration and helpfulness. It was a miniature state convention.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins is spending the summer at her own home in Cleveland. July 9th she gave an address to the prisoners at the work-house. The 10th and 11th she was at Lakeside to present her department of state work. She gave an address, "What a temperance woman found in the Ohio infirmaries," on the afternoon of the 11th at the W. C. T. U. chapel. This temperance home, now the property of the state W. C. T. U., is as neat and clean as willing hands can make it. Miss Florence Savage and her sister hold the fort and make the guests very comfortable.

Ohio's interest in her newly furnished room in the National Temperance Hospital still continues. An iron bedstead with enameled brass trimmings with all the furnishings belonging to the bed, an oak dresser, commode, two chairs, a small wardrobe and a lovely carpet have been bought. A toilet set, tray, napkins and dishes will soon be added. A pretty pin-cushion in white and yellow and white linen table covers with the word Ohio embroidered in yellow have been donated. Other friends sent a handsome volume of poems, a dusting bag with duster in it and a beautiful sofa pillow. Those wishing to contribute to this line of our work can send their offerings directly to Mrs. H. L. Monroe, Xenia.

INDIAN TERRITORY ITEMS.

At our last territorial election the old officers were reëlected. I was not present and have hoped to obtain the results of the meeting but being unable to do so must account for the lack of "news from the field."

Here in Muscogee we are holding steadily and perseveringly on. We have no open saloons now and we seldom see a person intoxicated on our streets. Still our jail has a large number of "introducers" among its "regular boarders," and it is only too evident that the "introductions" have not been in vain.

Our school closed in June with a Demorest medal contest and we were all proud of our boys and girls too; for girls have been admitted to the W. C. T. U. school the last year; we enrolled ninety-eight, of whom thirty-six were free.

We had our Band of Hope meet after school; but when school closed we changed from Tuesday to Sunday afternoon and we are glad to report an increased interest among the boys and girls of the ages that are so hard to keep in such an organization, —from twelve to eighteen years. The reading room is open Sundays. We serve ice cream in the W. C. T. U. rooms every Friday evening. Some interest is awakened at these socials.

We asked the pastors to unite in a monthly mass-meeting. One declined and so we have not had any.

The Tahlequah union has been able to hold these mass-meetings and they are well attended and the interest is sustained.

Atoka is alive with a flourishing Band of Hope. A good interest is felt at Vinita. They have a reading room.

Several cures were accomplished by the drink cure while it remained. They left for want of patients, as ours is a prohibition town.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MRS. MARY T. LATHRAP left Hackley Park, Mich., August 10, on an eastern trip, during which she will viist some summer assemblies.

MRS. MARION B. BAXTER, of Michigan, has just closed a series of lectures at Bluffton, O., under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The meetings have been highly interesting and largely attended. All have been greatly benefited by these lectures and it is hoped that much good may result therefrom.

MRS. MARY WOODBRIDGE, secretary of World's and National W. C. T. U., desires to have it known that she severed her connection with the Woman's Baking Company last June, a fact which does not seem to be clearly understood by her correspondents. Since that time Mrs. Woodbridge has been an invalid at her home in Ravenna, O. Her health is now improving and as soon as she becomes well she will devote her time entirely to work in the temperance field.

MARY T. LATHRAP hall at Hackley Park, the new Michigan summer assembly, was successfully opened July 27–August 6. The W. C. T. U. school of methods was held under the presidency of Mrs. Lathrap, a ripe and overflowing program being carried out. Among the workers present at the opening were Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, whose topics were on parliamentary usages; Mrs. Jennie Voorhies, Mrs. Julia Stannard, Mrs. Julia R. Parrish and Mrs. Caroline Humphrey, who gave addresses; Prof. Samuel Dickey, who spoke in the W. C. T. U. auditorium Tuesday morning; Mrs. Emma H. May, with studies in finance; Mrs. M. M. Maybee, who gave lectures and Bible readings; Mrs. L. F. Moorehouse, who led the discussion on model union work; Mrs. M. M. Weeks, who conducted children's meetings, and Mrs. Georgia F. Merrill, representing the work of the Young Woman's branch.

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE
TO YOUR ADDRESS
Two Years for $1.
The regular price of the St. Louis Magazine is $1.50 a year, but in offering it to you at $1 for two years (which is less than cost) we hope to in that time get you so interested in our Monthly that you will continue taking the Magazine always. The loss to us in sending it to you two years for $1 we consider as so much money spent in advertising our Magazine and creating a permanent and enormously increased circulation. Hence if the monthly visits of the St. Louis Magazine to your family for two years are made, we flatter ourselves you will become a permanent subscriber. Send along your dollar and receive the St. Louis Magazine for two full years. If you desire a late sample copy, send 10c for one and also receive an

THE CALL TO PRAYER.

The officers of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, having issued a call for the Conventions commencing in the city of Chicago, October 16, 1893, the evangelistic superintendent of these organizations would emphasize a

CALL TO PRAYER INDIVIDUAL AND PUBLIC.

Sunday, October 1, let us as individual white-ribboners throughout the Nation and the world "enter into the closet and shut the door," that in the secret place of communion and power, we may confess our individual sins, seek afresh the anointing of the Divine Spirit, and wait in the stillness until assured that the promise has been fulfilled. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

Special effort should be made by our unions to secure public temperance services during this first Sunday in October. Let us write pastors to preach upon temperance, and hold union meetings, or mass-meetings in the interests of our great cause.

THE WHITE RIBBON PRAYER MEETING.

On the Saturday previous, September 30, let our unions, as far as possible, spend the day in prayer. We suggest the following program which may be altered to meet local needs, or condensed into a brief service:

PROGRAM.

From 11 to 12 a. m.

I. United prayer for an Individual Anointing of the Holy Spirit. For His office work in cleansing, quickening, comforting, guiding, etc. Read of these offices in St. John's Gospel.

II. Prayer for our Homes. That we may manifest, by daily living, the gospel we profess and teach outside, and that all in our households may be won for Christ and the temperance cause.

III. Prayer for the Church—That her perfected machinery may be vitalized afresh by the baptism of the Spirit. That she may awaken to her great mission to manifest the love of God and the brotherhood of man; be endued with an enthusiasm for humanity, "put on her beautiful garments," and go forth to the masses now alienated and to the heathen at home and abroad.

From 12 to 1 p. m.

Social hour with simple refreshments.

From 1 to 2 p. m.

I. Prayer for our Temperance Work throughout the World—The enlargement of our borders; increase of our membership, and the forgiveness of our many mistakes and failures.

II. Special prayer for our coming conventions and the city where we meet—That Divine wisdom may be granted us; love and harmony prevail; self be lost in the great cause, and a blessing result which shall renew our zeal and courage and be felt in all our unions.

From 2 to 3 p. m.

Prayer for our Nation and the world, confession of national sins, prayer for the overthrow of the liquor traffic, the opium trade and social impurity, and the reign of purity and truth in our hearts, homes, society and governments, "That His kingdom may come and His will be done on earth."

Notes: Leaders should change each hour, and Scripture selections and hymns be adapted to the topic.

While in some localities but one hour's service may be possible, let us wherever practicable, consecrate these two days to prayer. "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding, abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us. Unto Him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, world without end, amen." ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD,

Supt. Evangelistic Department World's and National W. C. T. U.

Our Library Table.

ART, MUSIC AND NATURE is the title of a tasteful gift-book containing selections from the writings of David Swing.

Searle & Gorton, Chicago.

BRILLIANTS selected from the writings of Henry C. Potter, D. D., LL.D., by Alice L. Williams. This is a gift-book made beautiful by its artistic decorations in the shape of sketches of nature, land and sea, and made practical by the wholesome Christian truths found within its pages.

Published by Samuel E. Cassino, Boston.

An interesting pamphlet is one containing the TEN COMMANDMENTS IN ANCIENT AND MODERN TONGUES. Some of these are the Arabic, Armenian, Bengali, Bohemian, Bulgarian, Chinese, Danish, Ancient Greek, Hebrew, Irish, Italian, etc. In the same book is also contained the Lord's prayer in fourteen languages.

Compiled by T. B. Khungian and A. B. Sehan, A. B., Chicago Theological Seminary.

THE CRUSADER IN GREAT BRITAIN, by "Mother Stewart." No white-ribboner needs to be told who Mother Stewart is, and all will be glad to know that the above book, which is a reliable history of the origin and organization of the British Women's Temperance Association, is almost ready for the public. It will be a volume of over four hundred pages, and bound in cloth.

Address orders to Miss M. Campbell, publisher, Springfield, Ohio.

THE RED MAN'S GREETING, by Chief Pokagon, a Pottawattamie chief, is a booklet made of the bark of the white birch tree, and printed thereon a sorrowful requiem for the vanished glory of the Red Man, a passionate protest against the fire-water which they knew only through their white brothers after "Columbus discovered America" and a bitter prophecy of the punishment that yet awaits in the "Happy Hunting Grounds," the white men whose injustice to the Indian has made him so much grief. The old chief is sixty-three years of age, well educated, and the publication of this booklet is to help his people.

C. H. Engle, publisher, Hartford, Mich.

A pamphlet that will meet with a wide reading by members of the W. C. T. U. and its friends is one recently prepared by Sho Nemoto, and which contains the telegraphic communications and correspondence in Japan relative to Miss Mary Allen West's sickness and death and funeral. Sho Nemoto has translated these from Japanese to English and they contain many beautiful and touching passages. In the same pamphlet is also printed Miss West's most popular and effective address on CITIZENSHIP, interpreted by Rev. S. Ogata. The translator says: "When she delivered this at Shiba Church, Tokyo, Japan, the house was packed with two thousand people."

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago.

TREASURED THOUGHTS GLEANED FROM THE FIELDS OF LITERATURE, by F. V. Irish, is a book that will find a niche of usefulness on the desks of many teachers. Its contents are not voluminous, but sound, pure and very suggestive. The writer is evidently an ardent lover of the best literature and his aim in presenting these TREASURED THOUGHTS to the public is to sow the seeds of a good habit—that of storing a young mind with gems of high and bright thought. The book contains selections from standard writers, and a list of books which may be safely placed in the hands of children and young people. Parents as well as teachers may be glad of this work as a help to them in training the eager and hungry minds under their charge.

Published by the author, Columbus, O.

WOMEN AND WOMEN'S WORK IN FINLAND. This little volume of seventy-five pages was prepared by the "Unionen Alliance for the cause of Women in Finland," for presentation at the World's Congresses held in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition. It is a thorough résumé of woman's condition in this far-off land, its table of contents showing such headings as the following: Position of Finnish Women According to the Laws, and According to Custom; Education of Girls at Home and in Elementary Schools; Coeducation in some Municipal Schools; Women in Hygiene, Philanthropic Work, Social Purity, Temperance, Women in Government Service, etc., etc. In regard to the subject of temperance, the following statement may be of interest: "There are at present about two hundred total abstinence societies in Finland, with about eleven thousand members, one-third of them women."

COMMON FOLKS' RELIGION. A volume of sermons and addresses by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D. Published by Lee & Shepard, 10 Milk street, Boston.

These sermons and addresses have been stenographically reported and appeal to the reader with telling freshness and force. True religion exists for rich and poor alike; it is the privilege of the common people, its richest experiences attainable by the common people and its profoundest truths and deepest comforts are for the common people. Hence, Dr. Banks' title is a "taking" one and his words are worth their weight in gold. Miss Willard has said of him: "He is the latest illustration of St. George and the Dragon, in his onslaught on the sins of cities. He is a knight of Christ's Gospel Chivalry, and all the lances that he tilts are shafts of brotherly love."

AMANDA SMITH'S OWN STORY is the title of a book recently issued by Messrs. Meyer & Brother, 108 Washington street, Chicago. The title page tells in brief the contents of this book which will be eagerly read by thousands of Mrs. Smith's friends in this and other countries: "The story of the Lord's dealings with Mrs. Amanda Smith, the colored evangelist, containing an account of her life work of faith and her travels in America, England, Ireland, Scotland, India and Africa, as an independent missionary." In this autobiography Mrs. Smith has "stuck to her text" most unwaveringly, causing every detail of the narrative to center about the fact of the Lord's care and guidance in her wonderful life. Many who read the story—and it is a thrilling one—will read it with grateful hearts that through Mrs. Smith's faithful words and works they were led to the cross of Christ. The book contains an excellent picture of Mrs. Smith, with several other illustrations. The reading matter covers over five hundred pages.

The World's Columbian Exposition is too stupendous a creation to be "seen" in a few desultory and unprepared-for visits. It needs—to render the visitor the best reward for his time and money—careful study and deliberate planning. Many a treasure will be undiscovered without a reliable guide. Living guides, even when well paid, become tired or careless, and even a Columbian Guard finds an end to his information. There is nothing quite so good as a good guide-book and Messrs. Rand, McNally & Co. have supplied such an one, called the HANDBOOK OF THE WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. It contains, in excellent form, nearly everything the sojourner could possibly wish information about, with pictures of the buildings, maps of the grounds, expenses, lists of accommodations, etc., etc. It is poor economy to "save" by denying one's self that which will add to the comfort and intelligence with which one sees the Fair, as the possession of the volume in question undoubtedly will.

Rand, McNally & Co., publishers, Chicago.

BRADDOCK; A STORY OF THE FRENCH AND INDIAN WARS. Vol. VIII. The Columbian Historical Novels. By John R. Musick.

Between the covers of this lively historical novel are given all the principal events in the history of our country from the year 1700 to 1760, a period which includes the struggle between the English and the French for supremacy in the New World. This struggle was the school in which the hardy colonists were educated in self-reliance, courage and fortitude, and in which the belittled provincial soldiers were for the first time brought into comparison with the British regulars, which comparison was favorable to the Americans. It was during this period that George Washington first came upon the stage of American history, and we accordingly read a most interesting account of his boyhood, his first love affair, which, happily, was a failure, the beginning of his famous military record, etc. The main interest of the period centers about the Braddock campaign, the story of which is admirably told, and from which the book derives its title. Notable among the chapters of the volume is one entitled "The Debtor's Prison," an English institution of oppression and misery, from the emancipated inmates of which the colony (now the state) of Georgia was originally founded in 1733. The romance of the volume is cleverly wrought out, and the Stevens family, whose lineage is traced in the previous volumes of the series of Columbian Historical Novels, from the time of Columbus, is well represented. Great care has been exercised to distinguish fact from fiction, and the fiction is so arranged as to aid the reader in comprehending the facts, and this he cannot fail to do.

The book combines education with romance in such a way that it proves both instructive and impressive. It is liberally illustrated, has a good historical index, and supplies interesting reading for the young or old of either sex.

WHAT IS OPPORTUNITY?

You have heard of the sluggard who lay dreaming his days away when suddenly a beautiful vision appeared, and beckoned him to follow her to fame and fortune, but he still lay dreaming until the vision commenced to fade away; then he awoke and cried, "Stop; who art thou?" and as the vision disappeared from view, replied, "I am Opportunity; once neglected I never return."

YOUNG CRUSADER FOR AUGUST.

The Young Crusader for August has a feast of good things for the children. On the first page is a reproduction of the Children's Building, with a description by Miss Guernsey so realistic that it is almost like seeing with one's own eyes. You can imagine as you read the spirited boys of the gymnastic class exercising with their musical dumb bells, playing leap frog over the vaulting bars, climbing poles and ladders, and swinging from suspended rings.

You cannot so easily imagine the wee babies in the nursery, for you have never seen so many bright eyes and sweet faces together, but you can read all about them in Miss Guernsey's article.

The Editorial Notes will tell you what has been done with the pledge cards, and the fountain, and you must not omit to look at page 3, and read the thrilling story of Ma-ne-ha, a true tale of a wild Indian boy.

One copy 15c. per annum.

ADVANCE GUARD FOR AUGUST.

We call special attention to the serial, "The Tables Turned," begun in the last number of The Advance Guard. Its topic, of an equal standard of purity and temperance for young men and young women, is one in which all our readers are interested, and on which they have opinions of their own. The first chapter introduced us to the girls, while this month we have a no less clever sketch of a boys' club. The two sets of young people are carried along together, and in scenes that are true to life. The author has woven into the story the breeziness and strength of the far western mountains around her home, its warp being an "ower true tale" of her own girlhood.

Price of The Advance Guard is only 50 cents per annum.

The August number of the Oak and Ivy Leaf contains a helpful symposium on the topic, "How to coöperate with kindred societies." Send in your subscription to the Oak and Ivy Leaf if it has expired and get this number.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight 'to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

THE QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Sunday, September 17.

Subject: Personal Responsibility.

Some of its Question Hints:

"How did God make even Paul's chains help to the gospel?

"Was it a sin for the weak Christians to eat the meat spoken of here?

"How would the spirit of this lesson lead us to conduct ourselves at home? at school? to all those who need our help? to animals?

"If the spirit of this lesson were carried out, how would it affect the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages? the labor troubles?"

Signal Notes.

TEN thousand churches were built in America last year.

IN Corea a man is a boy until he marries, even if he is one hundred years old.

THE wine cellar of the House of Commons can hold over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of wine.

THE government owns and operates the telegraph and telephone lines of Switzerland at an annual profit of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

THE total number of suicides in France and Algeria for 1891 was eight thousand one hundred and eighty, seventy-eight per cent of whom were men.

IN consequence of the increased employment of Turkish women as school-mistresses in girls' schools, the Porte has decreed the formation of a normal school for girls in Constantinople.

ANY one wishing to start another newspaper might well be discouraged by the fact that there are already nineteen thousand five hundred and seventy-three printed in the United States and Canada.

THE extra work entailed on English barmaids during public holidays was shown in the recent wedding celebration in London when they were kept busy from seven on Thursday morning to two on Friday morning.

THE city of London proper has no park within its borders, but it has under its control Epping Forest, which consists of nearly nine square miles of unbroken woodland, forming one of the largest pleasure grounds in the world.

THE Anti-Saloon League is the name of a new organization in Washington, D. C., to carry on work against the liquor traffic. Any church, temperance or charitable society desiring to participate is entitled to two delegates.

"A BUSHEL of corn makes four gallons of whisky, which retails for $16. Out of this the government gets $3, the railroads $1, the manufacturer $4, the vender $7, the farmer forty cents and the drinker gets the delirium tremens."

THE latest official statistics of the Salvation Army show that their work is established in twenty-three countries, in twenty-one different languages, and has forty newspapers with an annual circulation of forty-three million copies.

THE Indian Witness well says that it is exasperating that a few men, for the sake of the profit on liquor, should be able to bring national disgrace on countries for whose enlightenment the Christian world is now making such costly sacrifices.

AN appeal signed by ministers, noblemen and others has been sent Mr. Moody, asking him to go to London to engage in evangelistic services. This, however, he declines to do, but will engage in active labors in the home land during the coming winter.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE, Kentucky, was chartered in 1829, but it was not until 1893, after twenty-four years of earnest endeavor on his part that J. J. Rucker, LL.D., its president, and a friend of woman's cause, was enabled to present on the same platform the diplomas to twelve young men and seven young ladies, conferring the same degrees for the same kind and amount of work. In connection with this fact the record is that "a young lady received the highest standing of the class."

NEARLY every man or woman advocating some special phase of the temperance form thinks that his or her method is the one. Perhaps this is emphatically true of those who stand for temperance education in schools, and the warm friends of this department will be glad to know that the St. Louis Hygienic College of Physicians and Surgeons teaches non-alcoholic medication. When colleges swing into line with public schools and churches and Sunday-schools join the ranks of those who systematically teach temperance, how great will be the bombardment against the walls of the saloon, the school of the inebriate and his children.

C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

August 25 was colored people's day at the World's Fair.

A conference of American rabbis met at Chicago last week.

The amendments to the Home Rule Bill have all been carried.

Toronto again voted for no Sunday street cars on August 26.

Over one million persons paid admission to the World's Fair last week.

Numbers of the striking miners in South Wales are returning to work.

Siam has paid the three million francs demanded as indemnity by France.

News of strikes and small riots comes from various parts of the United States.

Illinois day was celebrated at the World's Fair August 24 by an attendance of 243,000 people.

The debate on the silver question ended in the United States House of Representatives, Monday.

A permanent relief committee has been appointed to provide help for the unemployed in Chicago.

A severe and wide-spread storm passed over New England last Thursday, causing great damage to life and property.

A serious fire occurred in the South Chicago district last Thursday afternoon by which one hundred and fifty dwellings were burned.

The actor, M. B. Curtis, on trial for alleged murder of a police officer in San Francisco, in 1891, was acquitted on his third trial, August 25.

Hundreds of home-seekers are encamped on the borders of the "promised land"—the Cherokee strip, which is to be opened for settlement September 16.

Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha has passed away and his nephew the Duke of Edinburgh, son of Queen Victoria, has succeeded to the duchy.

The annual Austrian estimates of the harvests of the world, issued August 28, show a large deficit in grain products in nearly all the European countries. Russia's surplus wheat product will amount to 97,893,000 bushels, while that of the United States is stated to be 69,518,000 bushels.

WHICH group will legislate for and protect the homes of Chicago best, ten thousand average men or ten thousand average women? What right have the men to legislate for the women? Would the women use their earnings to gratify their appetites rather than to give food, clothing and shelter to their children? This is not meant as a criticism upon men in general, but upon the men in particular who form the city council in Chicago and other great centers of population.

"SCIENCE will one day emphasize more and more the measureless power of environment, as a modifier of unfortunate heredity, and the possibility of correcting ante-natal biases by post-natal discipline." We would place beside the above quotation from the pen of J. Lloyd Jones, the ancient doctrine, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The old Bible puts in simple fashion a truth which is in modern days getting a strong grip upon the thinking women of the W. C. T. U., and ever crystallizing into blessed activity through that branch of their work known as the department for securing homes for homeless children. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Feed my lambs."

ELECTRICITY is destined to solve many a problem for the sociologist. More than any other agent will it be instrumental in bringing country and city in closer touch. Electrical appliances will so lessen the drudgery of both field and household labor and so improve the social conditions of agricultural communities that the farmer's sons and daughters will have no cause to envy their city cousins or to bemoan the lack of "advantages," while on the other hand the constantly increasing facilities for rapid transit are making it possible for the wage-worker in factory and shop to take his well-earned night's repose and his Sunday rest beneath his own vine and fig-tree. Truly electricity seems to be the weapon by which man is to gain dominion over all things earthly.

THE weekly noon gathering in Willard Hall is perhaps the largest of its kind held in Chicago, and numbers and interest have been remarkably well sustained throughout the past week. Of a necessity the audiences are mainly of a "floating" character, yet are easily divisible into three classes: A small but faithful corps of regular attendants among whom are resident white-ribboners, business men and women, ministers, and mission workers, on whose hands rest the responsibility of answering the many calls for help; an enthusiastic, ever-changing procession of white-ribbon pilgrims to this Mecca of the temperance reform; last, and least in numbers, though not in importance, those who enter the quiet place of prayer in pursuit of help—spiritual and temporal. It needs patience and love and wisdom to meet each one of these but the workers are faithful and there are daily words of thankfulness for benefits received—the chiefest benefit of all being the offer and acceptance of salvation. The most distinguished leader of the week was Mrs. Margaret Parker of Scotland, who is spending the summer in Chicago.

THE horrors of savagery were enacted in the civilized (?) Midway Plaisance of the World's Fair last week. Two Indian chiefs, both of whom were in the famous battle of Wounded Knee, concluded they would see the sights of Chicago. Among the sights, although it was Sunday, were the eight thousand saloons of the city. The law forbids the selling of liquor to Indians, but what care Chicago saloons for law, when they know that the law-makers as well as the law-breakers are on their side? These two Indians, Chief Bear and Chief Pettibone by name, drank firewater all night, and by the time they reached their wigwams on the Plaisance, they were savages more to be feared than in their native state. They beat each other over the head until they were nearly dead, and finally, one seeing his advantage over the other, drew his bowie knife from his belt and scalped his victim. The daily papers reported the diabolical event in all its horrible details, but with no more comment upon the occasion of it than if it were part of the daily program at the World's Fair. Talk about the wild Indian and the blessings which civilization has brought him! We know of no feature of civilization that can offset the liquor curse which the white man has entailed upon him.

AN interesting event in university settlement circles last week was the opening of the New England kitchen and café by the Hull House women's club of Chicago. This kitchen is operated on the most scientific principles, the apparatus for cooking being steam, gas and the Aladdin oven. Although the fitting is costly, the operation itself is economical, and has besides the excellent advantages of cleanliness and preservation of the nutritive elements of the food. The object of this kitchen is to furnish well-cooked and wholesome food to the families of the neighborhood at very reasonable prices, lower than they can be prepared at home, even in the most indifferent manner. For instance, delicious soup, cooked in double jacket steam kettles, is furnished at ten cents a quart and mutton stew at ten cents a pound. The café furnishes an attractive variety of fare at low rates and we were glad to see that fruits and milk were cheaper than meats and coffee. We doubt not that this Chicago branch of the New England kitchen will meet with deserved success and that there will be many more copies of the original in Boston before this century closes.

THE following press notices regarding narcotics emphasize the need of this department of W. C. T. U. work: "Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, has eight hundred cigarette factories and two hundred and seven tobacco warehouses." "A St. Louis, Mo., judge placed the cigarette habit among the valid causes for divorce. The wife of a St. Louis physician sued for a divorce, alleging several grounds, but not until she proved her husband was a cigarette smoker did she win her cause. This fact established, the judge then granted the divorce." "A man in Elizabeth, N. J., became insane from the use of cigarettes; these he made himself from very strong tobacco, thus showing that the cigarette when not adulterated, is very injurious." "A St. Louis young man, crazed by the use of cigarettes, shot and almost fatally wounded his sweetheart, then killed himself." "A prominent Populist candidate for Congress in the state of Nebraska died from the use of morphine." "A seventeen-year-old young lady was found by her parents in an opium joint in New York City."

THE crowded state of the Hall of Washington last week was a surprise to everybody who has not kept up with the advances of psychical science. Dr. Elliott Coues, of the Smithsonian Institute, was chairman of the congress, and valuable papers were presented from the most distinguished investigators in this field from Europe and America, among them Alfred Russell Wallace, the great co-worker with Darwin, F. W. B. Meyers, Richard Hodgson, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Underwood, Rev. Minot J. Savage and C. G. Davis, M. D. The medical world was largely represented in the discussions; it was gratifying from that point of view to note the admission of potential agencies outside of nostrums for the cure of disease, and that suggestion, faith, hope, expectancy are powerful therapeutic agents in the apparent miracles of mind and faith cures. The audiences were composed of earnest-faced men and women in about equal numbers. The most suggestive effect of the things heard was the enthusiasm with which the opinion was received that the supernatural is simply the super-usual, that the cause of all unexplained phenomena must be sought in the realm of law, and that psychical experiences must be brought to the test of science. It is inconceivable that any man who realizes the existence and value of his spiritual nature should not strive to know more of its possibilities, its concomitants and its destiny; and the world is to be congratulated that the work of the Psychical Research society is clearing the way for a scientific investigation into human connections with the realm of the unseen—which is as natural as the material world.

"SWEET THOUGHTS."

BY MRS. C. D. H. THOMPSON.

What do the pansies say?
Making faces
With sweet graces,
Opening eyes at peep of day,
Fainting not when sun's last ray
Sinks slow to rest
In crimson west.

Who dipped his brush in gold
Or sunshine rare
To paint so fair
Beauties yellow? Black eyes bold,
Brown eyes mild, to us have told
Secrets so dear,
Sweethearts seem near.

Fresh from the skies did come
This one in white—
Since of the light
Whispers it of that fair home
Pure ones reach, no more to roam,
Where all is bloom—
No night—no gloom!

Blossoms the blue of sky
And bluer blue
Bid us be true.
Standing firm, since God on high
Maketh rule, we, bye and bye,
Shall see love's day—
The pansies say.

And some in sombre hue
Are black as night,
Yet always bright.
Lifting face to catch the dew
Heaven sends, that maketh new Little faces,
With sweet graces.

"Sweet thoughts," too short your stay!
When we are sad
You make us glad;
Perfume sweet and saucy ways
Chase the clouds these summer days.
Ah, pansies say,
"Be glad to-day!"

Longmont, Col.

THE SILENT WIRES.*

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

Karl Heiser, though barely twenty-seven years old, had long been a leader in the Telegraphers' Union in New York City. His education had been above the average, his technical ability placed him in a good position, and his readiness of speech and personal magnetism drew followers in plenty. Karl's mother died in infancy; his father was a professional gambler and had not long before quitted the world he had not bettered by his sojourn therein.

Karl had been thrown into Hattie Starkey's society during the last year, meeting her day by day in the same office. Attracted by her prettiness and her good-nature, for when matters went right with Hattie she was a merry little thing, he had at once begun "to wait on her," as expressed in the vernacular of her class, and a pretty ring "costly as his purse could buy," had shone on Hattie's plump finger for nearly three months. He had known their tastes were different, had recognized the occasional unrefinement of her speech and manner, but these he considered largely due to circumstances and surroundings, believing firmly that environment makes the character of man and woman, and he rejoiced at the thought of removing her a degree or two from the atmosphere she hated, the torn novels, the sticky medicines, and the general thriftlessness and disorder, for he had an admiration and tenderness for the girl which he called love.

Karl was not at all certain that intellect was indispensable, or even desirable, in a wife. A man wanted some one to keep his clothes in order; whom he would be proud of when they went out together; who would look pretty and fresh, and pet him when he was tired and blue; in short, make a home for him. When he was able to support a wife and family, he would marry, and he was very fond of Hattie Starkey. He liked to take her to entertainments when he could afford it, and watch her cheeks flush and her eyes brighten; he liked to take her after ice-cream; or to walk in the park, and be proud of her pretty looks. He liked her coaxing ways, her merry laugh at his witticisms, and her undisguised admiration for Karl Heiser. Best of all, he liked the lingering good-night in the doorway.

But Karl Heiser was not lacking in admiration for such women as Winifred Hilton. A conversation with her stimulated and refreshed him. Her opinions on questions of labor, wages and the like were clear and well sustained; she talked more logically than many of the club men; she was cordial and sympathetic; she dressed neatly and in good taste, though she wore no coquettish ribbons or other jaunty accessories of the toilet in which Hattie Starkey delighted. Winifred Hilton had none of the dependent ways and appealing looks so charming in a pretty woman, but she was not plain. An abundance of brown hair waved back from a broad, fair brow, a pair of clear brown eyes met a glance steadily, and a pleasant smile disclosed white, even teeth. Karl was glad Hattie had such a friend; he could safely leave her with Winifred Hilton, who was very fond of the young girl, so unlike herself, and would have sacrificed much for her happiness. But, however much a man like Karl Heiser might depend upon such a woman, might turn to her for sympathy and encouragement, and even advice, he would not dream of making love to her. Such a man would not think of marriage at all in connection with Winifred Hilton, and the thought of her as a possible wife for himself would not once enter his imagination.

The strikers met that evening in open session. There was much enthusiastic handshaking before the meeting was called to order. Well-dressed operators mingled with rough looking linemen in their striped blouses and Jack boots, some of whom carried hooks and lines still hanging over their broad shoulders as insignia of office. Karl's slender hand received many a hard grasp from the sinewy fists of these workmen as he moved about the hall dispensing cheering words. The proportion of women to men was small, but it was a keen and confident minority, and met with many complimentary words.

Karl Heiser was called to the chair, and the speech-making began. The men were, for the most part, enthusiastic and sanguine of success. They reiterated their intentions to accept nothing less than those concessions which had been demanded and refused, namely, that the required day's work be made eight hours instead of nine and the night hours seven instead of eight; that all wages be increased fifteen per cent, irrespective of age, skill, or position; that Sunday work be abolished unless the Sunday operator receive extra pay; and that men and women should have equal pay for equal work.

"The Brotherhood proposes to see that our sisters and daughters and sweethearts be paid as much as we get ourselves, when they do as good work," concluded one speaker amid cheers.

When Winifred Hilton rose in response to Karl's request for a few words, Hattie gazed at her friend in mingled admiration and pity. What a shame that she brushed her hair back in so old-maidish a way! If she would only frizz it a little over her forehead, and wear something gayer than that plain black cashmere, how much nicer she would look! Yet, Hattie could but recognize the charm in Winifred's clear voice and in the simplicity of her words and manner.

"We have been told," said Miss Hilton, "that our women will be the first to weaken. This we are sure is a mistake. We depend upon our brothers to fight for our rights, and they may depend upon us to keep them in ammunition. It was not a woman who betrayed West Point into the enemy's hands; it was not a woman who took thirty pieces of silver for the betrayal of her Master; they are not women who are bought every day in our legislative halls; and it will not be a woman who will first weaken now."

As she took her seat, a man near her rose. He unfolded a paper, and read slowly: "Resolved, Until we have gained the victory, to pledge ourselves to abstain from all intoxicating liquors." It was passed with cheers. Karl had noticed Miss Hilton talking with this man not long before, and felt sure the resolution had originated in her own clear and sympathetic brain. "It was a wise move," he thought, "for it would ruin our plans if any of us should go on a spree now." Karl would not become intoxicated, of course; such a thing was of rare occurrence. Still, he was grateful to whoever thought of such a pledge, though he would not have liked to propose it himself.

Karl Heiser's eyes had often wandered that evening to Hattie Starkey sitting by the side of Winifred Hilton. He had noticed her coquettish glances as she talked to the men of her acquaintance; had watched the flush deepen in her cheeks under their admiring gaze and the listless expression which dulled her pretty face during the speeches which followed—a strong contrast to the intelligent interest of Miss Hilton—and had felt her ignorant of the interests at stake in the present struggle and indifferent to its outcome. But the girl had rarely seemed so bewitchingly pretty. The pale blue of the cheap cotton gown set off the brown golden hair and the fair, rosy skin. Excitement and the open admiration of two or three men, who hovered near, brought a light to the blue eyes and wreathed the red lips with smiles. Her bright beauty drew his heart to her, as the magnet draws the needle. He was jealous as never before of the young men with whom she chatted.

No one dreamed of this confusion in Karl Heiser's thoughts who watched him as he performed the duties of chairman with the utmost outward composure, and spoke after this wise:

"I have a few messages here for the union, and it may surprise you that any messages have been received to-day, when the innumerable wires controlled by the largest companies in Canada and the United States are universally silent, but these have come over private lines. A merchant in St. Louis offers us three hundred dollars to help meet the expenses of the strike; others stand ready to help us; and the president of the Merchants' Exchange assures the boys of sympathy. Ah! I thought those words would bring your cheers.

"We are bound to succeed. Everything favors us. The strike to-day begun will be the most decisive in history. I do not think the struggle will be a long one, but, in any case, we are sure of ultimate victory. The telegraphers' organization is the grandest in America. It is the best organized; its members are the most intelligent. With our perfect system of cipher dispatch we have been enabled to talk with each other on the very wires of the company, without the company's knowledge. The strike of 1870 took a week to spread through the country. To-day, in five minutes it had reached from Maine to California, from Canada to the Gulf. It embraces, or will soon embrace, the principal companies of the United States.

"But the true battle-ground is our own New York, and our most formidable foe the Great Consolidated. When that yields, all will yield. No company can bring upon the country the evils of a long struggle without violating its duties to the public in the most shameless manner, and without incurring serious legal liability. No company has a right to paralyze the business of the country in an effort to bluff down employés who demand reasonable concessions. No company has a right to keep silent this vast network of wires, on which the business of the country so largely depends, until the operators are compelled to come back at its terms. We must and will have ours, and when the now silent wires are again vibrating at the touch of our practiced fingers upon the silent keys, the first message that will thrill through the land will be 'Victory!'"

On the way home Hattie kept up a running comment on the people present at the meeting, but her companions were unusually silent. They stopped at Miss Hilton's flat, which occupied the floor below Hattie's home. Unpretending as it was, it had a homelike look, which the one upstairs, with its habitual untidiness, never attained.

Winifred Hilton and her three sisters were orphans, intelligent, capable girls, who contrived with their joint earnings to make a safe little home for themselves in the midst of the great city. Grace was a saleswoman in a drygoods establishment, Jennie, a dressmaker, and fourteen-year-old Lulu, still at school. Hattie Starkey often brought her betrothed in here, and the girls good-naturedly withdrew to the wee dining-room, or their bedrooms, leaving the little sitting-room to the lovers.

"It was so much pleasanter than home," sighed inefficient Hattie, feeling the contrast between Winifred's room, which was never dusty or disorderly, and the discomfort of her own, which a little care on her part might have brightened, despite the bottles and novels, her mother's querulousness and her father's surliness.

This evening Winifred soon left them together. Hattie sat in a low rocking chair, wonderfully pretty in the blue gown, and so Karl told her.

"You're mighty changeable, seems to me," snapped Hattie. "You was ashamed to go out with me a while ago, and now you're praising the very dress I had on then!"

"I don't see how I can make you understand, if you won't, Hattie," exclaimed the young man. "Your dress is pretty and becoming in the house, but I think a lady should dress less conspicuously for the street. But, do not quarrel with me, dearest," drawing her to a seat by his side. "Come, tell me, when I get my increase of salary, if I will have to wait much longer for my wife?"

"Nice time to ask me that!" grumbled Hattie, "when you're out of work, an' little prospect of gettin' in again, I think." But Karl Heiser had a persuasive tongue with women, as with men, and when he parted that night from Hattie Starkey she had promised to marry him a month after the strike was over.

Karl whistled jubilantly as he passed into the street, for Hattie Starkey was dearer to him than any other woman he had known, and he planned happily the home soon to be theirs. They would rent a few rooms and begin housekeeping in a modest way. Hattie, freed from the office work, would have nothing to do but keep home and herself pretty for him. She would not carry the untidiness of her maiden home into her new one, but would keep it like Winifred Hilton's rooms. He would buy her pretty dresses whenever he could, and they would be very happy. Of course, he must go to the Union and his club, and mingle often with men where he could hear their views of the great questions of the day, and air his own, for Karl was fond of argument and the sound of his own ringing voice. He would not talk of such things at home; a woman would not understand them. His conversations with his wife would be on the price of mutton and milk, on the becomingness of Hattie's last dress, on their neighbor's lace curtains, on the grocery bills and the baby's teething, yet they would be very happy. Still, like a spectre at the wedding feast of his fancy, intruded the thought: "A young man married is a young man marred." He would have entered one of the gaily-lighted saloons for a glass of beer or brandy to help dispel this troublesome thought, but the memory of that evening's pledge restrained him. So he went to his boarding-place and fell asleep after a long struggle with those haunting words, in his half-conscious thoughts making other words out of that one—heavy with happiness or heartache—married, by transposing and dropping the letters, after a game he had played when a child. But he found no comfort in the combinations which seemed to his excited fancy ominously suggestive.

Married—marred—dear maid—drear dame—mad dream—arid—err—dram—die!

THE DISCOVERER OF THE GOSPEL PALIMPSEST.

BY FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

Any doubt as to who might be the real discoverer of the most valuable Syriac version of the gospels, which caused so much attention a few weeks ago in England, was set at rest when on arriving at Cambridge the other day I made my way to the house of Mrs. Lewis. Dr.

MRS. LEWIS.

Harris, who for a time was supposed to be the discoverer, made a less important, though a very interesting find, when he laid his hands some two years ago, in the same convent, upon the Apologia of Aristides. Mrs. Lewis and her sister, Mrs. Gibson, received me in their pleasant drawing-room in Cambridge, and in most cordial fashion consented to give me any information I might desire as to the nature of the discovery. After being allowed to look through some bulky volumes containing photographs of the now famous palimpsest, I ventured to inquire what was the cause of the two ladies undertaking so adventurous a journey in the pursuit of what seemed, one might almost say, a hopeless quest.

"We are both immensely fond of traveling," said Mrs. Lewis, "and ancient documents, especially in the Semitic tongue, have for some years exercised an indescribable fascination for us. We are both devoted Biblical students and ever since the issue of the Revised Version we have devoted ourselves specially to the acquisition of Greek and Hebrew that we might study the originals at first hand."

"But how is it that there has been so much delay in making known the discovery to the public?"

"Last autumn before returning on our second expedition we sent a long letter to the Times but it was crowded out, so we have since been told, by Home Rule, for it seems," laughed Mrs. Lewis, "that nowadays that question blocks the way of everything; all other human incidents seem to sink into insignificance."

"And how did you come to start?"

"Our friend Professor Harris having returned from Mount Sinai with the photographs of his manuscripts, was able to give us much valuable advice as to our line of procedure, and he was good enough to give us our first lesson in photography so that we succeeded before starting in making a very decent representation of our home surroundings. But I assure you, when we went out we had no idea of the use to which our cameras would ultimately be put."

"How, then, did you overcome the difficulties which I understand have lain in the path of all manuscript hunters in this mountain monastery?"

"We were fortunate in having obtained very good introductions from the Bishop of Jerusalem, and although there are no telegraphic communications in the desert, the Bedouin acts as a marvelous carrier of news, so that after our nine days march from Suez was accomplished, we found on reaching the convent gates, that our arrival had been heralded some days before. We had no adventures worth relating except the usual contre-temps which befall travelers; when thieves, for example, broke into our tents, during the night hours, and carried off the chickens which our cook had designed as provender for the whole of our forty days in the desert. But once settled down amongst the good, kind monks in St. Katharine's Monastery we received so many tempting gifts of fruits, and jellies, and other home-made viands, that our losses were far more than made up.

"The situation of the monastery is very imposing. High rocks of pinkish colored granite rise in serrated peaks on every side: but these somewhat forbidding surroundings are relieved by the oases of olive trees and date palms which the monks have planted outside their convent grounds. We were not a little startled on our near approach by the somewhat severe aspect of the building, which is, one might almost say, built on the plan of a castle surrounded by high walls and battlements, and within, the chapel and the various dwellings and workshops are arranged in promiscuous fashion. This place is a spot of peculiar sanctity, even to the wanderer of the desert, for it is believed to be the site of the burning bush, and even the Mohammedans treat it with peculiar reverence. Thus it is that this monastery is nowadays exposed to no attacks, and, in fact, the monks often act as arbitrators in cases of dispute between the various wandering tribes."

"But how was the actual discovery made?"

"We had been warned by Professor Harris to avoid being pressing in our approaches, but having once won the confidence of the monks, there was nothing which they would not entrust to us. Indeed, we became warm friends when they found that I was the author of a little book on Greece, which they had read in a modern Greek translation, and they were curious to learn all they could of our travels in that land. We had not been many days encamped in our tents within the convent walls, when under the guardianship of one of the monks we were allowed daily access to the inner chamber of the library, and were permitted to open the many chests where the volumes were hidden away. I do not believe the many foolish stories told about the Tischendorf quest, concerning the absolute carelessness of the monks; indeed, they guard their treasures only too well, and, in the past, it is the greed of English strangers which has been the principal hindrance to work among these manuscripts."

"Then we may indeed congratulate you and Mrs. Gibson on having really acted as pioneers in a double sense, in having helped to break down the barriers of prejudice which the perversity of previous explorers had raised up?"

"Perhaps so," said Mrs. Lewis, "but we ought really to attribute this to the kindness of Dr. Harris who preceded us. Through his geniality our path was plain. My sister and I were engaged in cataloguing, I doing the Syriac manuscripts numbering 276, and she the Arabic manuscripts of which there are 600, thus accomplishing the difficult task which Professor Palmer was so anxious to do, when by the merest accident we came upon this old volume, the leaves of which were so stuck together that it took us many days of separation by aid of steam before we could attempt any photographing."

"But what have you discovered special in this manuscript?"

"So far as we have copied it, and have been able to examine, we find it the most complete Syriac manuscript extant, only about eight pages being defective. At the end of the Gospel of St. Matthew there is a colophon saying, 'The end of the first of the separated Gospels.' The Gospel of St. Mark ends with the eighth verse of the sixteenth chapter, the twelve doubtful verses being omitted, and on the same page just below the Gospel of St. Luke begins. Then again in the Hymn of the Angels, the old reading is adhered to, 'good will to men' instead of, as according to our modern version, 'to men of good will.' There are many other points which we hope, aided by Professor Robertson of Edinburgh, to bring before long fully before the public, when we have penetrated beneath the surface writing of the palimpsest which consists of a series of lives of women saints dating apparently from the eighth century."

Meantime Mrs. Gibson, the twin sister of Mrs. Lewis, was busily engaged in the adjoining room completing her little volume entitled, "How the Codex was Found," which is now in the hands of Macmillan & Co., and will be out within the next few weeks. But she presently returned, bringing with her a number of photographs illustrating, not only the palimpsest, but the various points of interest in the journey.

"Do you think that you have exhausted the entire contents of the library?"

"We think so. We have left untouched a very few Hebrew manuscripts, however, which are of no interest; but the library was almost entirely filled with patristic literature, and of this we have made a complete survey. We have also photographed a copy of the Gospels in the Iberian character, and portions of a Georgian Martyrology, together with an Arabic copy of the Epistles of about the ninth century. Several copies of early texts of Syriac dictionaries we have also added to our store, and aided by these we hope that many new points of value to the student will be unfolded."

At this moment Mrs. Gibson slipped from her finger a little silver ring, marked as the ring of St. Katharine, the patron saint of the convent. This, she said, was a parting gift from one of the monks in memory of their visit, a man in whose breast a new love for England was created the moment he heard that the wife of our great premier, Mr. Gladstone, was named after the martyr of Alexandria, to whom all the dwellers in the convent do daily reverence.

DIRECT LEGISLATION BY THE PEOPLE.

BY W. D. MC CRACKEN.

It must be remembered that direct legislation by means of the Initiative and Referendum is a matter of political machinery solely. In urging its adoption, therefore, into this country, it may be wise to explain that it is not a cure-all for social and economic diseases, but merely a direct and effective method of recording the popular will in matters of legislation.

Indirectly the Initiative and Referendum would doubtless also rid us of a whole train of political evils but their chief merit is that they would facilitate the solution of deep-seated, fundamental problems in society. Let us examine, for instance, the simplest examples of pure democracy in existence—the Swiss Landsgemeinde and the New England Town Meeting.

In a meadow near Altdorf, Switzerland, some fifteen hundred voters are ranged around in a circle. Their chief magistrate stands in the center delivering an opening speech. The clerk sits writing at a table, and the crier with his beadles resplendent in cocked hats and cloaks of orange and black, is installed upon a raised platform on one side. A fringe of women and children watch the proceedings from near by. The annual Landsgemeinde, or open air assembly, of Canton Uri is in session.

Suddenly the crowd rises, and standing bare-headed, silently repeats a number of Ave Marias. During this solemn pause the surpassing grandeur of the surroundings imposes itself.

All at once the business of the meeting begins. Bills and reports are presented, discussed in the guttural native dialect and voted by a show of hands. Then comes the election of officers, each result being announced by the crier who raises his hat and repeats a set formula. After the oath has been administered to the new magistrates, some miscellaneous business is transacted, and the assembly adjourns till next May. The session has lasted about four hours.

In the United States the Massachusetts town meeting is almost the exact counterpart of the Swiss Landsgemeinde, in spite of an entire difference in environment. You have only to substitute a hall for a meadow, the bleak, unkindly scenery of a Massachusetts March for the genial glow of an Alpine May, and a good deal of nasal Yankee dialect for guttural Schwizerduitsch.

Selectmen and committees make their reports about schools, fire departments, streets, sewers, and one is impressed with the natural instinct of freemen for the orderly conduct of legislative business. There is, too, an intense relish for good rhetorical points. The town meeting is a school of oratory. Local lawyers take perhaps an unfair advantage of this to practice on their friends. The Yankee is capable of filling even a report on drainage with dry humor. Occasionally the moderator finds it necessary to reprimand applause as indecorous, or to beg voters not to leave the room when discussion is tame. Voting is done viva voce unless it is close, when the ayes or nays rise to be counted by the clerk.

As the Landsgemeinden were the training schools for the peasants who founded the Swiss Confederation, so the New England Town Meeting taught political organization to the patriots of the American Revolution. As a matter of fact, however, the ideal form of government has almost everywhere been superseded by representative government. In Switzerland it flourishes in only two cantons and four half cantons out of the twenty-five which compose the federation. The United States municipalities are taking the place of governments by town meeting.

The process of transformation is perfectly natural and inevitable. The chances are that a body of freemen will continue to govern themselves directly until population and territory have increased so much that it becomes a physical impossibility for them to meet personally. Then direct democracy gives place to a representative system of government. The people cease to exercise their sovereign rights in person, they are gradually weaned from self-government, and the professional politician makes his appearance. This is the critical moment in the history of every democracy. The people having once surrendered direct government, almost always become the prey of party bosses. But fortunately it is possible to preserve the essence of the public assembly—its directness—even in the midst of our complex modern civilization. The Swiss people have evolved and perfected a contrivance in political machinery which virtually annihilates space in a political sense, for it enables large bodies of voters to govern themselves directly without actually meeting together. They have grafted the institutions of the Initiative and the Referendum upon the system of representative government. They have saved pure democracy from extinction.

The Initiative may be defined as an institution by means of which a body of voters has the right to initiate proposals for the enactment of new laws, or for the alteration or abolition of existing laws. It has been adopted by seventeen out of twenty-two cantons. In 1891 it was introduced into the provisions for amending the Federal constitution. The right of the Initiative, it must be remembered, is not merely the privilege of petition, enjoyed by the inhabitants of every state which makes any pretentions whatever to political liberty. It is a constitutional demand, not an irregular request.

In substance the Referendum is an institution by virtue of which laws, framed by representatives, are referred to the people for final acceptance or rejection. It may be optional or compulsory, i. e., either all laws must be submitted or only certain kinds. In many cases the ballots are marked simply "yes" and "no." At present all the cantons of the Swiss confederation have incorporated the Referendum in some form or other into their constitutions, except Fribourg, which rather makes a merit of resisting all innovation. The Federal government disposes of a compulsory Referendum for the revision of its constitution, and of an optional one for general laws.

Direct legislation is by no means a new-fangled, foreign importation. It has existed in the town meeting from the beginning of our national history. It is just as much at home on the New England coast as in the Swiss Alpine valleys. Nor is the modern Referendum at least a novelty in the United States at large. Constitutional amendments are referred to popular vote in every state of the Union, except Delaware. "Local Option" is in itself a form of Referendum. Throughout the country there are many examples in counties, cities, townships and school districts. What is needed now is to harmonize these various forms, to increase their efficiency and widen their applicability.

The modern Initiative does not yet exist in this country as a political institution. But it would practically amount to an imperative petition, and could easily take its place in our national customs. At present all expressions of the popular will are still spasmodic, given to unaccountable vagaries, and easily turned to profit by watchful politicians. There are no steady, unswerving demands which legislators are bound to weigh and pass judgment upon. Petitions there are in great number, it is true, but they are from their very nature only requests, proffered like polite prayers to unlistening despots. A word spoken at some hotel bar, a jest in the lobby, a little transaction with greenbacks, have more influence than the written desire of ten thousand sovereign citizens.

In its last analysis the process of the Referendum-Initiative is simply this: That a given number of voters propose legislation of the whole body of voters through the medium of the government, and the act is therefore identical with that of the voter who rises in the town meeting to make a motion to his fellow voters.

The introduction ought to begin in the smallest political unit, in township, county or parish. Thence direct government could be readily extended to state matters, and when it had safely weathered these first stages, to Federal affairs. It would be wiser to try a limited or optional Referendum first, which would apply perhaps only to financial measures. After that, the compulsory Referendum could be introduced, as the people learned to appreciate its advantages.

The Initiative would naturally come somewhat later; the agitation for its introduction could be carried on while the Referendum was going through its initial trials. But growth by experiment must characterize any successful application of either institution.

Congress might either attach riders to important bills making their final passage into laws dependent upon their acceptance by the whole electorate, or might pass a special law instituting the Referendum outright for measures of general interest, like tariff bills, etc. Several state supreme courts have already asserted the competence of legislatures to refer laws to electors.

In point of fact, the combination of the Initiative and Referendum is absolutely fatal to that political evil, the lobby. Bribery is too risky an investment when the people hold the deciding ballot. The Initiative tends to specialize, as well as to fortify the work of law-making. Every school of thought has the opportunity to present its arguments; politics is redeemed from the sterile discussion of tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum, and becomes an occupation for serious men, who care very little for the tricks of party bosses, and a great deal for the eternal principles of economic, social, and political justice.

If there be a political prophecy which it is safe to make at this time, it is that our representative system cannot remain in its present form for another decade, if the republic is to endure.

There is never a choice of principles, pure and simple, in a presidential election. The merits of persons and parties are fully as important. The real issues are never exposed to the voter in their simplicity and frankness, for it is the business of politicians to confuse him, to distract his attention from what is vital, and fix it upon catching non-essentials. The rival parties are engaged in playing with each other for certain stakes. Their constant aim is to counteract each other's good moves, to drive each other "into a hole," as the saying is.

Has there ever been a time under our representative system when a citizen could cast his ballot without fear of being tricked out of its true meaning? The Referendum makes it possible for him to register a definite "yes" or "no" to a particular measure. It would sweep away the unknown quantities in legislation. There is no confusion in a simple assent or dissent to a proposition bereft of the perplexing adjuncts of personalities or party loyalty.

Prof. J. M. Vincent says in his "State and Federal Government in Switzerland": "For a country which calls itself democratic, the people of the United States have less to say about their own affairs than they are apt to imagine." With a happy stroke he characterizes the average legislature as "the biennial terror of its own constituents." Now, taking it for granted that the Initiative and Referendum are desirable institutions, how can they be introduced into the United States—or rather, how can the rudimentary forms in which they already exist among us be stimulated to sturdy growth?

For this, first, all traces of direct government, wherever found, ought to be carefully preserved or modified to suit modern conditions, and not ruthlessly swept away as antiquated. Instead of transforming the Massachusetts towns into ordinary municipalities, for instance, as is the tendency of the day, citizens living under the new form of government ought to retain the right of proposing legislation directly, as of old, and of passing final judgment upon measures by ballot. This result could be obtained through the Initiative and Referendum. The essence of the town meeting would be preserved, and its practical working made to conform to modern needs.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XVI.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

After the weariness and excitement of the Dunn trial the undaunted, invincible Crusaders met in the dear old church, where their first vows were recorded, and proceeded to business quietly and as peacefully as though they had not been under the arrest of human judgment, feeling in their hearts the comforting assurance: "If God be for us who can be against us?" The devotions on that morning were solemn and impressive, and plans for future work were entered into with harmony and zeal.

First, it was decided to meet weekly at the homes of the members of the League, alternately, for prayer and conference; once each month a public temperance meeting should be held in one of the churches; children's temperance meeting once a week, and the young people of the town be urged to continue their gatherings three times each month. The feeling had been growing on the part of the ladies that a room set apart for their own line of work was a necessity, and they voted unanimously in favor of immediate action. Later, by appointment, the following committee took charge of the matter: Mesdames Dr. Sams, D. K. Fenner, S. Janes, J. Stevenson, E. J. Thompson. From the minutes we find: "Monday evening, December 6, 1875, the general monthly temperance meeting was held in the League room for the first time. By the united request of the ladies Dr. McSurely conducted the services of dedicating our little temple to God and humanity, and it was done in a manner most helpful and pleasing to all in attendance. After singing 'He Leadeth Me,' Mrs. Thompson was asked to give the history of the League room, how it was obtained, how and by whom furnished, etc. This she did, and demonstrated fully that the whole thing was a special Providence."

The detailed account as given then would be uninteresting at this late day, but the fact should not be forgotten that this long, narrow, one-story, frame business house, gable end fronting on High Street opposite the two remaining saloons of Crusade memory—Bales and Ward—had suggested the idea of songs and prayers legally brought to ears now barred by public protest.

This right-angled, old building was divided by a slight partition into two rooms; removing this line of separation we had a respectable hall-shaped room with front door and two windows, the same in the rear. Plaster, paint, paper, scrubbing brushes, carpet, seats, tables, stove, blinds, mottoes, pictures, Bible and books of song and many other conveniences were all the spontaneous offerings of earnest hearts. Not one dollar of debt was left upon the ladies when the first songs of praise and voice of prayer were heard under that lowly, consecrated roof.

A series of morning meetings of a devotional character had been arranged to follow the opening service of the League room. These meetings were to be presided over by the Crusaders, alternately, and this Tuesday morning service was assigned to me. As our audience increased and the sweet songs of Zion floated out upon the clear, crisp air of that December morning, a noble heart for whom earnest prayers were ascending from that sacred place felt "strangely drawn"—and when the dignified form of General McDowell entered this newly dedicated "temple," and took a seat near the door, there was a visible mark of answered prayer upon the faces of many present.

After several prayers, songs and telling experiences, the leader invited her "Uncle McDowell" (in a friendly way) to say something to them; as he had throughout the Crusade been such a wonderful stay and help to the ladies, all felt a desire to hear from him now in their new line of work. At once he arose, laid off his overcoat and walking slowly up towards the front said, with quivering lip: "I am not worthy to speak before you good women! During the war I grew more and more hardened and embittered, as those professing Christianity vilified each other, and brothers shed their own brothers' blood! I confess I came to believe there was no such thing as religion! But I have watched the Crusaders with an interest few understood, and as I have seen those among you who were tenderly reared, kneel upon the sawdust floors—yea, even upon the pavements in front of barred doors, and have heard them (with tears coursing down their cheeks), pray for their worse than murderers, and for their wives and children, and then have followed them to the churches, and found the same spirit evinced there, I have been led to feel—yes, that is the Christ love! And I want to tell you, my dear sisters, that I feel it in my heart this morning!" He was deeply moved, and so were all who heard him. And that dear little wife, who had prayed so faithfully for the beloved husband of her youth for fifty years, now realized with new joy the faithfulness of her covenant-keeping God, and joined the happy group of sympathizing friends in songs of praise; that meeting, long to be remembered, closed with a new seal of God's approval upon the Crusade, and a recognition of His presence in our "gospel temperance" meetings.

General McDowell lost no time in communicating with his friend and pastor, Dr. McSurely, and at once renewed his early membership with the Presbyterian church. From the hour of his new life-experience his growth in grace and marvelous Christian development were "known and read of all men," for the tender Saviour knew how soon he would be called from labor to reward, hence He made of him a "shining mark." Gen. Joseph J. McDowell was a successful man in life, possessed a fine personal appearance, was an attractive speaker, fine conversationalist, and during his terms of public service in state and national councils, won laurels socially as well as politically. But what were all these perishable gifts and graces to that touch of "Divine love" which transformed his nature into the "image of the heavenly," and made him meet for the kingdom that "endureth forever"?

The First Suffrage Gun of the W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The great suffrage week you have just closed in Memorial Art Palace reminds me of our day of small beginnings. I tell you of it with great rejoicing in what you have seen, of which I have read, of the mighty growth of the spirit of justice and equality abroad in the land, and do already by faith appropriate the perfect liberty which shall come in fullness of time to every son and daughter of God; bonds for one are chains for the other, for all lives are one, and retroactionary unless they march step for step on the King's highway.

It was in the autumn of 1876, in the town of Dixon, Illinois, at the third yearly convention of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union; Mrs. J. F. Willing was president and Mrs. E. E. Marcy, secretary. I went in company with my friend and comrade, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, of Chicago, a woman whose brave thought had opened to me a way into the women's temperance work when I had left the university and was hoping to find a place in the ranks of the Crusaders. At the time of this convention we had already been active workers for two years, coöperating in Chicago, I as president, and Mrs. Rounds as corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of that city.

At the convention of which I am writing we were entertained in a home whose head later became a state officer in the government of Illinois. He was a good Republican and a good temperance man but did not dare to mix the two lest the party should be hurt. He was a most agreeable and interesting host and we talked "politics" to our hearts' content without losing our tempers, for the Prohibition party was not much "in evidence" at that early date.

Ever since the previous May, when I had made the tour of Ohio and met the Crusaders face to face, it had been borne in upon my spirit that until women had the ballot we should not be equipped for the war to such an extent as to insure a victory that would be decisive and permanent. I had therefore prepared a resolution in my capacity as delegate to the Illinois convention of white-ribboners. Its exact language I cannot quote, but it was to this effect:

"Resolved, That as woman is the most trusty guardian of the home and of her children, she should have the right to close the dram-shop over against that home."

I remember that before going to the convention Mrs. Rounds and I knelt in prayer over that resolution and agreed that we would both stand by it. I showed it to several of our most progressive women when we reached the church in which the convention was held. A few said: "All right! we will stand by you." But more said: "Not yet! it is premature; the time will come, but we must wait!"

At the first opportunity I rose and offered the resolution whose purport I have given. I did not know that it would receive more than one second, and I had reason to believe that Mrs. Rounds would be that one, but to my surprise it was seconded with spirit in several parts of the church. Mrs. Marcy, a true and gifted woman of conservative views on this subject, moved "to lay the resolution on the table," but no one seconded the motion. Mrs. Willing (also an opponent), in her clear voice called out: "Is there a second to the motion to lay this resolution which indorses woman's suffrage on the table?" There was a moment's pause, and I felt that great destinies were trembling in the balance. At such a time by intuition the heart is lifted up in prayer even though the ear is strained to listen. I listened well, but not a voice broke the stillness by seconding the motion to "table" my resolution. There was then nothing left but to put my motion to adopt, and when this was done without debate, the cries of "Aye" were prompt and decisive.

This was among my life's most happy hours. I rose and thanked the convention with emotion that they had never before seen me manifest. I remember saying to them that as wives and mothers they had, I believed, done a more forceful stroke of work for what they held dearest, than they had ever been able to perform before in their united capacity as Christian women, and that I rejoiced beyond telling that they were not unmindful of the meaning of this resolution which to me, who had neither home nor child, was fraught with a significance so deep that it was not easy for me to speak of it with composure.

I think it was an hour that will never be forgotten by any who participated in its results. They proved to be far-reaching. The Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union was the first that set its seal to the great truth so forcibly phrased by Lady Henry Somerset in the words: "She who is life-giver ought to be law-giver."

From that centennial year, so fitting as the date of a forward movement, great and holy, the right of women to help make the laws that shall separate the government from the liquor traffic was declared by one state union after another, until now there is not a state in the Union in which white ribbon women have not either expressly declared the faith that is in them, or through their delegates affirmed it at the great kindly camp-fire of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Ever your friend and comrade,

Frances E. Willard.

THE CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE AT OLD ORCHARD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A little boy once stood on the shores of the Atlantic where it breaks on that wonderful beach at Old Orchard, Maine, and as he looked on the sweep of surf extending fourteen miles, and way out on the beautiful, boundless sea, he said: "Mother, isn't it good to see something that there's enough of."

I have felt the same way while attending the convention of the Christian Alliance held at this ideal summer resort. Ministers, evangelists, Christians, workers of all denominations, and sinners converted through the word spoken by them, have told of a gospel that there is "enough of"; a gospel that "saves to the uttermost," one that tells of a Saviour who is the same "yesterday, to-day and forever," who is as willing and able to heal the body as the soul; who not only forgives sin, but frees us from its power and dominion. "What a wonderful Saviour is Jesus, our Jesus!"

Rev. A. B. Simpson, of the Gospel Tabernacle in New York, is at the head of the Alliance, which is not a church but only a helper of the churches; for many of those who attend these conventions from year to year carry home to their local churches a more fervent spirit, and the enduement of power which the Holy Spirit bestows. A blessing comes to those who meet with "one accord in one place."

Some of the speakers were white-ribboners, and the little symbol of purity was very common throughout the audience, and while Peter Scott, a young man who has been on the Congo for about two years, and will soon return, told with burning eloquence of the degradation of the Africans because of rum, I resolved that an echo of the convention should reach the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. Mr. Scott implored the people to send missionaries to the Congo faster than the intoxicating liquor could get there. He said the natives who murder under the command of the witch doctors are filled with rum from Medford, Mass. Once or twice a year a ship arrives from Boston, called "the rum ship," containing rum, tobacco and gunpowder. For every missionary sent to the poor heathen in Africa there are seventy thousand gallons of rum taken into their ports. Is not the solution of this question to be found in the remark made by Rev. Stephen Merritt, of New York, one of the most helpful speakers here, and one to whom John Woolley looks with so much gratitude: "If the church would receive the Holy Ghost there wouldn't be a dram-shop in three months."

The daily Bible instruction given by Mr. Farr of the New York Training College and Correspondence School, 692 Eighth avenue, was received with delight by the large audiences. Mr. Farr is young, scholarly, a calm, cool reasoner, and a man of profound piety. He said the best definition of a man of God was given by Frances Willard and is as follows: "God's man, in God's place, doing God's will, in God's way and for God's glory." He made obscure and controverted passages of Scripture clear, stood for the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures in the original, but not for the paragraphing, punctuation and division into chapters of the King James version. He said God has more light to break out of His Holy Word than we have imprisoned in our creeds. He quoted Dr. Timothy Dwight who said: "Since the Scriptures were written for ordinary people, generally the obvious meaning of a passage of Scripture is the true meaning." He called attention to the fact that when Christ was tempted in the wilderness he answered every assault of Satan with words drawn from the book of Deuteronomy, and he thought that was the reason Satan had a special grudge against the book and the critics never let up on it! Referring to the alleged discrepancy between science and the Bible, he denied it and said: "The Bible was not given us to tell how the heavens go, but how to go to heaven."

The word pictures of China, Japan, India, Egypt and Palestine, which fell from the lips of Rev. A. B. Simpson, who has recently made a missionary tour, were God-given. They were graphic descriptions of the degradation of heathenism, the indifference and luxurious life of foreigners in those lands, the self-denial of the missionaries and the call which comes to the churches at home to uphold them with prayer and money.

Mr. Simpson drew a sad picture of the degraded condition of women in Japan, where, block after block, they openly live in vice. These women are the wives, the mothers. After living such a life they can be married, and are received into the best society, and yet, Mr. Simpson says, all this is nothing to the legalized vice in India. He also referred to the conference of Christians in Bombay, and warmly indorsed the desire of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union that they should have made a protest against the liquor and opium traffic. I thought with gratitude of the recent labors of Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew in India. In Japan the poor girls count for nothing. As soon as a boy is born a red dragon is made to float over the house, and so a woman rejoices in her sons and laments over her daughters.

While Mr. Simpson was in one of the large cities of China sixty-three girls passed along in carts. They had been sold to a life of shame for three dollars apiece. Until nine years of age the little girls of China are not supposed to have any souls, and if they die are not counted worthy of burial. A distinct class of the population lives in boats, which ply up and down the waters, and in these floating homes entire families are born and reared. Mr. Simpson was profoundly impressed, and his heart deeply saddened by the sight of the body of a little baby girl floating on the water. He was told that she must have tumbled out of one of the boats, and being only a girl, it was her fate, and it did not matter, and such sights were not at all uncommon. Life-preservers are tied around the boys to prevent any such mishap. Some verses were written by Mr. Simpson soon after he saw the little dead baby, who was to him only a type of the helpless, hopeless condition of thousands in that land. As the stanzas were sung before the large audience every heart was melted.

THE WORLD'S INDIA UNION AND ITS PRESIDENT.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—We need scarcely say with what deep pleasure we have noted the announcement of the appointment of Mrs. Jeannette Hauser to the leadership of the India Women's Christian Temperance Union. We communicated to Miss Willard a year ago, soon after our visit to that vast and needy land, our earnest belief as to her special fitness for the position. Indeed, it has seemed to us, from every point of view, as if she were the Providential agency placed by our God just where she could most wonderfully be used by Him in the building up of His kingdom through the agency of our beloved organization, in a land where the needs and surroundings are peculiar, to all of which Mrs. Hauser is peculiarly fitted by nature and experience. Her unusual energy and courage, her broad intelligence, her perfect command of the native language, her long acquaintance with the customs, the traditions, the whole surroundings of life in India, having had a residence in it—with brief intervals of absence in the home land—for nearly twenty-five years, thus being thoroughly acclimatized, which is of immense advantage in so trying a climate; her intense sympathy and interest in the native women, so that she establishes relations of confidence with them immediately in addressing them on any subject of mutual concern, her high Christian principles and consistency of action command the deepest esteem from both native and English speaking people. All these characteristics and circumstances, with which we are intimately acquainted, cause us to rejoice in her acceptance of the appointment, and to believe that great and blessed results will follow in that land of our love and prayers.

Yours faithfully,

ELIZABETH W. ANDREW,

A CURTAIN LECTURE.

BY W. A. J.

My wife and I had jest gone to bed,
When a curtain lectur' to me she read:
"Ef I was a man," sez my wife to me,
"I think I should be a man," sez she.
"Why, wot is the matter, Jane?" sez I;
"Matter enough," was her reply.
"I wouldn't go preachin' temperunce
An' votin' fer license, both ter wunce!
I wouldn't stan' up in church an' pray
Fer the curse of drink to be took away,
Fer the Lord in marcy to look an' bless
The needy widder an' fatherless;
An' then march up to the polls nex' day
An' vote jest eggsackly the other way!
I think I should hev at my command
At least jest a leetle grain uf sand;
An' whenever a pollytishun showed
His rum-blossom nose 'round my abode,
An' commenced his blarney to git my vote,
A-singin' the song he'd larnt by rote,
I'd spunk up to him an' tell him wot
I thought of him; an' ez like ez not
I'd jest perlitely show him the door,
An' invite him to never call no more!
I think I'd know enough," sez Jane,
"When a rumseller works with might an' main
To gain a p'int in the town elexshun,
To see that it wasn't jest my complexshun!
An' what he wanted so awful bad
Was the very thing he ortn't to had;
An' I'd work ag'in it, tooth an' nail,
My motto, 'No sech word ez fail!'
An' I wouldn't care one cent in cash
Ef the publicrat party went to smash!
I'd hev my conshens clear an' sound—
An' know I was treadin' on solid ground,
Ef I was a man," sez Jane, once more.
But I had already begun to snore.
I wasn't asleep, but then I meant
She'd think I was; fer her argyment,
I own, I couldn't quite answer it,
Though it struck right home to me, every bit.
But Jane, she groaned when I didn't cheep,
An' then turned over an' went to sleep.

ECHOES FROM THE FAIR NUMBER.

I.

I Wondered Why.

BY CHLOE COYLE.

THE UNION SIGNAL has reached out a friendly hand to the lonely farmer's wife and has asked how it could help her. Perhaps my plea for her, coming from an individual and unorganized standpoint, may have small weight; but I make it just because I belong to that class which cannot be organized, and I make it with the desperate question in my soul: Do not the children of such mothers outnumber those of any other class? I am a W. C. T. U. woman, and with long desire I reach out to you in the following hints, with great heart hunger that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union may be made so extensive, so beautiful, so Christ-like, that thousands of women, hitherto unsought, shall be brought into our comradeship; and that thousands of homes now ruled by ignorance and discouragement may have enlightenment and hope brought to them.

When my first baby lacked one day of being one month old I was a citizen of a third-class city in Kansas. Election day was at hand. The local W. C. T. U. had met on the previous Thursday—the largest and most enthusiastic meeting on record. A temperance caucus was held on Saturday afternoon and a "slate" nominated and People's party ticket put out. On election morning I saw our secretary going from house to house in the suburbs, and thought, what a brave, good woman she is! Soon she was followed by a black carriage with black horses, driven by a man dressed in black, and with full black beard and bloodshot, black eyes. I saw him drive up town with my nearest neighbor, and in a short time bring her back. On, on he went in our secretary's track carrying women to the polls. I rushed over to my nearest neighbor and said: "What have you done?"

She answered: "Why, I've been and voted."

"What ticket did you vote?"

She informed me that "he" gave her a ticket at the door and she did not know there was any other.

"Of course there's a temperance ticket," said I, "and don't you know that voting the ticket 'he' gave you means you have given him consent to continue the 'joint' 'he' has been running so long in his stable?"

The woman looked bewildered, and I felt like whipping myself for not telling her this before.

"Put on your bonnet quick," I said, "and run tell Mrs. Nathan—the next-door neighbor—not to vote his ticket if 'he' comes for her."

She was off like a flash and returned with the news that Mrs. N. did not intend to vote; she would not vote his ticket, and the temperance women had not before been aware of her existence, had never visited her or invited her to their meetings. So she did not propose to vote their ticket.

Two of our women went after this "black" driver's wife. She said her husband had instructed her, as the temperance women had cared nothing for her before, not to vote their ticket if they came after her. But being out of temper, she voted our ticket "to spite" him.

Several days after the election an old, crippled woman hobbled into my sitting-room. While she rested our conversation drifted to the election. As she "talked temperance," I asked which way she voted.

"I did not vote at all. Yes, they came after me, but I told them 'No!' They had never offered to comb my hair and dress my feet so that I might go to church, so I would not allow them to fix me up to go and vote." She continued, "I told Rosa (her step-daughter-in-law) that the way she voted meant that her husband would be drunk most of the time, but she could not see it."

After this I attended a county W. C. T. U. convention—the first in four and a half years. One little incident of that occasion has stood foremost in my memory ever since. It was a forlorn-looking little house, just across from the church, with a mother and little children gazing at us as though we were something whose objects and interests were so remote from them there could be no point of contact, and they would never think they might come near us. It seemed to me not a woman of that convention could have done a nobler thing than to have stepped over into that homeless-looking little house, saying, "Sister, I have come to trade places with you to-day. I'll do your work and you must go over and see and hear the women in the church."

There are great numbers of women who belong to no organization from the fact that circumstances give them no outlet from home. These are the women who need attention—right now, while they are rearing their families, and at the same time are compelled to work, work, work, all day and often far into the night in order to live at all. Before I was married I used to hear a great deal of how a mother should be treated during the months before her child's birth, how easy and cheerful everything should be made; but when I came to that place, no one, except my husband, raised a finger to make such surroundings possible for me. I wondered why?—and I wondered so terribly hard that I made the subject a study—with the conclusion: "What is everybody's business is nobody's business."

Organizations pay so much attention to the organization that they lose sight of the units of their efforts. When the mother who "never goes any place," happens to read of some convention where everything was so beautiful, flower-decked, silk-bannered, can she help wondering what direct benefit this meeting was to her and her sisters in co-distress? She wonders, too, why there is not a department for just such women as she, as well as for the rich who are sought in parlor-meetings. She wonders if her "man's" vote is not as good as that of the husband of the rich woman? She wonders why she should not be taught how to vote, if she gets a chance, as well as the rich woman. When she hears of departments for lumbermen, sailors, railroad men, she wonders why there is no department for their wives. When she thinks of their ignorance of the care and culture of childhood, the true relation of man and wife, and of how often some real necessary of life has to be dropped out of their homes for lack of means, she wonders why some great and influential woman does not think to beg for a fund to send some literature, steady dropping, into these pinched homes.

I wonder what per cent of working women who are rearing families belong to some organization? My unmarried sister came home from a great mothers' meeting overflowing with the wonderful things said about mothers. "Yes," I said, "and how many young mothers, now caring for their little flocks, were there?"

"Well, not many; not any, hardly, that I noticed. I guessed they would hear about it as I had."

I have stood on my feet working six days in the week too tired to go out on the seventh—and, as I have seen women driving leisurely about all these days, I have made a solemn compact with the Great Giver that if ever I am allowed to command a carriage some of these sore-footed mothers and longing little children shall ride.

I wrote to our evangelistic superintendent for the name of a book or pamphlet selling for from ten to twenty-five cents, that would teach how to cook simple, healthful dishes which limited means could afford; and for one also that would tell of a religion that hedged-in, working mothers could live in their homely lives—a religion we can feel over the kitchen stove, at the wash-tub, sweeping and scrubbing, the peace and comfort in our hearts of the personal touch with somebody who cares for us in our lonely, drudging life, somebody to help with knowledge and sympathy while we rear our children.

Our state superintendent said her sympathy went out for such women. I suppose every W. C. T. U. woman would say the same; but cannot the National crystallize this sympathy into a department for unorganized, working mothers? Some of those local unions that do not know what to do would find work for every member, work under which hearts that need their help would grow lighter, courage stronger, and faith "look up" once more. There would be no "dead" unions in this land if such searching local work were done; so it seems to one who looks over the rolling plains of Kansas with not another woman within the range of her eye.

THE POWER OF THE WHITE RIBBON.

BY ELLA B. WRIGHT.

I had spent the night in the country and was on my way to the city next morning, to attend one of the day sessions of the National Prohibition convention at Cincinnati. My train was wending its way down through Millcreek Valley—that hot-bed of breweries and distilleries. As I looked from the car window I could see the great chimneys belching forth volumes of black smoke that seemed to come from the very infernal regions, and the huge vats containing hundreds of gallons of the awful stuff to make men drunk, and the immense bonded warehouses, bearing the great seal of the United States. At the thought of it all tears came into my eyes; and I felt so bowed down and discouraged, saying to myself: "What's the use to try! It is like trying to mop out the Atlantic Ocean with a sponge."

Just at this point a modest little building rose before me, bearing the four magic letters "W. C. T. U."; it stood out in bold relief, as if to upbraid me for my lack of faith. I looked upon it, and then thought of that grand gathering at Music Hall, and I said, "Praise the Lord. God is not dead, and our country yet has life." Another thought came—of the burly saloonkeeper who sometimes makes us shiver with the malevolence of his glance at our white ribbon, as we pass his doors. "Ah, yes, Mr. Saloonkeeper," flashed out of my soul's darkness with the life of a great search-light, "there you are, but here we are—the minority, invincible with omnipotent God on its side!"

Had I been a homesick wanderer in a foreign land and all at once caught sight of the stars and stripes, I could not have rejoiced over it more. So, dear sisters, I give you this little incident, hoping that it may stimulate and strengthen those who sometimes feel discouraged; and wherever you find sin and iniquity abounding, there raise the white standard of the W. C. T. U.

WHAT A YOUNG MAN CAN DO FOR TEMPERANCE.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

It is a very common error to suppose that the temperance cause has relation only to those who have been made wretched by drink, and that temperance workers are of little account unless they have been drunkards.

The fact is that the influence of a young man who in cool blood chooses the right, on the bare-hand sense of it, is many fold greater on boys and men of his own age than is that of a man who having gone through the saloon and "got the worst of it," comes out against drink.

It is a splendid thing to be saved from drunkenness but infinitely more splendid to have been clean always. The men who lead in all professions, who weather the panics and fires and floods in mercantile pursuits, who sway the world by voice and pen, are, as a rule, those who have been clean from boyhood, and if a redeemed drunkard sometimes makes his mark in the world, it is a mark much lower than he could have made under conditions of abstinence from the beginning. Sometimes a rescued drunkard prizes opportunity more and works harder than he would have done otherwise, but in the whole range of silliness the climacteric imbecile is the young man who thinks it "smart" to drink. So, then, I should say a young man can do everything for the temperance cause.

On the political side the temperance cause is a young man's affair; old men will not change easily; their eyes are to the rear. If the question of prohibition were now presented to the Christian men of America as a new thing unentangled with party loyalty, prejudice and habit, every man of them would be an ultra-Prohibitionist. As Democrats and Republicans they have drifted into license and other dilatory policies askance from the view of real merit, and now they will drift on to the end, captive to a name, a tradition or a theory. If I were a young man I would keep clean, and that is the first thing for any man to do for any cause. Paul did his best for Timothy when he wrote to him, "Keep thyself pure."—Rest Islander.

LITTLE BRIDGET'S COUNTRY WEEK.

Through the bleak December day
Little pale-faced Bridget lay
On her shabby trundle bed,
Covered with a threadbare spread.

Little Bridget lay alone,
Trying not to cry or moan
For her mother, who must stay
Out at work the livelong day.

Poor the room was, poor and plain;
But the narrow window pane
Let her out into free air,
Into landscapes wide and fair.

Out beyond the dreary street
Sped her fancy's flying feet,
Over hillside, meadow, dell.
Ah! she knew it all so well!

Once, when summer days were long,
Once, when she was brisk and strong,
Kind hands bore her far away
Into the green fields to play.

Oh, the happy Country Week,
When the children went to seek Flowers and sunshine on the hills,
Far away from city ills!

Little Bridget lived it over;
Smelt again the sweet red clover;
Watched the frisky squirrels play,
Fed the birds and tossed the hay.

All the beautiful wild flowers
Came to cheer her lonesome hours;
Smiling, one by one, they came—
Blossoms she had learned to name:

Hardhack, with its pale, pink spire;
Cardinals, flashing crimson fire;
Golden daisies, through the bars
Shining up at her like stars.

Once more, on the river's breast
Large white lilies swayed in rest;
Waved for her the meadow-sweet;
Pussy-clover brushed her feet.

Once again her footsteps turn
Toward the woodlands, fresh with fern;
Up the hill and down the lane;
'Twas the Country Week again.

Little Bridget's eyes were bright
When her mother came that night.
"Thoughts have wings," she said, "and
With them through the window fly.

"I forget the cold," she said,
"I forget my aching head,
While I wander, long, long hours
As I used to, gathering flowers."

Brighter little Bridget's eyes
Shone with wonder and surprise,
Gazing on her window pane
When the morning dawned again.

Who had been there in the night,
Tracing, all in outlines white,
Blossoms, ferns and feathery grass
On her little square of glass?

Nodding harebells, daisy-stars,
Pine-clad cliffs, and even the bars
That she used to clamber through
Into fields where lilies grew.

Down the chill gray dawning fell
Echoes of a Christmas bell!
Little Bridget scarce could speak,
But a flush suffused her cheek,

And her heart with joy grew faint.
"Mother, did the angels paint
Flowers and ferns I used to see
For a Christmas gift to me?

"More than common flowers they seem;
Mine in many a happy dream
They have been before; they grow
In the fields of heaven, I know.

"In my dreams they bloom so fair,
And the little children there
With me lovely blossoms seek—
Heaven is like the Country Week."

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

XIV.

The biggest little annoyance about doors presents itself in the shape of catches that won't slip so as to latch the door. Impatient people who do not govern themselves as they ought, try three times, and then give a tremendous bang that loosens the plaster and makes self-controlled people wonder why any one will be impatient with inanimate things. In most of these cases you can cure them for a month by simply applying a drop of oil or lard the size of a pin's head. Like flattery, you know. Oil in mechanics is like flattery among people—or, I might say, it is like judicious praise. I hope you let your mothers know how you love them, and how well you think they do things. Then oil the hinges. I have known people to allow the most unearthly screeches from dry hinges for weeks, when a drop of oil would have silenced them. Me, Dick? Look here, boy, don't be too personal. If you follow my advice, it will be enough for your doors. No matter whether you practice what you preach, or not, if the preaching is good. See to it, all seven of you, that every door in your respective houses is properly "praised."

Now comes the rubbing. Many houses and some doors will settle. Generally there is no remedy but to cut the door. My favorite motto is this: The way to do a thing is to do it. So you just tackle every friction-door you can find. Use a plane, generally; sometimes a spokeshave. You need no directions beyond the order to get at it. I might say that you will occasionally find it convenient in locating a friction where you cannot see, to use a slip of paper, sliding it along until it catches. And when you find a door sticking at top or bottom and must go through, do not push hard and wrench the door, as I have often seen, but lift up or bear down on the knob and surprise everybody at your skill in door-taming.

When a knob comes off, you cannot dig the metal out, but you can heat the iron and melt it back to its place. Add a little solder, and leave the spindle in, lest the solder get in its way. Let the knob cool off slowly. Water would crack it. Fine white knobs sometimes break from the heat, but you can save some of these and all the others.

There are many other things about doors that often require attention; but you will generally be able to decide what to do. I must tell you one thing and it will apply to other work as well. Suppose you want to move the metal piece which the door catches into, about half the diameter of the screw holes. First drive solid plugs into the holes, cut them off smooth and then make a new hole for the screw wherever you want it.

There are always some doors—barn, granary, chicken-house—where you go in and pull the door after you, that is, the door opens outward. Hook and staple is the common fastening. Buttons are more convenient if made like mine, as well as being cheaper and easier applied. Yes, here is one. It is a handle and button combined. Take a 1x2x6 and cut it half off two inches from one end and half off on the other edge, two inches from the other end. Split out to the ends and see what a crooked stick you have. One end is the button, the other is the handle. Make the screw hole one and a half inches from the end and use a washer. If that is plain let me say that the cutting should be done with a knife, so there will be no sharp corners to lessen the strength and start a split. This size is for light doors.

I must crowd in one more thing this time for your vacation is coming and I may not see you soon again after next time. This is a picture hanger. No ladders and no climbing and no falls, and you can change pictures around as easily as if the nails were all within reach of your hand. Get a piece like the one you had for the button, 1x2x6. Saw two inches into one end, half an inch from each edge and take out the middle. This fork must be large enough to go over any picture nail you have. Now cut a groove in the end of each tine so that the cord will lie across from one to the other. Nail this block to any kind of a pole, put the cord across, hold the picture in one hand and place the fork over the nail. So far so good, but how about taking a picture down? The cord lies against the wall and you cannot get under it. The fork is not finished yet. Make a groove in the outside of each tine, running an inch or two down the side. Leave full thickness of board at end of tines and make edges of side grooves sharp. Now slide up toward the nail and the cord will slip into the side grooves and be lifted so as to come into the end grooves. I have seen people quite ecstatic over this simple device—and I like it myself.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Search on your closet shelves, gather up the school books, the pencils, slates, pens and paper, for the "good times" are coming and the happy schooldays will soon commence. Glad? Of course you are! You give just a little sigh at the thought of the lazy and delightful vacation days—but you have had enough of these. You are rested and ready for the real happiness which comes in doing the duty nearest you. So it is with a great deal of pleasure that you hunt for the discarded school books which you have outgrown and which will now be studied by the younger brother or sister, while you go on to newer fields. Is there anything so inviting as a crisp new school book? Nothing, unless it is the old one which Sue or Harry had last year and which you are certain you can master if they did. Just the happiest days you ever had may yours be in the schoolroom the coming winter!

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

And I, too, hope they never will. You can belong to the L. T. L., Jessie, by sending your name on a pledge card to Mrs. Helen G. Rice, 1597 Washington St., Boston, Mass. You can wear an L. T. L. badge, and to know all about what others are doing send for The Young Crusader, W. T. P. A., The Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

I am a boy nearly thirteen years old, and would like to join the Cozy Corner. I have signed the pledge, and my sister was a page for the W. C. T. U. Convention that was held in Denver. I think the watchword is temperance. This is all this time from a temperance boy.

Let us therefore follow after the things that make for peace.—Rom. 14:19.

THE GOSPEL OF REST.

It is a divine gospel. It antedates the year 1 A. D.; it goes back to the thunders of Sinai, and the tables of stone. Side by side with the other commands of the decalogue comes the command to rest. It was further emphasized in the Mosaic dispensation, by the setting aside of a Sabbatic year as well as a seventh day. The Master's life, busy as it was, was still full of restful interludes, sweet breathing places, quiet little turnings aside from the strain and toil of that life whose record was summed up in the words, "He went about doing good." "Come ye into a desert place apart and rest awhile," were His words to His disciples.

The Bible is full of rest. "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him." "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." "I will give you rest." What do the commands for the keeping of the Sabbath day mean except the divine indorsement of the need of human rest? Can we really believe that the seventh day is dearer or more sacred to God than any other of the days of the week, or that He issued the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," because of a need in the divine nature for one particular day upon which He might be reverenced? The Sabbath has often been presented in this light, and it is not to be wondered at that from such a presentation men should turn away, preferring the license of a pleasure-seeking Sabbath, or else ignoring the day altogether, rather than concede that God could claim a seventh of man's time because of any inherent need of His own nature, or because of any benefit which could accrue to Him from the same.

The Sabbath is a divine institution, but it bears its fullest stamp of divinity in the fact emphasized by the Master that it was "made for man." God's commands are all "for man," thus only are they God's. Not one has its origin on the self-ward side—if we can imagine such a side—of God's nature. He says, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," not because He selfishly craves love, but because man is only truly happy, only truly man as he loves God. The hush in the busy week, the cessation from toil, the quiet time for introspection and communion with God are necessities of man's physical and spiritual natures—therefore God commands the Sabbath day, primarily, be it noted, as a day of rest; secondarily, as a day of worship.

Probably no age in the world's history has so fully recognized the necessity for rest as does the present. It may be questioned whether it is always wisely recognized, but wisely or unwisely, we are become a nation of rest takers and pleasure seekers. The annual rush of tourists from one end of our land to the other has become as fully recognized a fact as the annual migration of the birds. We are constantly seeking "fresh fields and pastures new."

And yet, even during our vacation seasons, how many of us really rest? A glimpse into the crowded parlor of the average summer hotel, a good look into the faces of the vacationers on their homeward bound trips, would seem, in nine cases out of ten, to indicate that rest is a science unknown to the genus homo species Americanus. This is especially true of that subdivision of the genus and species known as the American woman. If it be true that the Briton takes his pleasures sadly, it is equally true that the American woman takes her pleasures too intently to admit of their really constituting pleasures. The American woman, if she be not already tired out by a year of hard work, usually succeeds in getting herself so while on her vacation or in preparing for it.

We have often admired the sagacity of that woman, who, when asked where she intended going for the summer, answered that she had not yet decided whether to get ready for a vacation and stay at home, or not get ready and go. She had strength for one, but not for both. We fear, alas! that the majority of us would have attempted to do both. "Not to get ready and go" is the very best prescription we know of for a truly delightful vacation. The hastily planned and executed trip, with its absence of bustle and delightful lack of traveling paraphernalia, is worth a dozen carefully prepared programs in which a Saratoga trunk represents much weariness of the flesh, both before, during, and after the journey.

That each woman, as each man, needs rest in the busy year we are positive; but it does not necessarily follow that that rest can only be secured away from home. Some of the most successful holidays, so far as rest and renewed strength are concerned, that we have ever known have been spent largely in a hammock on one's own piazza, with plenty of books, a little light fancy work, and absolute mental relaxation as tonics and sedatives. We have in thought a little white-ribboner who often enjoys a home vacation. She arranges religiously to have all heavy work out of the way before the month set aside for her vacation. The family is duly notified that, during that month, it is to picnic. Food of the simplest is prepared, and eaten so far as possible out of doors; not a bit of unnecessary work is done and sewing is relegated to the dim future. Company is not invited, or if self-invited, is informed that the mistress of the house is on a vacation, which is strictly true. At the end of her month or six weeks our friend comes forth far more refreshed than does the average vacationer who has roasted in some hot, stuffy room, or traveled weary miles on dusty trains.

But if change of scene be necessary, and not all women can rest at home, not all women live in the country, let it be so far as possible, complete change of scene. Let her that is in the valley flee to the mountains, and vice versa. Let the woman who has had a quiet, shut-in life, busy with household cares, go to the crowded summer meeting where she can have the rush of thought and the glad quickening of purpose which these places give. Let the woman who works with tongue and pen through the year avoid these places as if they were the very abomination of desolation. We know that if this rule were carried out inflexibly it would rob our summer schools of workers and speakers, but we insist upon it that they are working places and not resting places, and that the woman who "takes her vacation" in such a way would much better go without a vacation.

Not only a complete change of scene, but a complete change of thought is essential to a brain worker's rest. When one shuts the door of office, study or home she should shut out of her thought all memory of its cares or trials. We know this is much more easily said than done, and yet, that it can be done we can bear glad witness, for we have this year, if never before, done it. Just as few letters as it is possible for one to write, just as much out-of-doorsness as can be crowded into the limit of the hours, all these do busy women—and what W. C. T. U. women are not busy women?—need.

But, after all, the Bible rule is the very best rule for a vacation: "Rest in the Lord." Nature is God in His outward, tangible expression, and nature can help us, as nothing else save His indwelling Spirit can, to rest in Himself. By combining the two, the inward and the outward, we have the gospel of rest in its supremest analysis. She who seeks God upon the mountain side, by the seashore, by the babbling brook or in whatever quiet nook she may, if she has at the same time Himself in His divine outbreathing within, shall assuredly "find rest." For what other reason did the Master so often choose the forest and the mountain, the seashore and the desert place, except that He might there rest both body and soul with the outward expression of His Father?

Do you remember how Sidney Lanier brings out that thought in his "Ballad of the trees and the Master"?

"Into the woods my Master went
Fain forespent, forespent;
Into the woods my Master came, forespent with grief and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him,
The little grey leaves were kind to Him,
The thorn tree had a mind to Him when into the woods He came.

"Out of the woods my Master went
And He was well content;
Out of the woods my Master came, content with death and shame.
When death and shame would woo Him last,
From under the trees they drew Him last,
'Twas on a tree they slew Him last, when out of the woods He came."

The divine comfort and rest which the trees brought to the Master they have brought to many a one of His worn-out followers. Aye, and will bring until the toil is over and we have learned the blessed gospel of rest at His feet, as we cannot learn it here. But let us learn it here as fully as we may. We wish each white-ribboner for the coming year would sign a solemn pledge against over work and come to believe that it is as wicked as any other form of sin against the body. If she would but sign this pledge and keep it we should soon raise a pæan of victory over dethroned nervous prostration, and our work for God would be equal in power to the degree of our "rest" in Him and His world.

THE PEACE MOVEMENT.

The Peace Congress of the World's Columbian Exposition held last week testified more forcibly than any since the Woman's Congresses to the progress of civilization—to the power of Christianity and the advancement of Christ's kingdom upon earth. When men and women, representing leading nations on both sides of the Atlantic, meet upon a common platform to discuss plans for the maintenance of universal peace we may be sure that the day is not far distant when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Though the question of the substitution of arbitration for the weapons of war is being considered to-day chiefly from the standpoint of political and economic expediency the peace idea has its origin in that true religion which is inherent in human nature. We must not forget that the present peace movement owes much to the Society of Friends for their practical exemplification of Christianity as applied to war.

The recent congress in Chicago was the fifth annual meeting of an international organization for the promotion of peace, the first having convened in Paris during the Exposition of 1889. That landmark in history, the Pan-American Congress of 1889-90 was the result of the efforts of the Universal Peace Union and the National Arbitration. This notable congress, after sitting six months, summed up its deliberations in the declaration that "Hereafter it shall be a feature of American public law that all differences between American states shall be settled by arbitration," and an invitation was extended to all civilized nations to unite with them in a permanent treaty. This treaty was signed and subsequently ratified by all the South American states except Chile. Such an agreement between the independent powers of the western hemisphere is an immense step forward on the line of international peace.

The congress at Rome in 1891 urged among other things the abolishment of standing armies and the establishment of permanent courts of arbitration, national and international, and at the Berne convention last year the members pledged themselves to petition their respective governments to accept the invitation of the American states and sign the treaty. Switzerland and Denmark have already complied, and the question has received favorable consideration in other European parliaments. In view of the recent amicable decision in the Behring Sea matter, the Peace Congress of the present year could hardly have met at a more auspicious time or under more encouraging circumstances, and the formal ratification of the arbitration treaty by Great Britain may be confidently expected to follow without further delay.

The efforts of the peace workers are now directed toward the establishment of a permanent tribunal or High Court of nations to which all difficulties between the contracting parties shall be referred, and a resolution from the International Congress in Chicago will be presented to Queen Victoria and to President Cleveland, asking that the governments of Great Britain and the United States take initiatory steps to this end. With the strong support which the arbitration idea is receiving from leading statesmen in both Europe and America it is probable that a conference of nations will be called at an early date for the purpose of considering plans for the organization of such a tribunal.

And not only are statesmen and philanthropists the world over beginning to realize that "wisdom is better than the weapons of war," and are discussing the advisability of relegating the sword, the shell, and the warship to the barbaric ages—to the period of a nation's childhood, where they belong, but popular sentiment is making rapid strides in the same direction. Indeed, we believe the people have long been ready for a radical peace movement; we know the women people have, and if the true voice of this nation could have been heard upon this question thirty-two years ago, we should have had no civil war. This government would have contrived a way to decide the vexed question of "states' rights," and to free the slave in a manner satisfactory to North and South, and thus while not impairing its own dignity, have avoided the sacrifice of the best manhood of this young republic, the desolation of its homes and the destruction of its property, to say nothing of the bitterness which war always engenders and which it takes generations to efface.

In order to further the interests of peace among the masses we must, as was well urged by the congress, first reform our schools. We must reconstruct our histories and inculcate a higher idea of patriotism than that symbolized by the sword. We must not foster a martial spirit in the coming citizen by presenting to his impressionable mind, either through the medium of history or of pageantry, the "glories" of war and of conquest. We must also present to his view the dark side of the picture. We must show him the horrors and the savagery of war, the uselessness of it, and the evils which follow in its train.

There is a love which takes precedence of even love of native land, and that is love of humanity; and the nation which best serves the interests of humanity will find that it thereby best serves its own. For with nations as with individuals, only by working in coöperation can the highest degree of prosperity and development be attained.

The Peace movement began one thousand, eight hundred and ninety-three years ago, when "Peace on earth" was proclaimed as the law of the new dispensation, and when the Prince of Peace walked this earth as the embodiment of a Father's love, and passed through death that that love might be shed abroad and find lodgment in the hearts of all men. Hence, the command to "teach all nations"—to make them receptive of the power that makes for their highest happiness and development.

The W. C. T. U., through its department of peace and arbitration, is in active coöperation with the forces that are waging war against war. Realizing that peace is promotive of temperance and morality, and that war is antagonistic to all that Christian motherhood holds most dear, the white-ribbon host falls into line well toward the front of the procession, and wherever its pure and significant emblem finds its way (which is round the world) there the gospel of peace is taught as one of the principles of Christian temperance.

OUR COMING CONVENTIONS.

This is but the second occasion that we could speak of "our conventions," as but once previous have we had two conventions in conjunction. The first time was in Boston in 1891. All the delegates and visitors who were so fortunate as to attend the World's and National gatherings that year in the city by the sea will want to repeat their experiences in the city by the lake this year. Although white-ribboners by the thousands have already visited the Fair and cannot conveniently return, we are confident that many more thousands have reserved their inspection of the great Exposition until October, so that they may attend the notable conventions of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Unions. And they will be repaid in a double sense, for aside from the pleasures and privileges of the convention, there will be many added attractions to the Fair in October.

The World's meeting will be so linked to the National that although complete in itself it will be a sort of vestibule or introduction to the latter. The addresses of welcome and response for the two conventions will be delivered at the World's and much of the preliminary organization will be necessarily accomplished during the first two days, so that the National Convention will be all ready for business when it first opens.

The World's meeting will be honored by the attendance of the round-the-world missionaries, Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell. The former is already in this country, as our readers know, and the latter two, whose names have been so long and so pleasantly coupled that they seem almost as one, are expected to reach New York about the first of September. It is greatly to be regretted that Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, our first world missionary, is not able to be present. With the presence of all four of these heroic women, together with encouraging reports from Miss Alice Palmer, now of South Africa, and accounts of the noble and undying work of our self-martyred missionary, Mary Allen West, our World's meeting would need no other attractions. Lady Henry Somerset will be present, and the two World's superintendents of the younger divisions of our peaceful army, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes and Miss Anna Gordon, fresh from foreign trips, where they have been enlarging their mental horizon, as well as personally prosecuting the work in distant countries.

Further particulars of the coming conventions will be given from time to time, as the arrangements near completion. The following paragraphs from the Official Call, issued a few weeks ago, are well worth frequent repetition:

"We meet but a few weeks before the completion of the twentieth year since the Crusade of Christian women against the dram-shops of Ohio sounded the trumpet of alarm that called us forth to battle. Home protection was their watchword, and it is ours. They went forth in the power of the Spirit, as we have done, and so have victories been won for God and Home and Every Land.

"We stand for purity and truth in personal habits, in the customs of society and in the laws of the land. We meet in a city that has five thousand legalized saloons, and which in defiance of law allows the sale of liquor on the Fair grounds of the World's Exposition, and opens the gates of that great object-lesson on Sundays, contrary to its pledge made to the United States government. If the white ribbon women of America ever had reason to go upon their knees in prayer, and hide their faces in confusion for their country's shame, it will be at that Convention. The liquor traffic flaunts its red flag defiantly in places of power to which our white flag has by no means attained, nor will for many a weary day."

THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL.

For seven years we have published a daily paper during the National W. C. T. U. Convention, and we propose continuing the custom as long as there is a National Convention to report. The first issue of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL was at Minneapolis, in 1886. Since then we have published a daily each year, and are pleased that our hosts of readers claim that each succeeding issue is the best. We will not be true to this ratio of improvement if we do not eclipse all previous efforts this year. The Conventions taking place in THE UNION SIGNAL'S own city will enable us to do much more satisfactory work than is possible in a strange place. The compositors, proof-readers and printers of the regular weekly edition will attend faithfully to all the important mechanical details, and the editors will have the advantage of familiarity with surroundings, which is no small factor in the rush and anxiety incident to a daily paper.

This year we will have the added interest of the World's Convention to report. Although not yet determined, it is highly probable that the two days' sessions of the World's meetings will be reported in one issue of the daily and the second issue will begin with the National Convention.

There will be five issues as usual, and the price will be twenty-five cents for the five issues. The paper will be an evening issue instead of a morning. This was attempted for the first time at Denver last year, but was not an entire success, owing to lack of facilities in the printing office. The work being done at home this year, we are confident that we can have a sufficient number of copies at the Art Palace at the adjournment of the afternoon session. This will enable the delegates and visitors to mail copies of the paper to their home friends the same evening of publication, and many at a distance will be reading the next morning the account of the former day's proceedings. Of course we will not attempt to chronicle the full day's history in the evening paper, but we shall begin with the afternoon of one day and report that evening's and the next morning's session, up to adjournment at the noon hour.

We have secured the excellent stenographer, Mrs. Howard Kelley, whose services were so satisfactory at the Denver Convention. She is a court reporter of sixteen years' experience, and is capable of taking verbatim every sentence that is spoken from platform and delegation. The stay-at-homes may be assured that they will thus have the entire Convention to read, and the speakers may depend upon the printed report as producing their exact words.

Aside from the stenographic report, there will be pointed paragraphs of the personnel and minor incidents of the Convention, racy articles descriptive of Chicago and environments, and suggestions for visiting the World's Fair after the close of the Convention.

In short, it is the ambitious endeavor of editors, business manager, printers and every one connected with THE UNION SIGNAL force to make THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL a marvel of reportorial, editorial and typographical art. Look on page sixteen for the business manager's advance offer.

Who gives and hides the giving hand,
Nor counts on favor, fame or praise,
Shall find his smallest gift outweighs
The burden of the sea and land.

Who gives to whom hath naught been given
His gift in need, though small indeed,
As is the grass blade's wind-blown seed,
Is large as earth and rich as heaven.

—Whittier.

Dr. Kate Bushnell recently spoke at a temperance meeting in England, presided over (as such meetings often are in that country) by a chairman who did not belong to the temperance people and who said that "in America we ignored the, to his mind, just method of compensation to saloonkeepers, whose business was destroyed by prohibition." Whereupon Dr. Bushnell professed great surprise, saying, "Indeed, sir, we even compensate the men who violate our prohibition law, for they are furnished their clothing, lodging and board free of charge for a period of several months or years!" The audience did not see the point at first, but when it dawned on them they gave British cheer, for the English dearly love arguments conveyed by means of repartee.

Each grain of mica helps in the rearing of the mountain bastions; each coral insect losing itself, that it may survive, has its place at length and in after ages in laying the basis of a continent; each drop of heaven's rain or dew, lost to-day in its downward flight and absorbed in earth, fertilizes the land for the next year's crop. Each grain of sand wind-blown across desert or prairie, goes on its way to make up the barrier against the raging sea. The sheeted bloom of the wild-flowered prairie is not gathered in a day. The years waste their grasses and vegetation upon it; they rot and die, and spring forth again in the gorgeous hue, the splendor and glory of a wild, wide carpet of amazing beauty. Mountains and coal fields are not manufactured in heaven.

Gerrit Smith, that noble philanthropist of a past generation, said well and wisely: "No man's religion is better than his politics; his religion is pure whose politics are pure, and his religion is radically wrong whose politics are wrong."

Some of the leading Jewish women have asked to be elected on the councils of the synagogues in the hope that some day a woman will be elected warden. "It will be seen," a Jewess writes, "how unfair it is to separate us from our fathers and brothers and sons—if we have any—and put us up in a gallery (I always call it a hen-coop), just as if we were permitted to go to synagogue as a favor, and it did not matter if we never came. This does seem absurd, especially to those who, like myself, have to keep alight the lamp of Judaism in our homes and prepare the wick of the oil for the religious illumination of the minds of our children."

Jean Ingelow lives in a charming little home at Lexham Gardens, South Kensington. Here she gives, weekly, a dinner to poor people discharged from the hospitals, and is constantly helpful to less experienced literary workers. She works tremendously, and is just now full of enthusiasm over her own contribution to the World's Fair. She is ever one of those delightful enthusiasts who should live nine hundred and sixty-nine years for the cheer of their fellows. Miss Ingelow rests herself on botany, which she dips into "with the ardor of a neophyte and the discrimination of a scientist."

I noticed the other day an item headed "Grace Before Reading," quoting words from Charles Lamb to the effect that grace might as appropriately be said before the repasts of the mind as those of the body. The thought is good to pass on. A moment's prayer before one sits down to read a book or paper would tend to more thoughtful reading and more care to avoid harmful books. Carry the idea even farther—what might not be the glorious outcome if the first act of a business man or woman upon entering the day's duties behind desk or counter was an act of "grace," asking God's blessing upon all things done and said. "Holiness unto the Lord" is an ancient motto; it might be well to emblazon upon the dishes from which we eat and the tools with which we work. We need to remind ourselves more often than we do of our heavenly "calling."

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."

OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.

BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.

HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.

METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.

DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed in fifty languages. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britian, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

TSUDA SEN will speak at the World's Convention in October, on temperance work in Japan. Mr. Tsuda has been appointed a member of the International Jury of Awards for the World's Columbian Exposition, having arrived in this country July 21. More than one hundred temperance societies exist in Japan, twenty of which were established by him. He has been collecting material for the bell now on exhibition in the W. C. T. U. department at the World's Fair, during the past six years. About 1,300 pipes were melted for this bell, including those received by Miss West. He brought with him five dollars, the gift of the Yokohama Temperance Society for the Mary Allen West memorial.

THE RELATION OF THE B. W. T. A. TO THE W. W. C. T. U.

It is known to our members generally that the British Women's Temperance Association, by an amendment to its constitution voted on May 4, 1893, decided that its name should be as follows: "The British Women's Temperance Association, Federated to the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

This action involved, as was clearly understood, the payment of a yearly amount to the World's W. C. T. U. equal to a farthing per member of the B. W. T. A., such amount to be sent in a lump sum from headquarters by the treasurer of the B. W. T. A. to the World's W. C. T. U. Treasurer in Montreal, Canada, and to be collected by means of a meeting to be held annually, in which the work of the World's W. C. T. U. should be specially presented to the people and a collection asked. If this method did not suit the local auxiliaries, they were to hold a drawing-room meeting, a garden party, or to take the sum of one farthing each from the treasury of the branch, or to provide the amount in any way they thought best. Lady Henry Somerset stated that the arrears due, amounting to about £40, she would herself become responsible for, so that the organic union between the B. W. T. A. and the World's W. C. T. U. might not involve any financial burden save the payment of current dues. She also stated that she would help to defray the charges of this year. It is hardly necessary to mention that these dues will be sent to Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Canada, who is treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., not for any particular country, but for all the countries (nearly forty) that have become affiliated through their national societies of women to the great general society that includes them all.

It is not in order to send any dues whatever to the World's W. C. T. U. office in London, but to pass them along directly to the B. W. T. A. treasurer, Mrs. Shaen, Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, who will forward them to the World's W. C. T. U. treasurer in Canada.

No local branch is expected to seek affiliation as a branch with the World's W. C. T. U., the latter being made up of National societies of temperance and philanthropic women, and of these alone.

The existence of a branch or board of the World's W. C. T. U. in England is for the purpose of making the spirit and method of that society better known to the women of Great Britain and Ireland; but it does not seek to form local branches or in anywise to interfere with the work of the B. W. T. A., either as a national society or through its branches. Literature is sent out from the office of the World's W. C. T. U. for the purposes of information in the confident expectation that a more intelligent and earnest interest will be thereby awakened in the lines of work that are included in the program of the World's W. C. T. U. For years there was a World's W. C. T. U. board or committee in the United States with the object of acquainting the women of that country with the aims which the great world's society had in view, but not in anywise with the intention of confusing them as to principles or methods. This is precisely the aim of the World's W. C. T. U. in England, and if this position can be clearly maintained, there will be no misapprehension concerning the World's W. C. T. U. Headquarters, which are now removed to the Memorial Hall. It is natural that the World's W. C. T. U. should wish, in so great a country as ours, to have an office from which can go forth such a knowledge of its aims and methods as will make it better understood and more effective throughout the world. This is especially true of an office in London, because London is the centre of the world, and puts the officers in closer touch with all parts of Christendom.

CHINA.

THE YEAR'S WORK IN SHANGHAI.

In Shanghai during the year beginning October last we have, so far, had interesting meetings, though not so well attended—the social excepted—as those at Chinkiang, the attendance at ordinary meetings never exceeding fifty, and oftener being below thirty.

Last November, Mrs. Farnham, President of the National W. C. T. U. for China, read a paper on "The History of Temperance Work in Shanghai and throughout China Generally": in December, Mrs. Clark (wife of Father Endeavor Clark) gave an account of Junior Christian Endeavor work in America: in January, Mrs. Fitch read a paper on what she saw of W. C. T. U. work while recently at home in America; in February Mrs. Wheeler read a paper on "Treatment for the Cure of Inebriates"; in March, there was a very successful social, over eighty attending, at which there was good speaking, good music, recitations, etc.; in April, Mr. Box, of the London Mission, gave us an earnest address: in May, Dr. Corbett, of Chefoo, whose late wife was a Crusader, gave us a stirring address: in June, we had an interesting discussion on Sabbath observance. We do not again meet until October.

The Band of Hope has been energetically carried on by Mrs. Wheeler and Mrs. Matheson; usual attendance about forty.

THE UNION SIGNAL is always very stimulating to all friends of temperance in China.

CHINKIANG W. C. T. U. REPORT.

The temperance year under review records ten meetings with an average attendance at each of fifty-four persons. Ten new members have been added to the association. Early in the year it received a letter from Miss Anna Gordon in acknowledgment of the cards sent for the L. T. L. display at the Exposition. A memorial service in honor of Mrs. Emery, our vice-president, was held in the fifth moon.

The levy of one dollar from each temperance union for Mrs. Leavitt's support was forwarded to the World's treasury.

The mite jugs, fifteen in number, yielded seventeen dollars and much enthusiasm. Two dollars were voted to the Salvation Army ladies from India for their rescue work; the balance was sent to the Temperance Temple, while the members in turn treasure Mrs. Carse's acknowledgment and photograph together with those of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Friends outside have contributed liberally in money and helps—among the latter a fine temperance chart which has its own telling way of showing the injury done the system in the use of narcotics and stimulants.

Another memorial service for Miss West took up one session most profitably, wherein was reviewed her birth, education, conversion, coming to Japan, her wonderful career there, the gift of the bell made of one thousand discarded metal pipes, tolled fifty-five times at her funeral service, its three language inscriptions, and its final resting place in the Temple, to be used in calling "whosoever will," to come and partake of the water of life. Pictures of her girl and womanhood homes were drawn on the blackboard, while her portrait still remains on the wall to remind us what one W. C. T. U. woman can achieve when her love of Christ makes her forget self and think only of others.

Self-denial week was duly observed and $8.70 was the result of the saving. Some of the members denied themselves meat, and another took a cheaper dress and put the difference in the self-denial fund. But in view of the high exchange this sum at gold value would be so insignificant, it was decided to send it to the Shensi sufferers this year instead of to the temperance missionary fund.

Our pastor—Mr. Kupfer—in accordance with his own personal temperance sympathies, preached a temperance sermon. At our last meeting the forty-one departments of the W. C. T. U. work were partly reviewed and a few explained in order to make us better acquainted with the scope and methods of its working. Questions were asked about the present status of the Great Petition with its 3,000,000 names and its twelve miles of length and what was to be done with it, also about the Temple, which were answered as well as our light permitted.

The interest in temperance doings and achievements increase as they grow in familiarity. There is little else we can do. It is preparatory work mainly—getting ourselves in working order against the time when the Lord wants trained laborers in this field.

QUEENSLAND JOTTINGS.

Our work in this colony has been interrupted by the floods, and some of the unions had their books and papers destroyed. The rainfall exceeded any previous record, and was placed in the category of "falling skies and flying pigs." Union meetings were converted into sewing meetings for "flood relief," and hundreds of garments found their way into homes which had been made destitute by the unheard-of visitation.

Notwithstanding difficulties and discouragements we are pressing on determined that

"Where the vanguard rests to-day,
The rear shall rest to-morrow."

The visit of our two dear sisters (Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushneli) gave to our work a great impetus. Their bright, practical teaching is continually bearing fruit. The social purity department, with a real live superintendent, is brought prominently before the public. Each of our superintendents is firmly convinced that her own department is the most important.

The union at Bundaberg has been reorganized; the Paradise gold field has been visited by our organizer, and the women have taken up the work as though they loved it. The Bundaberg union was first started by Miss Ackermann, but for want of leaders who could devote time and energy to the work, was allowed to lapse. This was laid upon the hearts of some of our women, and earnest prayer was offered that some one might be sent who would take sufficient interest in the work to devote the necessary time and energy, when lo! the women are sent; and our cause, the cause of God and of right, is assisting the churches in their work of uplifting the masses.

A very pleasing feature of our work is the interest taken by the young people; L. T. L's and Y unions are becoming popular. The Y girls take up work which no one else would think of, always planning pleasant surprises for the poor children, warm clothing in winter, etc., etc. The children are gathered together, entertained by the girls; after a sumptuous tea, addresses, etc., each child receives a present. The Gympie Y's gave testaments. The same union, through its flower mission, visits the hospital at Christmas and presents each patient with a fan tied with white ribbon. As Christmas is our midsummer, you may imagine how the patients bless the white ribbon girls.

A Loyal Temperance Legion has been formed at Silkstone near Ipswich, and has already sixty members. The Ipswich union works all the year round, takes no recess, holds its meeting through the hottest weather, and at Christmas goes out into the public thoroughfares, fixes up an inviting looking stall, selling temperance drinks, distributing literature, and obtaining signatures to the pledge. Quiet, but enduring work is thus done for the Master. The work is His and shall be victorious.

WOMAN'S WORK IN SPAIN.

As a field must be cleared of stubble and stones, and life-giving elements be mingled with the impoverished soil that the seed sown may fructify, so in such a land as Spain the sowing of the gospel seed must be preceded by toilsome and lengthy preparation.

There are to-day groups of praying women in all our churches. They are banded together as Maternal Associations. A few of the members of the original association, formed eighteen years ago, are still in Santander and with others hold their monthly meetings under the lead of the Senora de Tienda, the wife of the pastor.

The meetings of the women of Logroño have been continued with special interest this year.

Through these associations and others in Madrid we were able to secure 490 signatures to the World's Petition of the W. C. T. U. to the governments of the world against the manufacture and sale of alcohol and opium.

This year we have reorganized the mothers' meeting in San Sebastian and have had monthly prayer-meetings followed by a social hour when we could become better acquainted. The mothers of the day-school children have shown much interest, especially in the fact that their children are remembered in prayer by name as their birthdays occur month by month.

Many of them are Roman Catholics and do not come to the chapel, but they see "no harm" in praying for their children. The children are all members of the Junior C. E. Society.

In the month of June Mrs. F. E. Clark gave a very interesting account of her journey around the world to the women.

A visit from Dr. F. E. Clark and Mrs. Clark has been a wonderful stimulus to the school, and Christian Endeavor has received a strong impulse.

Miss Anna Gordon, superintendent of World's juvenile temperance work, has also been with us and has there gathered into a permanent fold the beginnings of temperance societies among the older and younger pupils.

Beside the exhibit of work sent to the World's Fair, the signatures of 612 children on cards tied together with Spanish colors, were forwarded for the temperance department. Alice Gordon Gulick, San Sebastian, Spain.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

The fourth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Natal, So. Africa, was held at Verulam, June 20, 21, 22.

Eight dollars for the Mary Allen West memorial from the Red Cross Society and the W. C. T. U. of Tokio, Japan, were brought by Sho Nemoto.

The Australasian W. C. T. U. has appointed Mrs. M. M. Love honorary life president, and its representative at the coming World's W. C. T. U. Convention.

Owing to the recall of Mr. Wallace, the United States Consul at Sydney, New South Wales, the W. C. T. U. there will lose a valued worker, of ladylike and amiable personality, Mrs. Catherine Wallace.

The Columbian Y of San Sebastian, Spain, was organized by Miss Anna Gordon, July 12, and is composed of girl students at the Colejio Americano, who were indoctrinated in temperance principles by their faithful teacher, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick.

At the suggestion of Mrs. Brelsford, who has just resigned the vice-presidency for Brazil in the World's W. C. T. U., Mrs. Francisca B. Nelson has been appointed to that office. Mrs. Nelson and her husband have been most active workers in Brazil, having translated the World's Petition at their own expense and sent it to every Portuguese speaking people known, even to Africa. With the Petition they also sent an appeal. This appointment augurs well for temperance work in the Brazilian republic.

Two years ago Miss Alys Pearsall Smith, the new general secretary of the B. W. T. A. for work among young women, started a club for factory girls in Somerstown, Lady Henry Somerset's London property. These girls were from a licorice factory, and were probably as rough and untaught specimens of girl humanity as could be found anywhere—most of them were from drunken homes, and themselves accustomed to entering public houses freely. This latter fact may account for their being much rougher than girls of the same class in America. At first it was difficult to do anything with them except to give them a little recreation in the evenings after their hard day's work. As a specimen of their roughness, which may interest American readers who "never saw the like," it may be mentioned that on their being taken for a trip to Reigate they leaned out of the railway carriage and kissed every porter they could take hold of, and in the village they rushed up to every man who looked at all approachable and whirled off into a dance. This, however, was the first year of the club; they have now become quite ladylike and proper in their behavior, and very much interested in learning dressmaking, bonnet trimming and various other feminine arts. They have formed a committee in which they conduct the business of the club according to the best parliamentary rules; they write essays, very quaint and characteristic, on subjects likely to interest them,—"How to walk out with your young man," "How to spend holidays," "How to treat your mother," etc., and are becoming eagerly interested in the social questions of the day. A great many of them have been induced to sign the pledge, and while there are occasional outbursts of the old lawless spirit, they are learning to take their part with womanly dignity in the battle of life. A good many of them save up their money for a summer outing at Fernhurst, the summer home of their leader. This club is now carried on in the mission building erected by Lady Henry Somerset in Somerstown, and the sisters of Hugh Price Hughes' mission help in the work.

News from the Field.

TEXAS.

SUMMER LIGHTS.

At the state convention our president, Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, was granted three months vacation on account of ill health. Most of the time will be spent at the World's Fair absorbing ideas for the benefit of W. C. T. U. work in Texas. We can all echo the sentiments of a writer in the last White Ribbon in reference to Mrs. Stoddard: "God grant to restore her to our Texas work in health and hopefulness!"

Fort Worth union observed flower mission day by taking flowers to the jail and hospital. Two women signed the pledge. Rev. Mr. Buchanan of the Cumberland Presbyterian church conducted the services.

The Smithville L. T. L. entertainment was a credit to them. Seventeen dollars and fifty cents represent the financial success. It was sent to the treasurer for the Beauchamp tablet and the Temple.

Revs. Jones and Stuart held a fine meeting in Dallas. As a result a new W. C. T. U. was organized in Oak Cliff and many members were added to the Dallas union.

The Texas Blue Violet, adopted at the convention as the organ of the state L. T. L., is edited by a little girl, Norma Mow, and is published at Dallas. It is a bright, well-printed sheet and will, I trust, add many members to the L. T. L. The editor proposes, with the assistance of the Texas L. T. L., to put a tablet in the Temple with Miss Mary Hetherington's name on it. Miss Hetherington was greatly missed by her old friends at the convention.

Mrs. Pennel has taken charge of the Texas White Ribbon, and promises to do her best. We all know "angels can do no more," and have no fear of the result.

Mrs. W. D. Knowles, for so long the faithful business manager of our state paper, has been called to Indiana to the burial of her only sister. She has the sincere sympathy of all her Texas sisters.

San Antonio unions are trying to have a police matron installed, and have the promise of the mayor's assistance. West End union feels that it is passing through deep waters now. The president, Mrs. Carter, is spending the summer in the Tennessee mountains. Mrs. Rountree, vice-president and faithful superintendent of L. T. L. work, is in Ohio in very bad health. Mrs. Golden, the indefatigable corresponding secretary, came near having a sunstroke. Mrs. Jackson, the efficient secretary and superintendent of press work, has broken down from overwork on her paper, the Argus, which I am glad to see enlarged and improved in every way, but sorry it had to be at the expense of her health.

Miss Rosa Bates, than whom a better treasurer never held office, is very ill at Lakeside Hotel in West End. Do not be discouraged. The summer of our discontent will soon be past and with the cool days all will, we trust, be ready for work.

The prison work goes on regularly under the guidance of Mrs. Chaffin and Mrs. S. H. Jackson. There have been several conversions recently and a number have signed the pledge. Cornelia Keith Carter,
State Reporter, San Antonio.

MISSOURI.

LOCAL NOTES.

The eighth district speaks enthusiastically of the work done by Miss Carrie Lee Carter and the good accomplished through Mrs. Alice Williams' presentation of her important subject (Purity). Rev. Anna Shaw lectured at Brookfield one afternoon and evening on "The American Home." By especial invitation she occupied the pulpit in the M. E. Church, South, at that place. Her coming was a great uplift to Brookfield. Marceline has a new union consisting of fourteen active and five honorary members. Mrs. Hoffman has recently visited them and addressed an audience, many of whom had never before listened to the voice of woman from the platform, pleading for home and country. Mrs. Hoffman has spoken at Osceola, Harrisonville and other points throughout the state.

The W. C. T. U. of Kansas City has held two mass-meetings. The superintendent of foreign work and Mrs. Hawley have each lectured before the Swedish temperance Society. The union of unions meets monthly; railroad work is being actively carried on by its superintendent; noon meetings are held in shops, and families are visited. The flower mission constantly does its work in jails and hospitals. Three medal contests (one colored) have been held within the last month,

Miss Lillian Wood gave one lecture at El Dorado Springs and held a parlor meeting, resulting in nine new members, two of whom are honorary. El Dorado has had one contest. The superintendent of parlor socials and mothers' meetings will doubtless push forward the work. El Dorado has no jails and no almshouses; it is a watering place and many invalids come hither to be healed, so flower mission day witnessed many white ribbon bouquets and Bible texts carried to the sick and received in return their blessings. Colleges and editors were also remembered.

Harrisonville W. C. T. U. cook-books are on sale at that place at fifty cents per copy. Outside unions get them at their own price, sending the Harrisonville union one-half the proceeds. Why not take some? The state superintendent of narcotics is trying to interest doctors, teachers and preachers in her subject. The narcotics resolution will be voted on by the Normal at this place. The chalk-talk given by Mrs. DeHaven was ever so good.

A successful convention was held at Trenton under the direction of Mrs. Ida Burr, president of the third district. The union was strengthened by new members and by the well-attended lectures given by Miss Carter. The Y's here are in earnest and must succeed.

The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction is pushing the work in the tenth district, writing every union and urging the county school commissioners and teachers to vote in their institutes against the sale of tobacco to minors. Most unions will be visited by the district president before the state convention in October.

Medal contests are strengtheners for new unions. The new union at Willard has held two.

A union at Lindenwood has been organized with fourteen members. The lecture about economy and punctuality are useless without a practical application. You waste precious minutes with an uncertain watch; and if it is a costly one, there's the expense of risking it every day. The need is for an accurate, low-priced watch that has all the improvements and plenty of "style,"—the new quick-winding Waterbury covers these points. Both ladies' and gentlemen's styles, and a style for boys. It is stem-winding and setting; and has a jeweled movement cased in filled gold (14-karat), coin-silver, etc. $4 to $15.

In morning sickness, Burnham's Clam Bouillon is a specific that gives instant relief and tones the stomach for other foods. Take it first thing in the morning, hot or iced as preferred, dilute to suit taste; it soothes the stomach and drives off all feeling of nausea. A little fresh milk or butter renders it more palatable to some. Serve in cup and season to suit. It supplies the place of tea, coffee or cocoa at breakfast.

Sold by every jeweler, in all sizes and styles. An elegant and accurate time-keeper. 27 given by Mrs. Ormiston Chant was an inspiration. Mrs. Chant preached for Dr. De Learned (Unitarian); and she lectured for the South Side nursery.

When Fairplay closed her school she had a successful medal contest in connection with the general school exercises. Mrs. De Haven has been here and delighted the children and grown people with her chalk-talk, and Miss Wood's lecture strengthened the union.

The social event of Osceola is the monthly Reading Circle. Light refreshments are served, choice music rendered, and varied exercises introduced, among which the collection is the constant variation. Here, again, the children were delighted with Mrs. De Haven's chalk talk.

The Holt county school of methods was a grand success. At the meeting a discussion as to whether the column in the newspaper should go under the heading "Woman's Column" and contain general news concerning women and temperance, or whether under the heading W. C. T. U. or Temperance Column, resulted in a decision to adhere to the latter headings. A touching memorial service in honor of the "promoted soldiers," Mrs. S. Scott, of Oregon, and Mrs. Dills, of Maitland, was conducted by Miss Wood. Mrs. Hoffman concluded the service, giving her ideas concerning this change which must come to us all. In any school of methods, scientific temperance instruction should not be omitted, and good plans for work in this department were laid. Miss Ella O'Fallern was unanimously elected district vice-president for Holt county. A medal contest was the climax of the school, and Miss Jessie Wilson, of Craig, was awarded the prize.

Preparations are being made by our state executive for the coming state convention the last of September and first of October, and we hope to have the best and largest gathering of women our state has ever known. Noted National speakers are expected to be present. No W. C. T. U. worker or woman interested in the cause should miss attending. Sedalia, the fine little city in which the convention is to meet, undertakes to entertain all delegates who will come. We hope for a full representation from the districts newly organized and the many new locals organized since last state convention.

KENTUCKY.

MARCHING ON.

Like John Brown, the temperance work "goes marching on" right on—quietly but steadily. We feel that we are "getting there."

Lancaster has scored a great victory, and Mrs. Hubble asked me to tell you how it was won. Rev. J. C. Frank, pastor of the Christian church, was the leader in the fight for the homes, the mothers and the boys in Lancaster and in this he was nobly assisted by the other local ministers of the town and adjoining counties. It was a strong pull altogether, ministers, citizens and all, against the foe. Lectures day and night for two weeks, brass band made "music on the air" as the liquorites have reason to remember, and the W. C. T. U. women in the street election day, all with the one purpose—by the grace of God to put whisky out of town.

The union women were at their headquarters early, opposite the place of voting, when they were joined by sympathizing friends, and the entire day was spent in prayer, song and Scripture reading. Is it any wonder that when the sun went down they were able to say, "We have met the enemy and they are ours." The men said it gave them heart and courage when they heard those sweet songs and knew the women were praying for them. The liquor combination worked too. Handbills were posted in front of every church in town denouncing the temperance people, and every device known was used; but God gave a glorious victory to His people. Praise His holy name! "Our brothers in black" came to the polls and cast their votes on the right side. The election was carried by two hundred and seventy-one. The W. C. T. U. will have this magic number printed on cards which will be sold for a small sum; the people will be requested to hang them up in their houses, so that any asking what "271" means can be told that it means dry times in Lancaster from this time forward.

A great praise meeting was held in the court house in the evening, and it was a praise meeting sure enough. Eighteen new members have been added to the union since the election. The attendance is good, and the flower mission and mothers' meeting are some of the work reported. Several suffrage meetings have been held.

Bowling Green went dry by a small majority, and in the campaign the W. C. T. U. did some splendid work, but we regret to say that by some "tricks that were dark" the election has been declared illegal, so whisky has again come back to that city. Mrs. Grimsted, a bright, courageous little W. C. T. U. woman is editing a little Reformer down there, and is doing good work so we hope yet that she'll reform-'er (Bowling Green) from the error of her ways.

Greensburgh is a lovely union in the quality of her work, and in the women who do it so faithfully In His Name. Their flower mission is especially commendable.

Owensboro is flourishing and spreading herself like a green bay tree—two hundred and twenty members and the temperance sentiment steadily gaining favor. Mrs. Fields, of Paducah, came up and organized an L. T. L. Quite a large number of children enrolled for membership.

The state convention has been invited to meet there September 22 to 25, and in looking forward we feel there is a good time coming. Paducah has two hundred members. Hopkinsville over two hundred, while a new union has been organized at Newport and from all parts of the state this is the news, new members, good work. So that we feel that this has been a sort of tidal wave year for temperance and the W. C. T. U. It makes our heart sing for joy. "The Lord hath done great things whereof we are glad."

Lebanon union has been greatly helped and encouraged by a visit from the state president, Mrs. Munnell. She is so full of her work, so sweet and womanly in her ways of work that a "little better she will surely make you" if you come in contact with her. Now in view of all these things, don't you think we can take up the refrain, Glory, glory, hallelujah! Kentucky's marching on.!

IDAHO.

SECOND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The second district convention of North Idaho, W. C. T. U. was held at Lewiston in the Christian church early in the summer. The convention was called to order on the first morning by the state organizer, Mrs. R. Mitchell: Mrs. Thatcher, president of the Lewiston union, gave the address of welcome which was responded to by Mrs. McFarland of Moscow. The chairman of the committee on credentials reported sixteen delegates present. Mrs. Mitchell read a very interesting report of her work in North Idaho. Reports of the different unions were then given. Mrs. Hogue, of Moscow, conducted the noontide prayer, after which the convention adjourned.

The afternoon meeting commenced with devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. Coursen, of Moscow, who also read a very interesting paper, the subject of which was "Our Work." Mrs. O'Neal, of Lewiston, read a paper on "Woman's Suffrage." Rev. Mr. Haven then pronounced the benediction.

The second day's meeting was devoted to the election of officers and reading of papers. In the afternoon Mrs. Mitchell conducted memorial services for the deceased president, Mrs. Louisa Walker. The evening meeting was devoted to music, reading and recitations.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Mrs. Daisy Babb, of Lewiston, president; Mrs. Clara Coursen, of Moscow, vice-president; Mrs. Neal, of Lewiston, corresponding secretary; Miss Leota Harris, of Kendrick, recording secretary; and Mrs. Davis, of Moscow, treasurer.

PENNSYLVANIA GLEANINGS.

During the hot season everybody seems to have taken a vacation, so very little is on hand to report.

Mercer county holds its annual country W. C. T. U. convention at Sharpsville, September 7 and 8. The Sharpsville Young Women's Christian Temperance Union will tender a reception to the Y delegates on the evening of September 9.

Crawford county holds its convention at Atlantic, September 15, and a grand gold medal contest will be held on one evening of the convention.

Armstrong county holds its eighth annual convention at Freeport, September 13 and 14. Rev. Anna Shaw is to be the speaker.

The state Loyal Temperance Legion convention was a great success. It was held at Phillipsburg and diplomas were presented to over sixty graduates. Mrs. Helen G. Rice was present and added much to the interest of the occasion by her helpful words.

Cambria county has had Miss Elizabeth Greenwood and Mrs. Helen G. Rice to lecture for it. These lectures were under the auspices of the Morrellville Y. W. C. T. U. at which place the county convention will be held.

Clearfield county held its annual convention at Houtzdale, August 2, with Rev. Anna Shaw as speaker.

Tuesday, August 29, is W. C. T. U. day at Williams' Grove. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of New York City, will be the speaker. Miss Elizabeth U. Yates, of Maine, was the W. C. T. U. speaker at Juniata Valley campmeeting at Newton Hamilton, Pa., August 10. Major Hilton expects to spend the month of September in Pennsylvania, holding evangelistic meetings; those wishing to secure his services may address him at Butler or Clearfield, Pa.

Mrs. Marian B. Baxter spoke on "Society as it is" at the United Presbyterian Synod at Conneaut Lake, August 15, and at Sandy Lake, August 17.

Miss Adda Burch has received the appointment of state superintendent of Cooper Contest Bureau.

One of our most active Pennsylvania Y's has gone over to the ranks where they "muster by twos"—Miss Annie Switzer, of Phillipsburg, who was recently united in marriage to Mr. Francis Curtis, of Orlanda, Fla.

We hope the press reporters will come out of their retirement and let the state reporter hear from them. Many of the counties in the state have not been heard from this year. My sisters, "these things ought not so to be."

ADDA BURCH,
State Reporter, Greenville.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

CLEARFIELD, Pa., is to have Major Hilton's services in September.

WHITE-RIBBONERS who know of her and her works will be sorry to hear of the illness of Mrs. Alice Williams, National lecturer in the department of purity, who has been obliged to cancel many important engagements. As soon as she is able her letters wi l receive attention.

WOR KERS in the juvenile department, who desire to arrange for children's Harvest-day, September 28, will find an excellent program in the Advance Guard for May. The "Labor Operetta" to be found in the August Young Crusader is a particularly appropriate and pretty exercise for children.

THE W. C. T. U. of Byron, N. Y., held a very pleasant parlor meeting on the afternoon of August 17, at the home of Mrs. L. A. Terry. Some thirty ladies were present to listen to Mrs. D. W. Howell, of Bergen county, superintendent of the department of franchise. Mrs. Howell succeeded in establishing that department in this union with Mrs. W. S. Green in charge. She also explained very clearly the law regarding women as voters at school meetings and for school commissioner. Her talk was both enjoyable and helpful. The ladies then took seats on the lawn and were served with ice cream and cake.

MRS. M. L. WELLS, National organizer, met with a serious accident by a fall from a vehicle in Demorest, Ga., August 3. She sustained a severe compound fracture of the collar bone, from which she suffers much and is very weak. With the best of medical attendance and care the prospect is good for her ultimate complete recovery. A Chattanooga paper commenting on the accident says: "Mrs. Wells is one of the best-known women in the South, and as a platform speaker has not a superior among her sex. Her life work has been in the advocacy of temperance, and few men or women in the country have done more for the cause. Here at home Mrs. Wells is esteemed for her unselfish devotion to her work and admired for her nobility of character and true womanly virtues."

"JUST think of having a temperance revival in August, 'when cistern stocks warp inside out, and pumps can only wheeze,'" writes an enthusiastic correspondent of Streator, Ill. "Dr. N. H. Tracy, the Kentucky temperance worker, has been holding a ten days' series of meetings here, in the large tabernacle that he carries with him in his work. Dr. Tracy, himself a very eloquent speaker, has a strong support in Col. John Sobieski and Professor Graham, with his stereopticon. The numerous stereopticon views given were much finer than ever seen in Streator before, even at high-priced entertainments. The W's here had decreased in number and were much discouraged, but at the close of Dr. Tracy's wives' and mothers' meeting, forty-one women pledged themselves to join the W. C. T. U. The L. T. L., the Y's protégé, had become so small, owing to lack of teachers and general want of interest on the parents' side, that the Sunday before the revival it was decided to take a month's vacation, perhaps give up entirely for awhile; but Dr. Tracy held a very enthusiastic children's meeting, and after one Sunday's vacation we started with some new teachers with quickened enthusiasm, love and courage. We commend these workers to any struggling, lukewarm, or even thriving unions. Dr. Tracy's address is Rogers Park, Ill. The Streator Y's have held six silver medal contests during the past three years, and this fall we are going to have a gold contest in our opera house."

LEGISLATION AND PETITIONS.

To the State Superintendents:

Some months ago blanks were sent to you asking for your report upon the work of your department during the year. I am hoping to have them returned soon with answers. Some of these question blanks were sent out by my predecessor and so I have not the names of every officer. I shall be thankful for the assistance of state presidents where there is no active superintendent. In addition to the questions already asked will you please reply to the following?

1. What legislative work of any kind did your state W. C. T. U. attempt this year and to what extent were your efforts successful?
2. What legislation has been demanded and what has been placed on the statute books which would touch the liquor question favorably or otherwise?
3. What effort has been put forward by your state union to secure the ballot for women and how near did you come to victory?
4. What has been done by other organizations to accomplish these two ends, the abolition of the liquor traffic and the enfranchisement of women?
5. Have you worked harmoniously with these other organizations?

I shall be grateful for early replies as I can write very few individual letters before convention time on account of serious illness in the family.

CATHARINE WAUGH MCCULLOCH,
Nat. Supt. of Legislation and Petitions.

W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION.

Will every reader of this article, who is interested in coffee houses, please send to me at once the address and facts concerning any coffee house in the United States of which he or she may know? I refer to those which have been instituted wholly or in part by the W. C. T. U. Travelers are asking for a directory and it is very desirable to prepare such a help to be placed in every coffee house in the land. If the necessary information is sent to me very soon we may hope to issue such a directory before the October Convention.

Yours in the work,
MRS. E. A. RUSSELL,
National Sup't W. C. T. U. Coffee Houses.

LUMBERMEN'S DEPARTMENT.

Will state superintendents, who have not sent their report of last winter's work to me, please do so at once? Every superintendent has been notified but may not have received the personal request. If the state secretaries of Michigan, Georgia and Washington will please send me their annual minutes, I can find something of their good work in that way, if the state superintendents are away from home.

The annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Iowa will be held in Oskaloosa, October 3, 4 and 5, instead of 4th, 5th and 6th as announced in Iowa Signal. Miss Jessie Ackermann will speak the evening of the 5th. Executive committee meeting Monday, October 2, at 3 p. m. We hope every union will be represented by at least one delegate.

MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Pres.
MISS BELLE H. MIX, Cor. Sec.

The Kansas W. C. T. U. will hold its annual convention at Junction City, September 26, 27, 28. Mrs. Woodbridge will deliver an address and a suffrage symposium will be one of the features of the meeting. S. A. THURSTON, Cor. Sec.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylvania will be held at Lancaster City, October 6 to 10, inclusive. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood will have charge of the 11 a. m. evangelistic services. Rev. Anna Shaw will speak on Saturday and Sunday evenings. Monday evening will be in the interest of Y work, and an address will be given by Miss Sanborn, on "Physical Culture."

ANNA M. HAMMER, Pres.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

The annual meeting of the association of the National Temperance Hospital and Sanitarium will be held at the hospital, Monday, September 4, 1 p. m. All members of the association are requested to be present and all friends invited to attend the meeting. ELLEN SNYDER, Sec'y.

OUR NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

The Ohio room at the hospital is one of the last to be furnished and is among the pleasantest in the house.

Nebraska, with her usual business ability and energy, is making ready to furnish a room at the hospital. She has issued a call asking for donations of towels, blankets, spreads, etc., and white-ribboners and unions of the state can contribute and thus have a stronger interest—because an individual effort has been expended in this institution that is seeking to demonstrate a principle that would eliminate alcohol in its medical treatment.

As Mrs. Sturges, of Ohio, has signified her intention to furnish the operating room, it will hereafter be known as the Sturges operating room. In this room no dormant appetite for strong drink will be aroused by administration of alcohol as a medicine.

Dr. A. E. T. Longhurst, in the Westminster Review, says: "If we look to the properties of alcohol we find scientists, both home and foreign, agreeing that in large doses it is a narcotic poison, killing by suffocation, through its paralyzing influence on the nerve centers, and in smaller but continuous doses, by the structural changes which it exerts in the several organs of the body. Chemically, it is a hydrocarbon, devoid of nitrogen, hence can give no real or permanent strength. By its action on the blood cells it checks oxidation by limiting their power of absorbing oxygen and eliminating carbonic acid, and by its strong affinity for water it dries up the tissues, causing thirst. Alcohol, therefore, in any quantity, interferes more or less with the purification of the blood and the healthy oxidation of the tissues. Such an action cannot but be a cause of disease and injurious in diseased conditions."

The names on the regular staff at the hospital so far as completed are as follows: Dr. Sarah Hackett Stephenson, President; Dr. S. W. Burson, Secretary; Dr. Graham, Dr. Marie Olson, Dr. Karl Sandberg, Dr. Gregory.

The homeopathic staff so far as completed stands as follows:

Dr. Boynton, Dr. Harbert, Dr. Hedges, Dr. Gentry.

DREAM OF THE AGES, a Poem of Columbia, by Kate Brownlee Sherwood, author of "Campfire and Memorial Day" and other poems. Illustrated with original drawings by J. E. Kelly and George W. Breck.

Published by the National Tribune, Washington, D. C.

DRIVEN OUT, a translation from the German of Gustav Neritz, by Mary E. Ireland. Mrs. Ireland has made a number of translations from the German, but this is one of the best. It is a story of Dresden life, with a strong temperance moral. Perhaps the most thrilling interest of the story centers about a woman who is a leper, and is compelled to leave her home and children and dwell outside the city. Her orphaned children live with their uncle, who is a brewer. Persecution of the Jews is another interesting feature of the story.

Published by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va.

SONGS FOR THE SHUT-INS, gathered and arranged by Mary Craige Yarrow is a beautiful little volume in crimson and white and gold covers, and packed full of sweet sayings of cheer and comfort, in prose and verse. Not every one knows that there is such a thing as the Shut-in Society. Its members are those who are shut behind doors of suffering from the busy world, and the associate members are the active ones who, by letters, books, papers, flowers, try to make life's burdens easier. May the little volume noticed above fulfill well its bright mission.

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, N. Y.

"THE MEMORIAL STORY OF AMERICA," comprising the important events, episodes and incidents which make up the record of four hundred years from the discovery of our country by Columbus to the year 1893. This is a beautiful volume of eight hundred and fifty pages, edited by that refined and gifted and literary man, Hamilton W. Mabie, and that out-and-out journalist, Marshall H. Bright, of New York. It has special papers from a dozen well-known experts, and three hundred and fifty illustrations, mostly by noted American artists. It is published by John Winston & Co., Philadelphia and Chicago. Every chapter is fresh, so that the publisher can justly say scissors and paste pot have had nothing to do with this notable souvenir of the world's history. The family-fortunate into which this book comes as a friend and counsellor; no farm-house need be dull whose young people can give an outline of the contents of this wide and friendly volume. It is better to own one book so inclusive than many that take a narrower view. The ancient and modern meet in these bright pages, and no drama was ever one part so fascinating as the real life that glows in every page.

PHILLIPS BROOKS IN BOSTON. Five years' editorial estimates. By M. C. Ayres, editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser.

This little volume of one hundred and twenty pages will have for many a unique interest. It is the notable record of a notable man, commented on by a friend and sympathizer from day to day and on the spot, through the culminating five years of the great bishop's life. The book contains an introduction by Rev. W. J. Tucker, D. D., professor in Andover Theological Seminary, and president-elect of Dartmouth College. The table of contents includes nearly thirty items,—the sections or brief chapters being devoted to topics such as these: A More Excellent way; Dr. Brooks' Lenten Lectures; Sentiment and Sentimentality; Preaching without Notes; Phillips Brooks' Power; Watch-night Meeting; Phillips Brooks and Lyman Abbott; Bishop of Massachusetts; Christ in Boston; Reaching the Masses; The Great Grief; A Teacher of Theology; The Last of Earth; The Bishop of Boston. As a whole, the subject-matter of this small book—a reprint of living words from day to day appearing—presents more vivid and life-like representations of the great Bishop's personality and power, and of the marked incidents in his career, than could possibly be secured from any backward look since his death.

Lactated Food Saved This Baby

"We are convinced that had it not been for the timely use of Lactated Food, Ruth would have died. When she was so sick that nothing would stay on her stomach, Dr. Wm. Gaylord advised the use of Lactated Food, and in a short time it worked wonders."

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong whom ye see and know; yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.—Acts 3:16.

The money for the Temple has been coming in in a very gratifying way these hard times, and we trust we shall be able to present a more encouraging report at the annual Convention than ever before. It would be a great help if the unions raising $100 would send the money in as rapidly as it is paid into the local treasurer's or superintendent's hands. We have a man at work now putting on the names of the unions that have completed their pledges since last spring. He will be here several weeks and we wish as many as can do so would send in the balance still due on their pledges.

Batesville, Ark., W. C. T. U. sends $24 on its pledge for a tablet in honor of its dearly loved and first president, Mrs. Esther A. Byers. Grand Ridge, Ill., union has $2.50 credited on its pledge this week. This amount was raised by John Rowe Baker, a little boy not quite four years old. He writes: "My grandpa said if I would get $1.50 in my mite-box he would put in one whole dollar, which he did and I am going to send it to you. I am going to keep the box and try and fill it again." Of course this little boy received the Columbian souvenir, the aluminum medal with a cut of the Temple on one side, and on the other a cut of Mrs. Carse's and Miss Willard's faces. Stockton, Mo., W. C. T. U. has completed its $100 pledge. Bristol, Ill., W. C. T. U., sends $10 on its $100 pledge.

Mrs. J. A. S. Curtis, treasurer of Texas W. C. T. U. sends $10.60 to be credited to the Key tablet; $1.40 of this amount is from Waco W. C. T. U., and $9.20 from Fort Worth, the latter amount being Baby Band money. Mrs. Ellen G. Clement, of Winchendon, Mass., contributed $2, $1 of which is for the Willard memorial. The West Boylston, Mass., Y's sends $2 for the Frances J. Barnes tablet. Mrs. E. Harriet Howe, and her sons of Converse, Ind., send $1 for the Whittier memorial. "A Friend" in Madison, Wis., sends $1 and writes: "When I was in Chicago, I saw the Temple and it far surpassed my highest expectations. It is simply superb and I want to help what I can. I inclose $1, and if I could would enjoy making it $100." Miss Mary E. Cunningham, of Sleepy Eye, Minn., sends $5. She visited the Temple in June and attended one of the noonday prayer-meetings in Willard Hall. She says: "I had faith in it (the Temple) before, but my faith was increased when my eyes beheld it; and I resolved to make a greater effort than ever before to help pay for the 'House Beautiful,' that it may the sooner be all our own." Mrs. A. C. Clark, of Leola, So. Dak., sends $3.65, and says she would not consider herself a loyal W. C. T. U. woman did she not give at least a penny a day toward paying for our "beautiful home." We have received from some person unknown a money order for one pound, nineteen shillings and nine pence. If each W. C. T. U. woman would do even less than this unknown friend, our beautiful building would be paying a handsome dividend to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Will not each reader of this article do her share?

Mrs. Flora Wilson, of Mitchell, S. Dak., sends $3.65, one dollar of which was earned a penny at a time, by her seven-years-old daughter, Ruth. The balance was from the Fire Steel Sunday-school, the contents of a mite-box. Little Albert W. Davis, of Astoria, Ore., sends $3.65 which he collected in a mite-box. Earl J. and Clarence Wilson send $3.65. Earl writes that he is ten years old and his brother eight, and that they are strong temperance boys and glad to help in the fight. Mrs. T. H. Mohler, of St. Albans, W. Va., sends $3.67, which her six years-old daughter, Edith, collected in a mite-box. The following names have also been forwarded to us with mite-box and other money, and will be entered in our books of record: Chester P. Higby, Verona, Wis.; Gerald and David Fitzgerald, of Mayfield, Ky.; Burrell C. Burgess, of Clinton, Minn We wish we had space to print the letter accompanying his gift. He was a most faithful little missionary for the Temple. Mrs. E. Thomas, a dear old lady of Humboldt Park, Ill., paid $5 to have the names of these children, Gertrude Stannard, Harold G. Warr, and Marjory Irene Warr, recorded in the Temple. Since then the youngest of the three, little Marjory, has been translated to a home in heaven. Mrs. C. F. Willard, of Arlington Heights, Mass., sends $5, contributed at a young people's meeting held at her house. Bessie Spencer and Gladdie Utt send 45 cts. from Cold Water Lodge, in Yukon, Oklahoma Territory. The L. T. L., of Stevensville, Ill., sends $5 mostly in pennies, from the miners' children. The L. T. L., of Harvel, Ill., sends $3.65 with a like amount from the union. Mrs. D. W. Danley, of Hennepin, Ill., sends $8.50; $7.30 of this is the contents of two mite-boxes, filled by her little granddaughters, Olla and Stella Boyle, and $1.20 for Baby Band money, also collected by them.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"THERE ARE GOOD THINGS COMING!"

In accordance with what we deemed the part of wisdom in the rush of the World's Fair season, we decided last spring to issue but little besides our regular periodicals during the summer months. But our friends must not think us idle; on the contrary, the announcements for the fall will show you that new needs have been recognized and provided for, and that we are still "in step" with the vanguard of the temperance hosts. WHAT IS OPPORTUNITY?

You have heard of the sluggard who lay dreaming his days away when suddenly a beautiful vision appeared, and beckoned him to follow her to fame and fortune, but he still lay dreaming until the vision commenced to fade away; then he awoke and cried, "Stop; who art thou?" and as the vision disappeared from view, replied, "I am Opportunity; once neglected I never return."

FROM THE QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON FOR SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

Prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice.

Lesson Text for the primary class, "We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

"What is his infirmity? How could the other boys help him to bear it?"

"How ought you to treat these creatures that God has made? . . . . They are weak and we are strong, so we ought to protect them."

"What other poison will harm ourselves and others? Why do men sell these poisons? . . . . Are they helping others?"

"You have all heard about the people in heathen lands. Some wicked people make money by sending poison drinks to these people. Is that right?"

WE'RE COMING.

[To be learned by the children.]

"O men, lead on! We're coming, too,
But for a guide must look to you.
Then make the path so pure and straight
That boys can't meet a drunkard's fate."

"HELP ON THE GOOD CAUSE."

A friend from Oskaloosa writes as follows: "I want to recommend all our white-ribbon sisterhood to help on the good cause by sending for 'Passages in the Life of Dr. Martha Scarborough,' it is so practical on the food question for the cure of the drink habit—so good to read aloud in company and to lend; then have the loveliness of 'What Means this Stone?' to lie on your parlor table to attract callers' interest in our Temple; then for the sake of other mothers' daughters if not for our own do send for the soul-stirring book, 'Around the World with Jesus,' by Charles Crittenton, and then the telling satire of the booklet, 'A Defense of the Jericho Robbers,' is too good to be lost, it stirs one up with its points. I find looking through the ads. of our UNION SIGNAL brings me so many good things if they do cost some money, but good books are ever a safe, wise investment; banish the pie and cake and give these stimulating mind foods, and our children will grow up Prohibitionists because they can't help it; and then such as these will become more interesting than dime novels. It pays to spend for these things, they uplift as well as amuse."

SEPTEMBER ADVANCE GUARD.

The Advance Guard for September has echoes from the Temperance Congresses to which every Senior of the L. T. L. should listen.

Reports frem the Pennsylvania and Wisconsin L. T. L. conventions are of especial interest, followed by two messages from The Cottage, Reigate, Surrey, Eng. Miss Gordon's letter is accompanied by one from Miss Willard, and the L. T. L's will want to read every word from their "affectionate comrade and elder (ly) sister."

This number contains the third chapter of that delightful story, "The Tables Turned," a report from the World's Youth's Congress, held at the Art Institute, July 17.

Miss Guernsey's instructive articles upon the White City have a feature this month unique and valuable. A few weeks ago a postal card was addressed to many prominent men and women asking a reply to this question: "What are the most important lessons to be learned by the youth of America from the World's Columbian Exposition?" In the September Advance Guard you will find some of the many prompt and kindly replies which have been received by the editor.

Remember The Advance Guard costs but 50 cents per annum. Can you not send us the name of one new subscriber?

LISTEN!

A few weeks ago, the Editor of our Books and Leaflets asked of those conversant with our work in the several states, these questions: Do the publications of the W. T. P. A., in your judgment, meet the needs of the work? What improvements can you suggest?

In response to the queries, many valuable replies have been received and placed on file for later use. Nothing has been of more service in teaching us the wants of our workers as they note the varying aspects of the work. Nor, as we thankfully recognize, could kinder words of commendation be spoken. We shall have further occasion to quote from these letters in this column. This week we cull from them a few items of encouragement:

The publications of the W. T. P. A. do meet the needs of the work admirably.—Connecticut.

I consider the literature of our own W. T. P. A. much better than any other. The new leaflets coming in will no doubt supply the deficiency any Department may have. Any woman well read in our present literature will surely be a broad-minded worker, and such an one is alert in looking out for the new leaflets constantly being issued.—Texas.

In my judgment, the publications of the W. T. P. A. meet the requirements of the work to a marked degree.—New Jersey.

In reply to question 1—Yes, so fully as is possible in any work that is growing and broadening continually as is the W. C. T. U. work. I have always found what I want among them.—Maine.

As you are constantly adding to your publications, and taking up new lines of work as the work develops, there is scarcely any room for criticism.—New York.

I think the range of literature is excellent, and if it could be gotten into our unions more abundantly would transform our work. Not literature but readers is the demand.—Montana.

I have felt that the W. T. P. A. publications were abundantly varied, and fitted admirably the needs of our work.—Iowa.

It seems to me that the publications of the W. T. P. A. are very complete in all lines. My only regret is that our unions do not make more use of them.—Mississippi.

The great trouble with our workers is that they do not seem to comprehend that there is such a storehouse of knowledge, and die for want of food when it is so easy to secure.—South Dakota.

It is always with fresh admiration I peruse the leaflets, and it would seem almost wonderful, the needs met from the many pens contributing to our work, were it not that His name is "Wonderful," and the consecrated pens of His servants are directed by Him.—Florida.

For all these as for other kindly words, good friends, please accept our thanks.

And in all this, we trust our other good friends, our "constituency," will find the moral.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight 'to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

of the symposium with reference to our publications, referred to elsewhere, is to be the starting of a new line called

"Picture Leaflets."

As the name implies, they will be illustrated; each will consist of a single sheet, the size of the unfolded Signal Lights, and the price will be lower than anything we now offer. Early announcement of their readiness will be made in THE UNION SIGNAL.

BOOKS AT A BARGAIN.

SLIGHTLY SOILED.

A fast increasing stock demands more room on our shelves and it is necessary to dispose of some books and pamphlets which have become shelf-worn, that is, the cover is marred, but the inside pages are in good condition.

Just the thing to loan to your neighbor. Who can estimate the good which can be done in this way?

Local unions and Loyal Temperance Legions will do well to avail themselves of this offer.

Signal Notes.

THE Scientific American is not a "fanatic," and still it says in a late number that beer drinking in this country produces the lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our cities are beer-drinkers.

ICELAND has a population of seventy-three thousand, men and women being political equals. The mothers teach the future citizens and in all the island there is not an illiterate after the age of seven; there are no prisons, no police, no extremely rich and no miserable poor.

"THE strain of universal armament is bringing several nations almost to the point of collapse," said Mr. Stansfeld, M. P., in a recent speech at the International Peace and Arbitration Association. "A crisis will soon be brought about by two forces which will meet face to face—Militarism and Socialism."

THE Y. P. S. C. E. is providing religious services in the life-saving stations of our country. In twenty-five years the life-saving crews of the world have saved one million lives. Their work cuts them off almost entirely from religious services. About one thousand services have been held and a host have been led to Christ.

THAT the economic argument of temperance advocates is founded on facts is every day more apparent. An old gin distillery in England with a dozen old cottages for the men employed, has been converted into a soap factory, while a hundred new houses have been built to accommodate the increased number of workmen necessary to carry on the work.

A VERY sad phase of the cruelty practiced on children and which is occupying the attention of the English Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is the pledging of their clothes to pawnbrokers in order that the parents may take the pittance for drink. One authority says that he has seen a man strip his child in the street and take the clothes to pawn. The suffering entailed especially in winter is indescribable.

IN an article on the progress of women's trade unions, published recently in England, some interesting facts were given. The total number of women workers in the kingdom are not given, but some idea may be gained from the number engaged in trades other than textile manufactures. These number 800,000. Wages are falling and husbands are dependent on their wives' earnings. Some women work incredibly hard and it is a shame to this age. Fish-curers are known to work thirty-six hours at a stretch.

MONTE CARLO is well dubbed the plague spot of Europe. The company has just held its annual meeting and announces as its winnings for the fiscal year, 23,000,000 francs. The total revenue of each share is one hundred and ninety francs or thirty-eight per cent. The amount paid by the company to the Prince of Monte Carlo is used by him to build churches, hospitals and schools. Aside from the amounts paid to French newspapers, other correspondents stand on their list, paid for keeping still. The victims of the play are also paid something, the hotel bill and railroad fare and a few dollars besides. There were five suicides last year, two of them young Americans from New Orleans who lost 1,000,000 francs. The company has its list of pensioners who have lost their whole fortune in play.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Read the announcement of DAILY UNION SIGNAL on page 14, cut out the coupon, fill out as directed and send the same with twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. Prompt attention to this will enable us to prepare the wrappers before the Convention and insure our subscribers the daily reception of this indispensable and accurate report of the two great meetings mentioned above.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The annual grain fair has been opened at Vienna, Austria.

It is reported from London that Emin Pasha, the African explorer, is killed and eaten by cannibals.

The Grand Army of the Republic commenced its twenty-sixth great annual encampment at Indianapolis, Ind., Monday.

Over twenty-two thousand hungry persons were fed by the good people of Chicago through the relief committee last Saturday.

The debate on the silver question continues in the Senate, the notable speakers of the week being Senators Sherman and Wolcott.

Rumors of President Cleveland's illness which have been current were dissipated during the week by the published denial of his physician.

The long-debated Irish Home Rule Bill received a majority of thirty-four votes in the British House of Commons on its passage, September 2.

Secretary Carlisle has ordered the United States mints at Philadelphia and San Francisco to be run at full capacity in the coining of gold bullion.

Emperor William, the Crown Prince of Naples and a company of distinguished German nobles went to Metz, September 3, to review the military maneuvers of the German army.

St. Louis, Mo., has been the scene this week of the seventh international Sunday-school convention, with fifteen hundred delegates in attendance. The reports show Sunday-schools in the United States and British America, 130,197; teachers and officers, 1,372,558; scholars, 10,870,104.

A terrific hurricane swept up the Atlantic coast, last week, destroying the port of Savannah, Ga., wrecking a million dollars' worth of property and losing hundreds of lives. The tornado left the city of Charleston, S. C., in ruins and more than thirty wrecks are reported on the coast.

The bill for the unconditional repeal of that portion of the Sherman act which compelled the yearly purchase of fifty-four million ounces of silver by our government has passed the United States House of Representatives by a vote of 239 to 110, a much larger majority than was anticipated.

IT is gratifying to note that for the first time in the history of any large gathering of the Catholic church, women have been seated as delegates in the congress which convenes in Chicago this week. The platform has graciously extended its hospitality to the women and they are also given place on the program.

THE Columbian Legion of Honor Souvenirs are meeting with favor; they are very pretty, will be pleasant mementoes of this wonderful year and the sale is of great importance to the National treasury. Every member of the W. C. T. U. should buy one herself if possible. She should at least find one other purchaser. They have neither responsibilities nor privileges, except the privilege of helping the treasury in these straitened times. Apply to Miss Esther Pugh, National treasurer, The Temple, Chicago; price, one dollar.

WE are pleased to learn that the Hyde Park divisions of the Chicago Christian Endeavor societies are manifesting special interest in our coming Conventions and have decided to ask their pastors to pray for the success of the great gatherings, as well as to make them a subject of prayer in their own meetings. This was brought about by the reading of Miss Greenwood's call to prayer, published in our issue of August 10. We are touched by this spirit of fraternity from the young Christian Endeavorers and pray God's richest blessing upon their young, devoted lives.

THE many friends of Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell will be happy to know that they are now on American soil, having arrived in New York last Saturday. After spending a few days in the East, they will come directly to their old home in Evanston, Ill. Just before leaving England they wrote: "Our India work is finished, and our friends are confident of final victory, when the matter shall be brought before Parliament." They were given a farewell breakfast at Westminster Palace hotel the day before sailing, and their work has been signally honored and blessed.

WE know not how many state presidents send an annual message to their constituency just before the annual Convention, but we heartily commend the idea as carried out by Mrs. L. S. Rounds, of Illinois. Besides the announcement of the convention and statement of special attractions, Mrs. Rounds propounds nine telling interrogations as to plans. They are:

1. Did you plan at the beginning of the year to pay your dues promptly and are they all in? If so, then over sixteen thousand women have made local, district and state treasurers happy.

2. Did you plan to support your state paper? It is your paper; do you subscribe for it, and has your union sent the dollar pledged at our last state convention?

3. Did you plan early in the year to pay your proportion of the one hundred dollar state fund pledge? Is it paid?

4. Did you plan to send the dollar for National Temperance Hospital bed? Has it been sent by your union?

5. Will you plan to come to the Convention on Monday and stay until final adjournment?

6. Will you plan to be at all the sessions, take notes and report proceedings for your home papers and constituency?

7. Will you plan to have your railroad certificates carefully made out where you purchase tickets, and thus help the Convention secretary?

8. Will you plan not only to wear your white ribbon, but to have a few extra ones for the women who "forget," and for your own "other dress"?

9. Will you plan to be helpful in all possible little ways, and so make the Convention a great success?

"THIS is the happiest summer of my life," said Dwight L. Moody, the other day, in speaking of the Christian work which he and his colleague are accomplishing in Chicago. It will be remembered that one of the strongest reasons assigned for Sunday opening of the Fair was that the visitors would not attend divine services on the Sabbath, and so be at the mercy of the open saloon and theater. This statement has proved as false as the one that the "laboring man" wanted an open Sunday Fair. The churches of Chicago were never so crowded as during this season and never were so many halls and theaters turned into places of worship. Audiences of fifty thousand people is a small average for these extra meetings. It is expected that September will be a very active month with Christian workers and that thousands of World's Fair visitors will return to their homes with a spiritual blessing infinitely more uplifting than any intellectual good that may have come by way of the beauties of the Exposition. Mr. Moody and his noble co-laborers are reaping a harvest of souls for the Master and should have the heartiest assistance of every Christian of whatever creed or nation. May God bless the "people's preacher."

AGAIN has the kaleidoscope of Sunday opening shifted another scene, and now the darkest side of all is before us—dark not only because the gates still remain open by order of the court, but because the court that so ordered it was—drunk, according to the city papers. When the subject was last presented to our readers, the Clingman injunction suit against the closing of the gates had been entered, but it was expected that it would be promptly dissolved. Not so, however; it was taken to Judge Goggin's court, and there it remained in statu quo until last Thursday, when the city was electrified by the astounding fact that Judge Goggin had arrogantly set aside the decision of the other two judges, Brentano and Dunne, whom he had invited to sit with him, and ordered a continuance of the suit sixty days, or in other words until the close of the Fair. But worse than his arrogant ruling and arbitrary spirit were his language and conduct while on the bench. His friends claim that the most charitable explanation is that he was under the influence of liquor. Prominent newspapers have demanded his resignation. In the meantime, the injunction suit has been taken to another court for dissolution, and we await results with wearied interest.

CHARGES of bribery were brought into the meeting of the National Commission of the World's Fair last week against Frank D. Higbee, a member of the jury of awards in the department of manufactures. H. D. Cary, president of the Cary Safe Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., sent in an affidavit sworn to before a notary public to the effect that he had been offered by the said Higbee the first prize for the exhibit of his firm for the consideration of fifteen hundred dollars. Also Commissioner Beeson, of Oklahoma, was declared guilty of offering a prize to a Russian wine exhibitor for the sum of ten thousand dollars. We feel interested to see whether this little unpleasantness among the brothers will arouse the same interest in the daily newspapers that the much less important disagreement among the lady managers excited. Of one thing we are confident, not the slightest hint will be thrown out that this little (?) incident is in any way derogatory to the fitness of men for holding such positions and carrying on such work. Notwithstanding the fact that the difficulty in the Lady Board of Managers, which was trivial matter compared to this, brought out any number of such insinuations, we have never been able to understand why things that conclusively show the unfitness of women for certain work do not at all show unfitness in men. Perhaps this inability is the fault of our feminine intellects, in which case the problem will remain one of the unsolved mysteries of life.

THE FOG BELL.

BY HANNA A. FOSTER.

Capacious and comely and strong-ribbed is she,
The stateliest vessel that furrows the sea.
She loosed from a rugged, intolerant shore
When the weather was foul and the waves were high,
For low hung the storm-cloud which darkened the sky
Of those troubled and perilous days of yore.

But seamen of spirit were those of her crew,
The man at the helm was heroic and true.
They beat through the billows and battled with blast;
The heart was fearless, and strong the hand
That weighed the anchor, and cleared from land,
And made the way o'er the fathomless vast.

Right steadily since hath she held on her course,
Despite the wild hurricane heavy and hoarse [sail;
That swept through the rigging and clutched at the
For her way was clear, and her timbers strong—
The tempest was fearful, the struggle was long,
But she dared the danger and weathered the gale.

And now she is sailing on quieter seas,
A summer sky o'er her, a favoring breeze
Unfurling and floating the stripes and the stars
Of her beautiful flag. But list! Siren airs
Steal o'er the calm waters: "Put in for repairs."
"Why ringeth the Fog Bell? Pray tell us, brave tars."

"Oh, warily, warily! Heavy and dank
The wreath which encircles yon treacherous bank!
Small need of repairs hath our stanch ship of state—
A vessel the safest these waves ever bore,
Thus to venture her hopes on a Sabbathless shore,
And strew the mad billows with national freight."

"Ho, man at the lookout! what seest thou afar?"
"Imperial wrecks on a pitiless bar!
Fell ruin hath followed that fatal mischance
When the song of the siren rang out in attune
To the national heart—the bloody commune;"
How wild was thine error, proud, anchorless France,

No Sabbath, no Bible, no virtue, no God!
What wonder her wine-press in fury is trod?
No Bible, no Sabbath! O sons of brave sires,
Will ye suffer this lawless invasion of right
To blot out the Bethlehem Star of our night,
And quench with blind fury the soul's altar-fires?

Far better the olden oppression; for then,
With conscience unfettered, your fathers were men.
They left us a legacy richer forsooth,
Than broad lands of beauty, our boast east and west.
They left us a Sabbath, a sweet day of rest,
And a love for its sanctity, quiet and truth.

God grant us all courage, and wisdom and will.
The years lie before us, dim, boundless and still.
There's fear in the cabin, and doubt on the deck
For dangers which sleep everywhere in the sea.
Oh, Father of nations, we turn us to Thee!
Stay Thou on the vessel and nothing shall wreck.

Berea, O.

THE SILENT WIRES.*

III.

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

Two weeks passed slowly, the situation in New York remaining much the same. The strikers would not yield, although there were "weak-kneed men" among them who had returned to work—nor would the Great Consolidated do so. There were about a hundred applications for places on the company's hooks at the time of the strike. The writers of these were ordered to report at once for examination. About twenty-five young women and as many boys appeared and were accepted, but their work was of the most unsatisfactory character. The company, however, followed the "whistling" policy and sent out rose-colored representations.

"We will not yield one inch," they declared. "We will fill the places of the strikers, and the public will not be greatly inconvenienced. Though we suffer loss of money and temporary loss of business, in the end we will be entirely victorious. The demands are extravagant, and the company can but refuse them."

On the other hand, the complaints of business men were loud and long against the Great Consolidated; business was suspended upon the Produce Exchange; and sympathy for the strikers was expressed on all sides. The leaders among the strikers were still sanguine of success. They asserted that the Great Consolidated was losing from $70,000 to $10,000 daily; that there were not more than six first-class operators, or twenty tolerable ones, out of two hundred employed; that the remainder were merely fooling at the instruments; that every desk was loaded with messages; that more than one civil suit had been brought against the Great Consolidated, and that it could hold out against them little longer. Karl Heiser expressed this prevailing hopefulness at one of their evening meetings:

"Do not believe for a moment that the Great Consolidated is doing half the business it claims. It is making a desperate fight; every nerve is strained, every muscle tense; but it is in a demoralized condition. The hardest blow yet has been dealt it in the order from the Brotherhood for railroad telegraphers to refuse Great Consolidated business. This will cut off small towns and hasten the end. I would caution my comrades," he continued, "to be quiet, peaceable, to resort to no unfair methods or useless recrimination against the company. I know you are growing restive under these restraints; but any attempt at violence jeopardizes the sympathy of the public. That we have; that we cannot afford to lose."

Three or four men sprang to their feet as the young man closed. One shouted angrily: "When we are fairly treated it will be time enough to talk of non-retaliation and turning the other cheek. But the Golden Rule won't work here till we are. We must make them feel our power. Doing without butter on our bread, while they are having their California fruits won't do it."

"Here's us linemen," put in a dark, wiry man, "sometimes with nothin' at all to do all day; other times workin' like niggers from daylight to dark, repairin' of the wires after a storm, riskin' of our lives climbin' the poles and untanglin' of the wires, an' we don't get enough out of it to live on, let alone buryin' of us. Why! there was Tom Kelly as was killed a year ago fallin' from an icy pole, a-tryin' to straighten the wires after a howlin' storm. Why! the comp'ny was notified, gen'lemen, and what did they do towards his fun'ral? Why, gen'lemen, nothin' at all. They never took no notice of his death more'n as if he'd been a rat, an' his poor old father had to bury him."

Story after story of oppression and cruelty were now poured out by the excited strikers, groans for the Great Consolidated were freely given, and the harmony was fast becoming anarchy. The conservatives attempted to stem the tide.

"We must not resort to violence," they declared. "We must work by open and legitimate methods alone."

Hattie's father rose slowly. He was an unready speaker, and on the few occasions he was drawn to his feet, his words came hard and hesitatingly, but with a force that suggested a tremendous hammer of a will back of them.

"Seems to me—an' one or two men—like me," he growled, "men that don't handsome up much—but can—pretty gen'rally be laid onto—when there's good, solid, tellin' bus'ness to be done—that you fellers is a-wastin' our time an' our money in a-waitin' an' a-hopin' that the comp'ny'll give in. I tell you fellers—they'll never give in—long as they can bluff the public into b'lievin' they're a-doin' the best they can. They can afford to wait better'n we fellers. But I tell you, boys," he yelled, bringing his fist down upon a table near him with a force that sent the papers on it flying to the floor, "we've got a power here—that can cripple the Great Consolidated 'fore daylight—easy as fun—an' that's the kind of bus'ness that gets Jim Starkey's vote ev'ry time!"

Though loud in their denunciations of the company, the Brotherhood was not ready for a proposition like this, easily understanding that Starkey hinted at the possibility of cutting the wires owned by the Great Consolidated, and his speech met with hisses. Karl stood up before them, pale but resolute. It was a mortification to him that this man was known as the father of his betrothed.

"I will not appeal to the sense of right and wrong the members of this Brotherhood have in common with other men," he began, "but to motives of policy alone, when I beg the Brotherhood to reject with scorn methods such as have been suggested. We are not outlaws. We are not law-breakers. We are an organized band of workers, hitherto quiet in our behavior and peaceable in our intentions. This record we cannot afford to break. We must continue to work by moral forces alone."

"Moral forces be hanged!" objected Starkey. "Moral forces ain't no good in a strike. What's needed in a strike is to break things!" The better spirit of the Brotherhood was now in the ascendant, and a storm of hisses cowed the man into silence.

"Let's go have a drink and talk this over," said one of the men to Karl, when the meeting had adjourned. Karl looked slightly surprised and reminded him that they were pledged to drink nothing till the strike was over. His companion laughed.

"We meant we wouldn't get tipsy and raise any rows," he explained. "The boys can't go dry all this time. Come on."

Karl hesitated. This evening, for the first time, had his faith in the ultimate triumph of the strikers faltered. He felt weak and undecided and weary of the struggle; he fancied a glass of brandy and water would stimulate his flagging energies, and he turned to accompany the man. Just then across the hall he met the clear, truthful eyes of Winifred Hilton.

"I think I won't go, Charlie," he answered, and crossed the hall to where Miss Hilton stood talking with one of the roughest of the linemen. Some one had sent a basket of beautiful lilies to the women strikers who had voted it to Miss Hilton. It was in her hand as she talked.

"You have promised me," she was saying, "that you will not join in any attempt to cut the wires or in destroying any of the company's property."

"Yes, miss," he admitted, "but the boys will nag me to death for it."

"Tell them you have promised, and a real man never breaks a promise," insisted the young woman, and she drew a lily from her basket and fastened it as a "reminder" upon his dirty blouse where it shone in striking contrast.

"May I carry the lilies home for you, Miss Hilton?" asked Karl, softly.

She smiled acquiescence. "You want to see Hattie. She was too tired to come to-night." Karl replied vaguely as he walked by Miss Hilton's side. In truth, his betrothed had not been in his thoughts at all.

"Do you think there is danger of our men resorting to violence?" asked Winifred, anxiously.

"Yes," Karl answered, "after to-night's meeting, considerable danger, but I think the more intelligent of us can prevent it if we hold a firm hand. You did a good stroke of work this evening in pledging Tom Cary to peace."

"If he will only keep his word," said Winifred, doubtfully.

"Tom Cary will never break his word," replied Karl. "If he had sworn to pull down the principal wires in New York he would do it, though every man in the Union was against it. If he has promised to refrain from violence, he will not raise a finger, whatever others may do."

"I am glad I spoke to him, then," said Winifred.

"No man could have wrung that promise from him," continued Karl, gravely. "I never thought before, Miss Hilton, of the power a strong, pure woman may have, as I did when I saw your lily resting against Tom Cary's grimy blouse. It was so stainless and frail, yet had an individuality of its own, and somehow seemed to soften and glorify the whole man. A gold badge, or even a jewel, would not have that effect. It would add only an incongruous ornament, and the man would seem shabbier than before. The flower is ornamental, but it is not that alone. After all, a woman should be something more than a mere ornament to a man." Karl had been talking quite as much to himself as to his companion, but now he turned to her suddenly: "What is your idea of marriage, Miss Hilton?"

She had never heard him talk like this before, and there was a little confusion in her mind, but she answered steadily: "Marriage is the completion of two imperfect lives. Each life supplies what the other lacks and needs; yet all marriage, to my mind, must be based upon a strong congeniality of thought and purpose; however great the surface variation, there must be an undercurrent of sympathy."

"Oh, certainly," Karl assented, "one must not despise the little things one's wife cares for, and the wife should have some appreciation of her husband's work and interests, though she cannot fully understand them."

"Why should she not understand them, Mr. Heiser?" asked his companion, nettled at the sense of masculine superiority his speech betrayed. "There is no question which interests man in which his wife has not a vital interest. You cannot separate the sexes; they are one. In the atmosphere of a real marriage the man grows as surely as the wife. She stimulates him to loftier heights and broader outlooks, and in turn, is given his noblest ideas and work. Each uplifts and sustains the other."

"Women are not interested in the leading questions of the day," objected Karl, "and a man cannot always keep on the level of domestic duties and shopping and gossip."

"Nor can a true woman," cried Winifred. "A woman is not necessarily petty. She is the man's co-worker. She is the world's helper, as well as he. Half of the whole world is hers, and she is equally interested in all that pertains to man's half. A man need not seek the saloon or the club for companionship, when husband and wife may talk, read, think, and work together, and by the very force of each one's individuality stimulate and develop that of the other."

"But you are describing a wife as a comrade!" protested the man.

"A wife who is not a comrade is no wife," was the energetic reply. "To use your own illustration, a woman should not be a mere flimsy ornament to a man, but the flower which preserves its own stainless individuality while softening his masculine roughness, itself gaining new strength from the contact. The flower alone cannot accomplish what the flower and the man can do. Nor can the man attain his full power without the uplifting and refining influence the lily represents. Would you marry a woman who could never sympathize with your sense of the injustice of existing inequalities of condition, with the growing independence of the working classes, with your plans for the education of the laborer, with your own struggle for growth?"

She had spoken earnestly, eagerly, without thought of Hattie Starkey. She had momentarily forgotten Karl Heiser's relations with her friend, but now she stopped in dismay lest her impetuous words might be interpreted as a reflection upon the capabilities of the woman he had chosen for his wife. An apology rose to her lips, which died unsaid as she caught his murmured words: "A young man married is a young man marred."

MINORITY REPRESENTATION.

BY ALFRED CRIDGE.

In view of the important bearing of the representation question upon all subjects of vital interest, including that to which THE UNION SIGNAL is especially devoted, I should be glad to occupy a portion of most valuable space in presenting an exposition of proportional representation, substantially the same as that made by me at the World's Congress Auxiliary. I have made a special study of the subject for twenty-five years; and while deeply interested in many other reforms, finding that all efforts in those directions, where political action is essential to success, are blocked as by a wall of adamant, I have devoted my life to the promulgation of representative reform. No class of persons should be so vitally interested in the subject as the advocates of temperance; but until the Congress at the Art Building, my most strenuous efforts to wake them up to the evils of the system which has half paralyzed their unintermitting propaganda have been in vain.

The subject can be considered under three heads: The Myth of Majority Rule; Inadequacy of the Initiative; Elimination of Parties.

It is currently assumed, even by advocates of improved forms of representation, that majorities elect legislators, and hence that these majorities make the laws. Both these assumptions are false in fact and logic. If majorities did elect the members of a legislature, a majority of the members of that legislature would not—unless the majority of both the voters and the members was unusually large—represent a majority of the people, because two-thirds of two-thirds is less than one-half. But the members of a legislature or congress, especially in thinking communities, rarely receive the votes of even half those entitled to vote.

No community in which people do any amount of thinking will be satisfied to confine itself to two parties. Indeed, the diversities of political thought are so great that half a dozen parties would frequently be inadequate. I will, however, in this case, confine my illustration to three parties. Suppose seven constituencies of 7,000 voters each, elected seven representatives under the current system, "a," "b" and "c" representing the voters of the several parties (each letter as it occurs standing for 1,000 voters) and A, B and C representing the members elected to correspond.

CONSTITUENCIES.	REPRESENTATIVES.
b b c c a a a	A
b b c c a a a	A
b b c c a a a	A
b b c c a a a	A
c c c b b b b	B
c c c b b b b	B
c c c b b b b	B

Here we have 49,000 in seven constituencies. The "a's" with but 12,000—less than a fourth of the whole—secure a majority of the "representative" body, while the "c's" with nearly fifty per cent more voters, get no number at all; and the "b's" with a plurality vote, get but a minority representation. Were there four, five or six parties, the minority of voters thus able to secure a majority of the elected body would correspondingly lessen. That is the more intelligent bodies of voters become, the less representation do they get, if they vote according to their convictions. Thus our representative system discriminates against morality and intelligence and places a premium on dishonesty and ignorance.

This misrepresentation is farther increased by the fact that this system requires a great amount of complicated machinery before the election to make it run at all; that voters in a mass cannot possibly manage this machinery; hence that a very few of them not only do run it, but must run it as to nominations and all preliminary processes; therefore, the voter merely has the option—if he desires to make his vote at all effective—of voting for one man that does not represent him in preference to voting for another that would misrepresent him. If his party wins, he is misrepresented in most cases. If it loses, he is of course unrepresented.

In Oakland, California, seven councilmen and seven school trustees are elected from as many wards, and four more of each "at large," every voter voting for four candidates. At the election of March, 1893, 28,488 votes were cast for the councilmen elected at large, of which but 10,135, or nearly thirty-six per cent, were for the elected candidates, leaving over sixty-four per cent—nearly two-thirds of the voters—unrepresented in their selection. For the four school trustees chosen 26,588 votes were cast, of which 10,739 were cast for the winning candidates, leaving nearly sixty per cent of the voters unrepresented. (To get the number of voters divide these figures by four.) The votes in the seven wards for school trustees aggregated 7,127, of which 3,265—nearly forty-six per cent—elected all the candidates, leaving over fifty-four per cent of the voters unrepresented. The ward candidates for councilmen received 8,141 votes in all, of which 3,079—nearly thirty-eight per cent—elected all the candidates, leaving over sixty-two per cent of the voters, or nearly two-thirds, unrepresented.

A Referendum and Initiative amendment to the constitution of that state (such amendments require a two-thirds vote of the legislature before they can be submitted to the people) was rejected by thirty-two negative votes, the members casting them having received but 44,281 votes in their districts; yet, this fraction of less than a fifth of the whole are empowered under this "majority rule" myth to determine that the other four-fifths shall have nothing to do with legislative acts, unless they vote for the nominees of party machines. One example is as conclusive as a thousand.

"DIRECT LEGISLATION" INADEQUATE.

It has been proposed to remedy these evils by means of the Referendum (under which any law must be submitted to the "people" before being valid, either unconditionally or on request of a certain percentage of voters), and the Initiative, under which latter a certain percentage may submit a proposition for such direct vote. To a certain degree and in some cases these methods have been proved useful, both in Switzerland and the United States; but they are quite inadequate, especially in the United States for these reasons: 1. Voters in general have not the leisure to critically examine the merits of the many propositions which would thus be submitted to them for action; and where one man has the time or other means to form an intelligent opinion a hundred would, if left at full liberty to choose (unhampered by district "slave pens"), select some one who would vote on all measures in accordance with his wishes.

2. The volume of public business in growing and populous communities is too great and the need for promptness too obvious to tolerate the delays and complications of direct legislation.

3. Organizations would have to be formed to draw up every single measure to be "initiated," and crafty agents of powerful corporations, etc., could, and certainly would, insinuate themselves into such organizations to draw up such bills in such a manner as to include some fatal flaw therein, such as would insure their rejection by the people, nullification by the courts, or failure to work the benefits expected. Bills so submitted would have to be voted on, aye or no, without amendment or discussion, whereas even in present legislatures, much more in representative ones, they would be more or less carefully criticised before passage.

4. Even in Switzerland the workings of direct legislation (which now exists in nearly all of its twenty-three cantons, and has been in operation for very many years in some of them), the imperfection is so obvious that proportional representation of parties has been carried in three of them, was rejected by small majorities only in three others, and is likely to be carried within a few years in three more.

REMEDIES.

The Swiss plan of proportional representation, however, being adapted to their custom of voting for a large number of representatives, is less adapted to the United States than that of Thomas Hare, of London, as simplified subsequently in England and this country, and of W. H. Gove, of Salem, Mass., where each vote is effective but for one candidate, as customary with us. The Swiss plan aims to represent parties proportionally, and in the main, does so, as at the election under it in Geneva, recently the "lost votes" in its three electoral divisions ranged only from one to five per cent while in the last California legislative election they were fifty-three per cent.

The Hare system would require, in the election of the twenty two members of the national House of Representatives from Illinois, that they should all be elected "at large," but that the vote of one voter should count for one candidate only, and that any candidate receiving a quota of one-twenty-second of the vote should be elected. On each ballot, however, the voter would designate by the figure "one," his first choice, the person he would most prefer; by "two," the candidate he considered next best; "three" his third choice, and so on. Then if his first choice was found to have a quota before his ballot came to be counted, it would be counted for his second choice; and if the second choice did not want it, or could not use it, for the third, etc. Or, if his first choice received but very few votes as first choice, it would be similarly disposed of. The first process is the distribution of the surplus votes to those who have not received a quota, and all candidates who, by such distribution, in addition to their own first-choice votes, receive a quota, are then declared elected. Next, the votes of the candidate receiving the fewest first choice votes are similarly distributed, until by such distribution the votes of the persons to whom they are thus allotted receive a quota. And this process is continued until the number of candidates remaining on the board, in addition to those set aside as above as elected, are equal to the number of candidates to be elected.*

A WORKING MODEL.

On February 28, 1893, seven trustees of the Mechanics' Institute in San Francisco were elected by it. Of the 905 votes cast all but sixteen aided to return some candidate; and of these eight were ineffective only because the voters marked but one candidate on each ballot, when they should have marked several. A waste of but one and two-thirds per cent in that election against sixty-three per cent at the next preceding election for supervisors in the same city should tell its own story.

BEARINGS ON ALL REFORMS.

And now as to the bearings of the subject on the temperance question. Prohibitionists are noted for voting on principle, doing what they regard as their duty regardless of consequences or results. That is right. But if it was known that, under a just system, nearly every vote cast was instrumental in electing a candidate, would not that vote be very largely increased, and would they not certainly succeed in securing representation in state legislatures and municipalities where the prospect now seems hopeless? "Throwing away your vote" would be entirely needless. No more would saloon-keepers hold the balance of power. The one or two per cent of the voters that they can now influence would no longer turn the scale. Cowardice in politics would be replaced by moral courage. A candidate would secure success by the *ex*pression, not the *sup*pression of his opinions; and the political cancer now eating out our whole life—national and individual—would be extirpated.

There is no alternative between the suppression of corruption in politics by proportional representation and retrograding to something far worse than barbarism. The advocates of temperance, few as they may seem to be, are a hundred times as many in numbers as are requisite, if they could grasp this question, to turn the scale decidedly for good, not only in temperance, but as to every subject of political action. On them may rest the responsibility of determining between the internecine war which is certainly looming over us and peaceful progress. I have done my duty in laying before them the gospel of purity in politics; and my life is consecrated to the preaching and exemplification of that gospel, which is the keystone, the keynote and the key of all genuine reform.

WHAT THE WORLD'S FAIR WILL DO FOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE.†

BY HELEN M. BARKER.

It is a law of perspective that one must be removed to a specific distance from the object he would sketch in order to get a correct idea of its proportions. This same law is applicable to moral and mental, as well as physical perspective. If the law of perspective prevails here, and the artist must occupy a position twice the distance of the height of this magnificent Exposition, it means that long years must intervene before the most gifted pen can measure or portray what this Fair will do for the uplift of women and the spread of the principles of right and justice.

The part that women have been authorized to take in this national enterprise would have been impossible twenty years ago. It was the pressure of a public sentiment created by the heroic work of previous years, that brought this recognition to woman. Had it not been for the Herculean efforts of such women as Lucretia Mott, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, Lucy Stone and others, such a board of women, authorized by a great national government, would never have been created.

These women representing all states have come from varied walks in life; some were called from homes of luxury and wealth, and had heretofore been known only as society women, others came from marts of trade and professions, others from fields of philanthropy, while many were inexperienced home women who had never held public position and had never been members of any organized society. Thus we have in this national board representatives of so many classes of women and from so many spheres of action that it is exceptional in its character. In all other organizations women interested in like subjects are brought together because they agree upon certain points. Missionary societies of different denominations all believe firmly in their own cause, and no one not interested already is expected to join; so of the W. C. T. U. and kindred associations. Candidates must sign a pledge and become of one ilk on the line forming the basic principle of work before they can be recognized as members.

The scattered rays of the sun are mild, but concentrated upon one point they kindle to flame. In the Board of World's Fair Managers we had brought together a body of women that had no fad, or perhaps I should say women representing every fad. The only work given them by Congress was the charge of everything pertaining to the interests of women in the Fair. This was a broad mission. It meant equal representation and equal justice. Congress also said women shall have equal representation on all juries of awards.

When Congress said: "Women shall be represented on all juries of award" it did a just thing, and when the Commission said, the women shall be represented according to the work done by women in said exhibit, it also did a just act, or rather made a good promise; but when the management refused to allow a device put upon each exhibit, showing what that per cent was, it did a very familiar act, and fairly represented the way in which women have been treated for centuries. The reason given was that it would not conduce to the good of the Exposition to have a card attached to each exhibit, a card telling just what part women had taken in the industries of the world; nevertheless, a very creditable record has been made, and is on file at the various departments, and manufacturers and exhibitors have in many instances sent reports that have surprised and delighted the women who have had access to them. These records will have an influence for good and show that women have taken a far greater part in manufactures, agriculture, science and art than has been known. Here was committed to women the sacred trust to secure for women in this great Exposition the same fair treatment and recognition as was accorded to men. This covered a broad field. Every woman on the board, from the president, down was impressed that it was her duty to stand for the equality of woman and her right to full representation not only on the juries but in many other ways.

This is the underlying principle of the suffrage movement and so before they knew it, these women, many of whom would have been shocked had they been asked to advocate the equality of woman before the law, were working with might and main for this same principle and were earnest in their righteous indignation when all they asked was not accorded. And when called upon to fight inch by inch for that which Congress had given, many women were heard to say: "From now and forever I stand for equal rights for women everywhere," and Mrs. Palmer, every inch a noble president, has declared herself openly in favor of equal suffrage. And this is not the end. These women will go back to their several states to advocate such principles.

The work of the women in the World's Fair will help woman's cause everywhere. While history will record mistakes that have been made by the Lady Managers, which were unavoidable in a body so largely made up of women unacquainted with parliamentary rules, and inexperienced in methods of business, yet on the whole it will prove a potent factor in the great movement for the emancipation of women from the thraldom of narrow prejudice, the bondage of mistaken bigotry and the trammels of ancient and barbarous customs. Even their mistakes will lead to a more full discussion of all these principles. When women stand up and contend earnestly for what they believe is right, the people look on and call it wrangling, but when men have violent discussions with tongue and fist, it is reported as an unusually interesting meeting.

Who can measure what these wonderful World's Congresses will do for women? Every possible national interest will have been considered, and with men and women jointly, questions not only of religion and charity, but questions of finance and government, science and art. I think it is conceded that in the discussion of these topics women have been as fair, as logical, have shown as careful study and preparation, have spoken as clearly, and have been heard as well as the men who have stood beside them, and altogether have acquitted themselves with credit to the sex as well as to the causes they have represented.

We have not only seen the good effects and wide-spread influence in America, but by our official correspondence with the women in every civilized country an influence has been exerted that will tell in the years to come for the greater freedom of women. When foreign commissioners began to visit headquarters for consultation as to the representation of their country, Mrs. Palmer insisted upon her official right to meet these commissioners and in every instance, in her gracious way, she urged the formation of committees among their women to help in the work; sometimes with astonishment upon their faces they would say in broken English or by interpreter: "Our women never help in such matters, they are not educated like American women"; but Mrs. Palmer was firm and received a sometimes reluctant promise that they would form a woman's committee—more often their hearty compliance with her request. The result was that committees of women were formed in nearly every foreign country, and representatives from many countries have been sent to the Fair and are mingling with our American women to the advantage of both. They have taken a deep interest and good, earnest work has been done. Able papers were sent to us from Sweden, Denmark and other countries as to the legal status of women in those countries, while reports of their organized work in all lines of charity, education, industry and philanthropy have come from nearly every civilized country of the globe; and let me whisper to you, foreigners are not the only ones benefited, for the reports that are coming to us from such countries as Bohemia, Belgium and Russia show us that with all our boasted freedom and superiority in some lines we are behind our sisters across the sea; so I am sure the international relations created by the World's Fair will not only pave the way for greater progress for the women of the East, but that what we have learned of their rapid advancement will give to the intelligent women of the Western world greater courage and determination, not only to stand firm for the right in every spot and under all circumstances, but will help them, leading, to bear aloft the banner of right and justice of the advancing host.

To sum it all up the recognition and creation by Congress of a national body of women, representing so many classes of women; the work for equal representation; the relation established between the women of America and foreign countries, the free congresses upon every subject; and upon the same plane with men, can but give an impetus to every interest of woman; and whatever lifts woman into greater liberty and broader usefulness will help men to a grander and surer manhood; hence the entire work of women in the World's Fair will advance and hasten the time when a republican government shall mean equal rights to all citizens.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

Among the valuable matter presented at the Congress on Africa, an able paper by F. P. Noble, secretary of the Congress, is certain to interest all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. It is entitled and treats of Christendom's rum trade with Africa. Mr. Noble declares the American and European liquor traffic is the greatest curse ever inflicted upon the dark continent, quoting the saying of Burton, the discoverer of Tanganika, and an English consul: "If the slave trade were revived with all its horrors, and Africa could yet get rid of the white man with his gunpowder and rum, she would gain in happiness." Both habit and traffic have greatly increased since England entered Egypt and the inhabitants as far as a thousand miles up the Nile are terribly demoralized. "Since 1882 one hundred million gallons of spirits have poured into Africa." In the native villages along the Kru coast the gauge of wealth is the amount of liquor the village can afford to drink. The wisest of native statesmen are likely to choose Mohammedanism to Christianity, unless the rum traffic can be stayed. James Johnson, a member of the Lagos legislature said: "I would rather my countrymen were in slavery and hard worked, but drink kept away. For every African influenced for good by Christianity, one thousand are driven into deeper degradation by the gin trade,"—this, after a tour of neighboring Mohammedan states. Mohammedanism in the main, protects the slave trade, but some Christian nations have abetted it by the rum trade. Portuguese traders have destroyed whole tribes by demoralizing them with liquor; then they are easily overcome by the Arab slavers. In many places gin is the sole currency. The Portuguese on the Zambezi river in Mozambique pay the employees of their opium factory in spirits. Stanley found liquid currency on the Lower Congo, and that trade among the natives was impossible without it, although he wrote: "If it depended on me, I would have no more to do with rum than with poison."

Numbers of native rulers, as the Queen of Malagasy, have tried to stem the tide whose prohibitory laws were made ineffective by her powerlessness to prevent importation of spirits. The government had formerly taxed liquors thirty-three per cent, but the British consul compelled reduction of duty to ten per cent. Mohammedan rulers have become alarmed at the spread of drunkenness among their subjects, in many cases legislating strenuously against its use, but foreign powers introduce it, and natives learn the art of distillation. The whole coast is submerged in the poison tide.

The Oriental temperament is peculiarly susceptible to the effects of alcohol. The cruelty of these people is kindled into madness of demons by the imported "crazy waters." The beer and other fermented beverages which they had brewed for themselves for generations was as milk-and-water compared with the products of distillation. At times a whole village is intoxicated. In the Congo language the nearest word into which missionaries can translate "sober" is one meaning a man who cannot get drunk however much he drinks. At the diamond mines of Kimberley it is necessary to lock the native workers in their compounds after working hours to keep them from the drink. There are twelve thousand in that city of diamonds, many of whom came from the far north where the products of distillation are comparatively unknown. In one village Christians helped to build a mosque, because Mohammedans would bring no rum.

While we fail to choke our liquor traffic the wisest of the natives say: "Christians are hypocrites. Fall hats and new rum have attractions, but it is better to be black, bareheaded and pagan if sober."

When will the universal, militant church learn that her greatest enemy, at home and abroad, in all time has been, is, and will be the spirit of wine? Three hundred years ago Thoroughgood Moor, first missionary to American Indians from England, complained that "Christians selling Indians so much rum is sufficient bar against their embracing Christianity." If the devout of Christendom were not so slow of eye to see and heart to believe, they would join hands from every sect and division in active temperance, beginning in the legal line with international law to prevent the extension of the liquor traffic, and, encroaching, hunt it to the doors of its distilleries.

As to the effect upon commerce, Mr. Noble says: "Within its poison area no other industry or trade can grow. The profits are so enormous, often seven hundred per cent, that at first glance there is nothing like spirits to raise a paying trade rapidly. The trade in which gin is the medium of barter grows a hundred times faster than that where cotton is currency, but every bottle of spirits drives out a bale of goods." He quotes Mr. Botts, a large liquor dealer of Sierra Leone, as saying that the traffic has debased the people until they neglect comfort, and make no attempt to provide regularly for themselves and families. "If the liquor traffic did not oppress business and hinder its growth merchants would get ten times the trade they do now. It will be a great gain to commerce if the liquor traffic be eradicated." English steamers stop on the Kru coast and engage men for work on the ships. With rare exceptions, these steamers pay their hands entirely in rum. For a week after they leave the orgies beggar description. Then there is comparative decency till the next ship comes in. A chief on the gold coast begged the provisional governor to "ask that Her Majesty's representatives will instruct the merchants to pay for palm oil in cash instead of gin." The governor refused the request, because he could not "interfere with trade."

The slave trade has heretofore cost Africa in round numbers a million lives a year. Bishop Flickinger, of West Africa, believes that twice that number are killed by rum. The country is being depopulated along the coasts and as far inland as the trader goes. Space fails me to mention the horrors depicted in this exhaustive paper, and I cannot give you the authorities which the author cites, but, believe me, his statements rest upon reliable testimony.

Is there no light upon this ghastly picture of darkness and death? Thank God there is! And now I wish I might quote verbatim from the eloquent young speaker: "God lives and reigns, and His bow is in the cloud. One pillar rests on Africa, and one on England." In many of the African villages there comes up a piteous cry for deliverance from the drunkenness resulting from the landing of the traders' cargo. At a native temperance meeting in Cairo every speaker was Egyptian, and urged signing the Mahometan's pledge. In many places along the coast the governors have been begged to stop the influx. Even those who drink when they can get it beg, when sober, to have it taken away. The Mahometan emir at Nupe made laws confiscating the property of any one under his jurisdiction who sold it, and any one drunk should be killed. He begged the Queen to forbid the shipping of it. The first English letter ever written by a Congo chief was addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury:

"GREAT AND GOOD CHIEF OF THE TRIBE OF CHRIST,

Greeting: The humblest of your servants kisses your garment hem, and prays you to send his fellow servants more gospel and less rum. "UGALLA."

Many chiefs in Dutch and English territories have petitioned Queen Victoria to stop the colonial liquor trade. Khama, the Christian chief of Bechuana-land, has for twenty years kept out the drink, enforcing his laws against white traders and stopping the home brew of native beer. In Basuto-land every chief has become a total abstainer, and uses all his power to make teetotalers of his people.

At last, by the concerted action of missionary societies and temperance societies, with English bishops and a few members of Parliament, a union committee was organized for the suppression of the liquor traffic with native races. Branches were established in many Christian countries, and the outcome was the world's congress at Brussels which met to devise means for the suppression of the slave trade and the rum trade. The powers of Christendom and of Islam counseled together concerning the wrongs done by each. The international law formulated by them and since ratified by the seventeen powers entering into the treaty of protection is far-reaching in principle, but trade interests are making a mighty resistance to its enforcement. Its benefits can only be realized when it has the backing and example of each government. With powers as with people they do not effectively prohibit in others the vices they practice themselves. As at present realized the Brussels act has compelled the British chartered companies in South Africa, at the lakes, in East Africa and on the Niger to embody prohibition in their charters, and they are pushing through their vast areas with a swift, strong hand. The pain of having to record the fact that native chiefs appealed in vain so long to England's woman-sovereign for protection against this great iniquity is lessened now by being able to say that the African Lakes Company has set itself unalterably against liquor selling to natives, and the Niger company has cut down the import of spirits to one-fourth its former magnitude.

Mr. Noble has shown that the United States, because free from all colonial entanglements, and having only philanthropic and missionary interests, can be of greatest service in enforcing the treaty, and that our government could assume that duty by common consent.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Relief of the Unemployed.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The following was written by the late Henry Schofield, a leading business man of New Castle, who drafted the constitution of the British Women's Temperance Association and whose honored wife and daughter are among Lady Henry Somerset's most devoted helpers, as they were of Mrs. Margaret Bright Lucas.

The idea advanced by this man of wide experience seems worthy the careful consideration of our temperance workers in the present American stringency, and for that reason I forward the letter to you.

With love to all my comrades, hoping ere long to return to the fray, I am yours ever,

Frances E. Willard.

PREVENTION IS BETTER THAN CURE.

The effective relief of the sore distress of the "unemployed" during the last two or three winters has taxed the the wages of those who were at work, and many others whose means the world knows nothing about, whilst the sympathy and aid of the benevolent well-to-do have been strongly appealed to by those in high positions, who have often been baffled to know what is to be done to discriminate between the deserving and undeserving among the many thousands in our industrial centers, who plead starvation as their claim to immediate and substantial relief for themselves, their wives and their families. What is to be done with them?

Now that the severe winter has passed away it is time to look the next in the face and be prepared for it. I propose then that in every industrial center printed notices shall be posted and distributed, to the effect that all applicants to the relief committee next winter (should such committee be revived) will be expected to produce a statement showing what wages they have received during the previous six months week by week, how much they have spent in food, how much in clothing, and how much in drink. An aid to such statement should be provided in tabular form and distributed gratuitously. These statements will of course be examined, and any one proved to be untrue will disqualify the applicant for any relief whatever. It is well known that the British workman is the most extravagant and most thriftless being on the face of the earth. It was proved a few years ago that a thousand pounds a day were spent among the public houses of Newcastle alone, and the majority of the men not only spend all that they earn, no matter how much it may be, but live in advance of their wages, and so have not a penny when thrown out of employment. To aid such men in time of distress is to encourage such habits and demoralize them. The very worst thing a man or woman can learn is how to live without work.

One of my hobbies has been the establishment of a "Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society" for Newcastle and Northumberland, which is now the third largest in England. The number of prisoners discharged from Her Majesty's prison during 1885 was 5,103, of whom only 670 men and 294 women were willing to accept of the warm, substantial breakfast provided for them on leaving the gaol, and the assistance of our society to find them employment. The rest contemptuously spurned the proffered aid, saying that they knew better than to spend their lives in earning a living. They have learned how to live without honest labor, and the benevolent should bear in mind that all indiscriminate relief is calculated to increase our criminal population.

The next section of my subject is how to supply the industrial classes with better food and at the same time make them more provident so as never to require aid from a relief fund. Some years ago we made arrangements with a lady graduate from the South Kensington School of Cookery to deliver a course of lectures to the women. These lectures, illustrated by the actual preparation of food and in culinary utensils suitable for the requirements, were well attended and much was expected as a result. They were a complete failure. The women said that it was impossible for them to devote the requisite time and thoughts to cooking, while they had so many children to attend to morning, noon and night, without any assistance. And so they continued the use of the gridiron and the frying pan, purchasing the most expensive cuts of butchers' meat, and making short work of it without any regard to economy.

Now I propose to supply these people with dinners ready cooked, of infinite variety and at cost price. To do this on the scale of one thousand dinners per day for one thousand families will require an establishment and staff. I propose that six ladies and six gentlemen shall form a committee who shall make themselves responsible for an advance of say five hundred pounds from a treasurer, who shall be a banker and who would charge interest on the loan to be gradually liquidated out of the receipts, and the food debited with it and all other expenses.

There should be a paid manager, a chef de cuisine, who should be a Frenchman of undoubted qualifications and character, and such manual assistance as the nature of the work may require. Dinners should be ready every day within certain hours, combining every variety of food of the most palatable, nutritious and digestible kind, to be sold at cost price and served in utensils to be brought by the purchasers. Considering the saving of coal in one thousand fires, the saving attending the purchase of articles of food on so large a scale, together with the economy of its preparation, I think I shall not be charged with exaggeration if I say that such dinners will cost the purchasers no more than half what they spend at present.

This being admitted, I further propose that for every shilling paid for food, the purchaser shall deposit with the manager another shilling wherewith to open and maintain a savings' bank account, as a provision against a time of want of employment or other special requirements. Rules will of course be printed on the savings' bank book, which, among other things, will empower the committee to use their discretion as to when any portion of the fund saved shall be drawn upon. In this way the workman will obtain better food for his family, and at the same time save one-half at least of what he pays for it at present against a time of need.

The primary object of such an establishment will be to supply cooked food for dinner which will only require warming up. Beyond this the committee may open a store for the supply of tea, coffee, cocoa and other groceries, flour and oatmeal and what is of more importance still, good, pure, well-baked bread, the profits arising from which will go into the general fund, and so reduce the price of the dishes served for dinner. I have hitherto dealt with an establishment for the supply of dinners for one thousand families but, of course, many such establishments will be required in large industrial centers, which must be situated in places most convenient for the purchasers.

I have no doubt the committee will soon see the way to the erection of warm, comfortable dining-rooms, where single men and women and children can be supplied with such food as they require in a well-appointed and orderly manner, which rooms may be used at other times for purposes of recreation, reading, or amusement, and where lectures, illustrated and otherwise, may be delivered gratuitously.

I think I have said enough to show that my scheme, subject, of course, to any modifications, is calculated to do away with the necessity for any relief funds for the "unemployed," without charity or any subscriptions by the public, and without, in short, any cost to anybody.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy.....And when he saw their faith he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.—Luke 5:18-20.

After a sojourn of two or three weeks in Northern Michigan by the side of its great lake, far from Chicago's surging crowds, amid the quiet of nature, forgetful alike of the great Columbian Exposition and the appalling financial crisis, refreshment and new strength has come to my tired brain, overwrought nerves and weary body. The outlook is not so dark as it seemed three weeks ago, yet the general situation has changed but little. A sound body added to a serene faith in God, is able to cope even with the dark financial outlook that is shaking the business world from center to circumference, and enables one to discern that these ominous clouds have a silver lining. The god of the world, Mammon, which men have been worshiping and running after to the utter forgetfulness of the true God, multitudes in their despair will forsake and seek that God who gives them treasures which financial panics cannot disturb. This has been the history of all wide-spread commercial disasters in the past, and as the one which we are now passing through is admitted to be the greatest, may we not hope for a commensurate spiritual turning unto the living God.

The good must always in a measure suffer in this world with the evil. The present panic is a terrible set-back to all great philanthropic undertakings which require a large expenditure of money, and will, without doubt, cripple all to a very large extent. Our beautiful Temple is not escaping; still the wonder is that we receive as much as we do; but the women who give are women full of faith and self-denial. They realize that with a little sacrifice they can easily put away a penny a day, however hard the times may be; while it is but little to them in the aggregate it proves a large and much needed sum for the Temple finances. We are glad to say that in spite of the unheard of stringency in the money market, money and hundred dollar pledges daily come in. Not a day passes but we send out large numbers of mite-boxes that have been ordered. Our intention since the first of the present year has been to go into the field in an aggressive manner and not rely merely on a printed presentation in our National organ for funds, but to go to those in each state who have ample means and are friendly to the cause and make a personal appeal to them. This was the work that was started in January, by Rev. Watson Trantor; he was getting his plans well matured to secure by the middle of June (when it was expected the Temple would be dedicated) a sufficient amount to pay for the entire capital stock; but his plans were completely frustrated by the late attack upon the Temple management. It was decided about this time that the dedication could not take place until October on account of the critical condition of Miss Willard's health which demanded a longer sojourn abroad; in view of this and the unrest resulting from the above mentioned cause the plan projected was deferred for two or three months. We were again just starting to work when the financial cyclone swept down upon the country; again our project was called to a halt. Now we stand waiting with a faith undaunted for the command to go forward, realizing that "the battle is not ours but the Lord's," well knowing that none of His plans ever miscarry.

The ardor of white-ribboners for the beautiful Temple cannot be cooled by intervening continents and oceans. A letter has just been received from Wellington, New Zealand, containing the offering of a loving and loyal family. Father, mother and daughter join in the gift of £1. The letter is written by Miss Eleanor E. Wilkinson. She says: "Although we are far away, and in all probability will never see the 'House Beautiful,' yet we feel justly proud to think of what our sisters are doing in America. My mother's sympathy, as well as my own, was aroused on hearing of your trouble, and we wish to send our mite toward the Temple debt." Again comes a letter and inclosure of $2 from our good friend, Mrs. Eliza J. Thomas, Tracy, Minn. It will be remembered that she is the wife of a Welsh clergyman, who through great self-denial sent us $100 for the Temple. She writes: "The inclosed $2 makes $22 that I have collected, mostly in five and ten cent pieces. This is outside the $100 I gave myself. I have not had a new bonnet for two years, but what matters that? I believe the influence of the Temple will bring hundreds to the Saviour. Is this not of more value than all the bonnets in the world? There is nothing on the earth I would like to see so much as the Temple; I hope I may sometime. Two Welsh ministers gave each fifty cents of the inclosed amount." If all white-ribboners were imbued with the spirit of this Welsh minister's noble wife, there would be no need of going out of our own ranks to secure funds to pay the Temple debt.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

ONLY A BUNDLE OF PAPERS.

BY AUNT LOUISA.

Only a bundle of papers,
Addressed in a well-known hand.
Not a word written upon them,
And yet, I understand
How much the friend of my girlhood
Wishes that I shall know
That though busy with "brain and brawn,"
She remembers the long ago.

Only a bundle of papers;
As I took them they seemed to say,
"We bring a sweet heart-greeting,
From a true friend, far away."
And "between the lines" on their pages,
As I read them o'er that night,
My "dream eyes" saw the kindly words,
She had not time to write.

Only a bundle of papers,
Sent, I am sure, with prayer;
Filled with the thrilling story
Of woman's devotion rare.
Telling of labor untiring,
Of sympathy pure and deep;
Much as I prize them, I'll "pass them on"—
They are far too good to keep.

ECHOES FROM THE FAIR NUMBER.

II.

LOST ON A FARM.

BY AMANDA ARBLE.

THE UNION SIGNAL asked the farmers' wife to send a card telling what she thinks. I'll be plain with you. I've read THE UNION SIGNAL for ten or more years and always thought it a good paper—in a way. You want to know how to reach the farmers' wife, and once spoke of papers being a burden to many—we will call them for short, city wives. I would like to suggest to such that they send their copy every week for six months to a farmers' wife and note what good it will do. There are numbers of farmers' wives who are bright and intelligent, and would love to read THE UNION SIGNAL, but the truth is they don't have a dollar nor a quarter of a dollar to put into a paper.

There are farmers' wives in the East and in the West who are bearing almost unendurable burdens—and such as the city wife, in many cases, could not endure, yet, for her children's sake, the farmers' wife goes on uncomplainingly as she can. A family near me had no shoes last winter and wrapped their feet in old gunny bags. I have been all day in my (cottage, the poet has it) shanty on the claim with my hands so cold I could not sew—not able to afford the fuel to heat the house. How could I pay for a paper?

When I go to the county-seat and see our county officers sitting in their offices—so hot you can scarcely bear to stay in them—I often ask myself if it is right to make the farmer pay so heavy a tax on his team, his cow and his farm to keep up a county officer in luxury, and have him roasting his brains out while the poor farmer's brain is freezing numb to keep the county officer in fuel? Where is the justice that we pay taxes to pay the President of the United States $50,000 a year and we live on fifty dollars, and work hard for that?

Who will pay the dues of such as we, so that we can be members of the W. C. T. U.? So many people know so little of the farmers' life that they do not know how to reach his wife. There are always two sides to a question, and nobody writes up the other side—the farmers' wife's side. I was at the house of a member of the W. C. T. U.—a city wife They had organized a W. C. T. U. in the town and this woman, of course, was getting members. Another woman was there also—a preacher's wife—he was wealthy as it happened, and this woman was anxious to get the minister's wife in the union, and to have her and her husband join before a certain "sociable" they were going to have for members only. She did not ask that I or my husband should join the union. I had been a member for ten years, and have suffered for the cause of temperance till sometimes death would have been preferable. I remember going to two conventions with the president of my own union. I was dressed quite as well as she, but my husband was not a merchant, so I could not go with my president to the home of her wealthy friends.

I don't write of these things because I am cranky, but to show the other side. There is nobody to give pen-pictures of the farmers' wife, so nobody knows about her. I know there are lots of good women in the W. C. T. U. and there are lots of good women among the farmers' wives, unknown, but that does not at all take from the nobleness of their character; they are good, brave women. Now if the W. C. T. U. is a lifter up of humanity it must be Christlike and care for the lowly, lift up the fallen. Women of note, don't neglect to cultivate the friendship of the farmers' wife.

Lost Cove, Col.

MRS. R. V. RUPP PLEADS FOR A NEW DEPARTMENT.

I have been praying and planning, and working and hoping for the coming of temperance work and literature into the country. THE UNION SIGNAL once contained a good suggestion in reference to two or more white-ribboners going out into the country school-houses, etc. I said: "Praise the Lord. That is getting right down to business. It is the beginning of the end." I worked on, prayed on, and have felt we might plow a furrow straight through to victory. Had we gone into the country, taken our work to the farmers in the beginning of their People's Party reform work, we would not be disappointed in them now. We must get out among the farmers. They cast a large per cent of the vote we need. They so eagerly enjoy all the temperance talks coming to them in Sunday School, Sunday School conventions and public meetings. I know of no church in the country I could not crowd to hear of our work and aim.

I venture to say Kansas soil holds women who feel that God has inspired and fitted them for this work alone. I, for one, have clung to the rock of assurance, almost alone at times, when the waves seemed to promise only a watery grave of defeat, but I'd go again to God in prayer and at last I had for my answer: If the W. C. T. U. will get upon its knees, get filled with the spirit as in crusade days, deliverance will come.

One pastor said to me: "You are right. No party will get into power without the help of the farmers." Shall Kansas and Iowa be lost to prohibition? No, never! There is danger. If we want the people to come up with a thundering "no" we must organize every township for temperance work. I once said, "Mrs. Benjamin, I threw a pebble in the stream this morning; will it reach the shore?" She replied, "The pebble will not, but the ripple will." Let it speedily come ringing down from national headquarters that a new department has been added, and that it includes the farmers.

INTEMPERANCE IN THE LABOR MOVEMENT.

BY ANNIE B. E. JACKSON.

To our limited vision, cause and effect so often blend that a just separation is impossible. We are not obliged to assert as some do that the drinking habits of the mass of the people are due to their poverty nor that poverty is altogether due to the evil of drink; but looking at some of the facts we can see how closely allied the two questions are, how they act and react one upon the other and so learn that any help in solving the one must bring light bearing upon the other also.

Men and women overworked, with a low state of vitality and innumerable difficulties to meet, naturally turn toward anything that will afford temporary relief. Out of the hundreds whom it is estimated perish yearly in our large cities from exposure and destitution, a very large percentage are no doubt victims of intemperance, for cold, extreme heat and all forms of disease find a ready victim in one who uses intoxicants. Back of this large number is clearly seen a vast army of anxious, troubled men and women. "These are in our cities with their great foreign element," you say.

Well, turn from our cities to our mining regions, notably the Hocking Valley where even the slums of New York are rivaled in wretchedness and want and we see the same conditions.

In the midst of such misery, drinking is almost invariable. Several American manufacturers have testified that with solitary exceptions the men who work the longest are most given to dissipation. A person living under normal conditions can meet temptations more easily than one whose powers are taxed beyond endurance or than one burdened by enforced idleness.

Our blood must thrill as we read these words from the report of the secretary of the Mule Spinners Association, given in the United States Senate before the Blair committee: "It is dreadful to see those girls, stripped almost to the skin, wearing only a kind of loose wrapper, and running like a race-horse from the beginning to the end of the day; and I can perceive that it is bringing about both a moral and a physical decay in them. I must say that I have noticed that the hard, slavish work is driving these girls into the saloons looking scared and ashamed, and trying to go in without any one seeing them—good, respectable girls, too," and after a further description of them, this man, familiar with the subject adds, "drinking is most prevalent where working hours are longest. To be sure the laboring man with his family might enjoy many of life's comforts were he willing to forego what he deems his one great luxury."

The figures which give us some idea of our worse than wasted resources are familiar, but it is certainly gratifying to find that organized labor is beginning to make a study of this subject, and has repeatedly put itself on record as opposed to the use of intoxicants in a way that would do credit to societies made up of men of other mould. Mr. Powderly, head of the Knights of Labor, gives forth no uncertain sound on this question. It has been said, and perhaps most truly, by the trades union of Atchison, Kansas: "The most deadly blow given to King Alcohol is in that declaration of the Knights of Labor, which proscribes any liquor dealer for membership in the order."

Professor Ely, of Johns Hopkins University, in his book, "The Labor Movement in America," after giving several instances of the good affected by labor organizations in this regard adds: "When I consider all these circumstances the temperance of the masses in America is a marvel to me." In a letter to working men he writes: "There is no atom of help to you nor to any in drink, the poor man's curse so often and so often the rich man's shame. Every effort to promote temperance among you should receive the warmest encouragement."

"THE LAST FEATHER."

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

No doubt the camel owner whose cruelty has become historic, was never willing to follow to their source the train of causse which carried off his poor beast in the fatal "Last Feather." He perhaps said it was paralysis, and may have admitted the paralysis was caused by strangulation of the spinal marrow. But it is probable he stopped at this point. So we moderns say the great Jones died of heart failure, and Brown died of nervous exhaustion, and Robinson of Bright's disease, and as modern invention multiplies our power of performance, we pile new burdens upon our backs regardless of the fact that even like camel backs, there in a limit to what they will bear.

But against danger from overloading, the average man has certain protections the average woman has not. The great stresses of illness in the family, and poverty, bear from the nature of her relations, most heavily upon woman. She is the nurse and the economist who, by loving invention and unsparing self-spending, multiplies dimes into dollars. Then, though his work pursue him into his home, a man has always the daily change from his office or shop, and he is in a thousand nameless ways ministered to. The married woman who can spend every evening in the week reading papers, if she choose, is far to seek. She is either very young or very old, not yet in the worry of life or beyond it.

The accidents of her work bring her no brief outings. The doctor goes abroad to his county, state or national convention. The preacher attends his state and national convocations, the merchant goes to a great city to buy goods, and so on, but until the family pocket-book gets to be quite fat, the most a wife and mother can indulge in, is a nerve-wearing visit. I speak with feeling; a visit may be a change, but it is not a real vacation and is usually quite the opposite.

Now because from every quarter since the world was self-surrender has been preached to women, and her environment has systematically compelled it, and these busy days push more and more of the world's work upon her shoulders, it is well for women to remember, "that he who is wise, is wise for himself," and though some things are beyond our power, we can at least refrain from overloading ourselves.

When I first began housekeeping I determined to give a few friends a high tea, which should be a marvel in its way. My kitchen lady had nothing to recommend her but her good intentions, and as I must depend upon myself, I planned out a menu which I could prepare and have some nerve force left over. But on the morning of the eventful day I fell a victim to the wiles of some gooseberries. I had once been an adept at making gooseberry fool, so I spent an extra hot hour over the stove, and the result was a superfluous dainty, a weariness that almost defied concealment, and a day and a night of blinding headache. The moral of this experience I leave the reader to point. Dear friends, be not self-deceived. We women too often cut the wood for our heaviest crosses of work and worry, too often lay upon our own shoulders the last fraction of weight that cripples or kills.

CONTENTMENT.

I'm glad I am a little girl,
  And have the afternoons for play;
For if I was a busy bee,
  I s'pose I'd have to work all day.

And if I was an owl, I'd be Afraid to keep awake all night;
And if I was an elephant,
  How could I learn to be polite?

And if I was a Jersey calf,
  I might forget my name and age;
And if I was a little dog,
  I couldn't read the Children's Page.

My sakes! When I begin to count,
  It makes my head go all awhirl,
There are so many reasons why
  I'm glad I am a little girl.

CIGARETTES.

BY META LANDER.

Do you care to know how they are made? I think I can enlighten you. An Italian boy only eight years old was brought before a justice in New York City as a vagrant, or, in other words, a young tramp. But what did the officer charge him with doing? Only with picking up cigar stumps from the streets and gutters. To prove this he showed the boy's basket, half full of stumps, water-soaked and covered with mud.

"What do you do with these?" asked his honor. What do you think was his answer? "I sell them to a man for ten cents a pound, to be used in making cigarettes." Not a particularly agreeable piece of information, is it, boys?

In our large cities there are a great many cigar-butt grubbers, as they are called. It certainly is not a pretty name, though very appropriate, for it is applied to boys and girls who scour the streets in search of half-burnt cigars and stumps, which are dried and then sold to be used in making cigarettes.

But this isn't all, nor even the worst of it. These cigarettes have been analyzed, and physicians and chemists were surprised to find how much opium is put into them. A tobacconist himself says that "the extent to which drugs are used in cigarettes is appalling." "Havana flavoring" for this same purpose is sold everywhere by the thousand barrels. This flavoring is made from the tonka-bean, which contains a deadly poison. The wrappers, warranted to be rice paper, are sometimes made of common paper, and sometimes of the filthy scrapings of rag-pickers, bleached white with arsenic.

Think of it, boys, the next time you take up a cigarette and drop it—as you would a coal of fire. The latter would simply burn your fingers; but this burns up good health, good resolutions, good manners, good memories, good faculties and often honesty and truthfulness as well.

A bright boy of thirteen came under the spell of cigarettes. He grew stupid and subject to nervous twitchings, till finally he was obliged to give up his studies. When asked why he didn't throw away his miserable cigarettes, the poor boy replied with tears that he had often tried to do so but could not.

Another boy of eleven was made crazy by cigarette smoking and was taken to an insane asylum in Orange county, New York. He was regarded as a violent and dangerous maniac, exhibiting some of the symptoms peculiar to hydrophobia.

What can we do, dear boys, to protect you against this dreadful foe? How can I adequately set forth the perils of this tobacco habit, to which you are drawn, not only by the example and the persuasions, but sometimes the ridicule of other boys, and by various snares set for your unwary feet?

Would that I could persuade you not even to glance at the temptation which comes in offers of pictures—if only you comply with certain miserable conditions.

"If."

Will you not settle that "if" now and forever with an emphatic No?

Will you not deliberately resolve: "I will never touch another cigarette; I will never use tobacco in any form"? This will be your best gift to a loving mother and sister. And it would give me greater pleasure than I can express to receive such a pledge from you. I would put your names down in a book and keep it always as a precious memorial.—Christian at Work.

SUPPOSE.

Suppose you had a great, big, strong soldier, well armed, who marched by your side all the time, ready to fight all your battles, and keep every one from harming you. Wouldn't you feel safe?

Suppose you had the wisest man in all the world, whose gray head contained all the wisdom of every book in the world, to sit down by your side and tell you anything you wanted to know, and advise you in all your difficulties, telling you just what course would bring you out all right. Wouldn't you feel safe?

Suppose you had the most beautiful and most loving woman in all the world to take care of you—some woman who never got sick, and never died, and never went away, and was always just the same loving and tender and beautiful one, to watch over you and comfort you as long as you lived. Wouldn't you feel safe?

Suppose you had the most sensible friend in all the world to help you do your work—the man of all men who knew best just what to do and how to do it; the man of the most skilful hands and best trained mind and warmest, most sympathetic heart; and suppose he was entirely devoted to you, and liked nothing better than to help you. Wouldn't you feel safe?

Open your eyes, children, and you will see just such a strong and wise and loving and useful friend close beside you. It is the dear Jesus, who is just as really there as if your hands could touch him. He will never leave you, because He has promised to stay with you, and protect you, and help you, and teach you, and love you all your lives. Don't you feel safe?—Amos R. Wells, in The Golden Rule.

AN INDIGNANT SCHOLAR.

Such a horrid jogafry lesson!
  Cities and mountains and lakes,
And the longest, crookedest rivers,
  Just wriggling about like snakes.

I tell you, I wish Columbus
  Hadn't heard the earth was a ball,
And started to find new countries
  That folks didn't need at all.

Now, wouldn't it be too lovely
  If all that you had to find out
Was just about Spain and England,
  And a few other lands thereabout?

And the rest of the maps were printed
  With pink and yellow, to say,
"All this is an unknown region,
  Where bogies and fairies stay!"

But what is the use of wishing
  Since Columbus sailed over here,
And men keep hunting and 'sploring
  And finding more things every year?

Now show me the Yampah river,
  And tell me, where does it flow?
And how do you bound Montana?
  And Utah and Mexico?

I'VE LEARNT TO ANSWER NO!

Somebody asked me to take a drink,
What did I tell him—what do you think?
  I told him No!

Somebody asked me one day to try
A pipe or cigar, but by way of reply,
  I told him No!

Somebody asked me one day to play
A game of cards, and what did I say—
  I told him No!

If sinners entice thee, consent thou not,
My Bible said, so on the spot
  I told him No!

PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND is a great favorite with the boys. He is so original and interesting. In the course of a talk with a company of the Boys' Brigade, he referred to the wild "animal" in our nature, and said, "Well, when you are tempted to be fierce like a tiger, or to be sulky and surly like a bear, or to do a sneaking thing like a serpent, you at once know where that comes from. You can kill an animal by starving, and you can starve any temptation in the same way, so that it will have no power. Every boy confessed he had been tempted to tell lies, but if the machinery that works the lie has got so rusty by disuse all these years, the chances are you will never tell a lie again. There is a boy who loses his temper sometimes; if the boy stops feeding it, in ten years he will wonder he ever had a temper at all."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—"Boy dies of smoking cigarettes." This was the sad heading to a telegraphic dispatch which I read in a Chicago daily paper only a short time ago, and which must have sent a wave of sorrow and indignation through the heart of every person who read it. From Kokomo, Ind., the message came telling of the death of this thirteen-year-old boy who had been trying to win a prize offered by the cigarette manufacturers. In his room were found 988 empty cigarette boxes, lacking but twelve of the required number, 1,000, which would win the coveted prize. His life was thus made a sacrifice that the manufacturers of the poison might be enriched, and that they might be better able to supply the destructive material to spoil other lives.

Just think of it, boys and girls of the temperance army—ninety per cent of the boys in our public schools are said to be using this hurtful tobacco in some of its forms, the worst of which is the cigarette. Have you not a great work before you? First, to learn for yourselves the effects of its use, and second, to warn others concerning it. Read carefully the cigarette article on our page this week, and show it to others. Then determine for yourselves that you will never use this or anything which will defile these bodies of ours—the holy temples of God.

NEWMAN W. ADSIT.

Vischer's Ferry, Saratoga, Co., N. Y.

The World's Fair, or Jackson Park, has been open Sundays in name, on account of an order from the court forbidding the park to be closed to the public. Nearly all the exhibits are covered up each Sunday, and only a few people visit the place compared to the numbers who go on week days. I hope that the court will soon release the directory so that the Fair will be entirely closed on the Sabbath.

I would like to join the Cozy Corner,

And work for temperance and the Lord,

Dear me, at this rate we will have to establish a "poet's corner" within our circle. We all say "Amen" to those lines, Etha.

Of course you know I am an L. T. L. girl, and when I get old enough to join the Y's I will wear the white ribbon. Our Y's here had an entertainment, and got eighty dollars to spend for temperance. One of the ladies here organized a society for the Children's Aid Society. I belong and we make clothes for the children.

For one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren.—Matt. 23:8.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF CHRISTIAN SOCIOLOGY.

The new society whose name is given above was organized last July at the New York Chautauqua. It numbers among its officers many noted men of this country. Its president is no other than Prof. Richard T. Ely, the well-known political economist. Leading the list of its vice-presidents are Bishop John H. Vincent and Dr. Strong, while among the members of its council we find Dr. Lyman Abbott and a number of the best known and most progressive college presidents. The objects which the institute has in view are stated thus: (1) to claim for Christian law the ultimate authority to rule in social practice; (2) to study in common how to apply the moral truths and principles of Christianity to the social and economic difficulties of the present time; (3) to present Christ as the living King and Master of men, and His kingdom as the complete ideal of human society to be realized on earth. Some of the ways in which the society plans to carry on its work are by the publication of leaflets and other literature bearing on sociological topics and by securing preaching and lecturing upon these topics. Local institutes will be formed for the study of the subject and an annual convention of the general body will be held. Any one can become a member by applying to the secretary, Prof. J. R. Commons, Bloomington, Ind. No membership fee is charged but each member is expected to make whatever annual contribution his interest in the cause prompts and his financial ability enables him to do.

Notwithstanding the great number of societies which already exist, we believe there is need of this new organization and we rejoice in it as an added indication that the best men and minds are giving their attention to the subject expressed in the name and purposes of the organization. We hail it as one of the most important of the systematic, organized attempts of these recent years to solve our difficult social problems by the application of Christian principles. The object of the association might not be incorrectly stated as the investigation of the science of applied Christianity. It is one of the most hopeful signs of the times that men are awaking to the fact that applied Christianity is the most needed and nearly the most neglected of the sciences. The abstract principles of Christianity as of mathematics are little questioned, it is in the application of the principles of both sciences where men make their fatal errors. As the Master prophesied, Christianity has been the little leaven, slowly and steadily leavening the whole lump, but it has done its work too often in spite of the misconception of its adherents. The mistakes of Christians in the application of Christian principles form some of the saddest epochs of history and have been the greatest obstacles to the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

In the Spanish department of the Art Gallery in the World's Fair is a picture entitled, "The Triumph of the Holy Cross." It represents hundreds of wretched, naked barbarians chained by the necks to one another and forming a circle. In the center are a large number of horsemen carrying aloft the cross and riding outward over the helpless, chained victims. The picture should be named "The Humiliation and Dishonor of the Holy Cross," for never does Christ's cause suffer such loss as when those who claim to be its defenders strive to advance it by violence and bloodshed. Strange that the followers of Him who said: "I came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them," should so terribly mistake His will. Yet the past nineteen centuries is full of just such errors.

"Bear witness, O thou wronged and merciful one,
That earth's most hateful crimes have in thy name been done."

Applied Christianity is what the world is suffering for to-day. Every Christian will admit this and yet comparatively little effort has been made to test our entire national life by the rules of Christ and bring it under His dominion. We do not forget or underestimate the work of the Christian church. We know that it labors faithfully to make all the kingdoms of the world the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Nevertheless, its work has been with the individual chiefly, to implant Christ in the human heart and let His life within, manifesting itself in the outward life, reform society—the little leaven leavening the whole lump. This is the first, the greatest, the one absolutely necessary work without which all other is in vain. Christian fruit cannot be grafted on to a tree which has not the Christ life within.

But while this is the first and essential prerequisite, it is not the last. The W. C. T. U. is a concrete attempt to apply Christianity to a great evil. Our work has taught us many things. The greatest fact we have learned is that the liquor traffic, against which we primarily make our attack, is so interlaced with our complicated civilization that it and other great evils must be destroyed together, hence our branching out into the many departments which has brought upon us so much criticism. The good sister who at the first convention for organization confidently declared that "the whole work would be completed in twelve years," supposed that the liquor traffic stood alone. Twenty years of devoted work and repeated defeat have taught us better. Nor have we waited until now to learn that not only is the liquor traffic "entrenched behind the solid walls of legislation," but that it also strikes its roots deep into our competitive system. It is because the wealth of a large class is invested in the liquor business that the battle for temperance is so fiercely contested, and it is the competitive system, which makes of life a mere struggle for existence, that gives to great business interests their power. Anything, therefore, which helps to solve the economic problems of the day is an ally of the temperance host. The W. C. T. U. gave practical recognition to this fact in the establishment of the department of the relation of temperance to capital and labor.

We recognize in the new Institute of Christian Sociology a strong ally, but the relation of this society to temperance is merely incidental. The direct need which called it into being is very pressing. The social disturbances of recent years, the conflicts between labor and capital and the present financial crisis show to any thoughtful observer the need of Christian principles in our social structure. A careful investigation shows that the application of those principles will involve a radical reconstruction of our present social system. For these panics are constantly recurring features of the system, inherent in it, and no plan has been suggested by which they can be eliminated.

The causes which produce strikes and lockouts are being steadily aggravated. As our civilization advances the tendency is toward greater wealth for the wealthy and more abject poverty for the poor; above all, the foundation principle of our competitive system is selfishness, the flat contradiction of the spirit of Christianity. The clearest minds have perceived and voiced the certainty of a social revolution. In an article discussing the new organization, Chancellor McDowell, a member of the council, says: "Society has many Christian features, but it is not yet wholly Christian. Society seems to be in the throes of universal changes. This new institute proposes that Christian sentiment and forces shall preside in the social reconstruction."

Those sentences strongly and clearly express the situation as it appears to the most thoughtful minds, and what should be the deliberate, intelligent purpose of Christians. If a social reconstruction is indeed at hand Christian "sentiment and forces" ought to "preside at the reconstruction." But to accomplish this Christians must understand the signs of the times. They must know the meaning of the present unrest and turmoil, and be prepared to accept the new order toward which we are tending. It may be urged and we do not deny that God rules in the affairs of men, and that human society has passed through great revolutions though the actors in the events were unconscious of the changes going on around them; that from those revolutions it emerged into a totally different order, which no one foresaw. In feudal times men saw in the chaos around them only intimations that the end of the world was at hand. The Christian bard but voiced the universal belief when he sang, yet out of all the evil and the chaos humanity came into the order and unity of modern society. So, too, in the great changes before us God will stand "behind the shadows, keeping watch above His own."

"The world is very evil,
The times are waxing late,"

But while God thus overrules the ignorance of men it is also true that in human affairs He works through men. He has given us the strange power to be co-workers with Him and to help or hinder His plans for us. We may not be able to see just whither we are tending nor to determine by what course we are to reach it, yet much of the loss and suffering which always attend these radical changes in human society may be averted if consecrated men and women are awake to the changes which are taking place and are prayerfully striving to know God's purpose.

That a great change is before us we do not doubt. It remains for us to say whether we shall be driven like a disabled ship upon the rocks and quicksands which lie at the mouth of the sheltering harbor or whether we shall wisely and carefully take our bearings and steer safely into port. In either case, humanity will in the end reach its destination but in the one case, our nation and our civilization may be lost in the wreck and humanity be doomed to await the slow and painful reformation of a new order from the ruins of the old. In the other, all that is best of the present may be preserved and the new be simply the transformation of the old. Such work as that proposed by the American Institute of Christian Sociology is what we must do if we do not purpose to drift blindly on. Our most careful thought may not enable us to discover just what form society is to assume in the future, but we shall at least be following a safe path while we are studying how to "apply the moral truths and principles of Christianity to the social and economic difficulties of the present time" and seeking the establishment of Christ's kingdom "as the complete ideal of human society to be realized on earth."

THE GUILTY PERSON.

Of the drink-made criminal it may be said, as good Bishop Myriel said of Jean Valjean, "This soul is full of darkness, and sin is committed, but the guilty person is not the man who commits the sin but he who produces the darkness." In dealing, then, with the question of "criminology," the point for the humanitarian—for every one who loves his fellow man, to consider is, Who produces the darkness?

It will not be denied that strong drink is directly responsible for much of the darkness which fills men's souls and leads to the commission of crime. The friends and supporters of the liquor traffic, no less than its foes, declare that the saloon is promotive of lawlessness and vice; that it is the common source of the miasmatic streams, which, after courses more or less erratic, flow into our prisons, poor-houses and insane asylums.

But the primary cause of the darkness is not the saloon. The drink seller is but the agent which shuts out the light at the bidding of a higher power. What is this power behind the saloon? The government, which means the people. Who, then, is the guilty person? The voter. The man who votes to legalize the liquor traffic says, in substance: "Let there be darkness." Can we wonder at discord and confusion in our social and political life when men persist in thus subverting the divine purpose?

That so many good and patriotic citizens still maintain allegiance to liquor parties is due to their failure to recognize the moral and economic consequences of their position. We maintain now and always that no man understanding the significance of such action, together with its reflex influence, would willfully and deliberately aid in the production of darkness rather than light. He simply does not realize what he is doing. His own soul is still groping amid the black shadows of error out of which a fallen race is slowly struggling.

It has been truly said that our national sin is not drunkenness but the legalizing of drunkard makers. Until this nation legislate from the standpoint that there is no such thing as a "necessary" evil, until it refrain from complicity with the Prince of Darkness, government (federal, state or municipal as the case may be) must be held guilty of crimes committed under the influence of mental and moral darkness engendered by state regulation of vice.

Woman has reason to rejoice in one thing: Though a multitude of sins has been laid at her door it can never be said that she is responsible for our national sin. We are truly glad that the modern Adam, when summoned before his Creator and Judge to answer for the works of the liquor traffic, can never say, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me is the one to blame."

There are many ways in which a man may aid in dissipating the darkness which fills his neighbor's soul and paralyzes his higher instincts, but there is no one way which would bring such a flood of universal light as that of legislating the whole drink business out of existence. And yet there are "good, moral citizens" who say, "As long as it best serves the interests of my party, let it flourish! I am not my brother's keeper."

We do not like to think that in these enlightened days there breathes a professing Christian with a conscience so dead as to pray on one side and vote on the other; who is so blind to his own personal interests in this world and in the next as to build his hope upon the sinking sand of party politics instead of on the solid rock of right principle; but if there is one who for fear of "losing his vote" arrays himself with the powers of darkness, we desire to remind him that if he cannot at one blow destroy the liquor traffic, he can at least refrain from building it up; if he cannot, by his own individual effort, bring light, he can at least stop helping to produce darkness.

If all the churches and church societies were to make as determined a resistance to the opening of saloons as they have to the opening of the World's Fair gates on Sunday, every drinking place in the land would soon be closed. If the Christian people of this country would boycott every political party that was in league with the rum power as they proposed to boycott a Sunday Fair, how long would either of the old parties—those great darkness producers—live?

No man can be a true disciple of Christ and the "light of the world" if he uphold, directly or indirectly, the traffic in strong drink. Let each individual voter ask himself, Am I in any way responsible for the darkness that fills men's souls? Am I supporting the power that supports the saloon? Am I the guilty person?

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. DAY.

Our World's W. C. T. U. Day, commemorating the birthday of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, the first round-the-world W. C. T. U. missionary, and honorary president of the World's Union, occurs September 22. This should become more and more each successive year, an established anniversary mile-stone, at which we pause for retrospection and to gather new hope and energy from the lesson of the year's progress.

This red-letter day also furnishes an abundant and favorable opportunity for telling the story of our efforts to link the countries of the world in what must prove a resistless opposition to the great drink evil.

The observance of the day can thus be made an occasion for the instruction and enlistment of new recruits to our growing army as well as for the encouragement and pleasure of its officers and privates,—a season of refreshment withal.

With all this in view the following outline or suggestive programs have been prepared, and we offer them to our readers and leaders among local and other unions, with the earnest desire that the hints afforded may aid in the preparations for the day. We do not issue a special World's number this year, as THE UNION SIGNAL is now a World's organ and for the past year has contained an abundance of World's news. The public gathering may be held upon the Sabbath following the World's W. C. T. U. day and the numbers and length of the program can readily be varied or altered to suit time, place and circumstance.

PROGRAM FOR W. C. T. U. MEETING.

HYMN—"God Be With You."

BENEDICTION.

Helps which we can heartily recommend to leaders preparing the above programs are to be found in the publications of the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. Among these are National leaflets numbers 56, 57 and 59, one cent each, Miss Willard's Annual Addresses, five cents, and "Round the World with the White Ribbon," by Mary Clement Leavitt, price ten cents. The correspondence and World's W. C. T. U. departments of THE UNION SIGNAL of the current year furnish latest news in regard to the World's work, especially the numbers of February 23, March 23, March 30, May 4, June 8, July 27 and August 31. The Mary Allen West memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL, January 19, 1893, and Sho Nemoto's leaflet contain complete information regarding the work of our late editor-missionary. The price of the latter is fifteen cents. Send for it and the new World's W. C. T. U. booklet (ten cents) to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill. Should it be desired to add the topic of young woman's work, the Oak and Ivy Leaf for June and July will be found of use. Concerning children's work, the Young Crusader of May and August, 1893, contains latest information.

For free distribution the following leaflets of the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago, are most available and appropriate: The Red Letter Day Specials, fifty cents and National Leaflets, 56, 57 and 59, ninety cents per hundred.

Unions that are alive or desire to be awakened cannot seize a more opportune time for a bold thought-awakening endeavor, or a revival of latent energies. Let us make the welkin ring with "The World for Temperance," and flutter the streamers of ribbon white for a loyal and telling anniversary, September 22.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

"The melancholy days have come."

when superintendents begin to call for "reports, reports," and too often call in vain. If our local unions would consider that it is just as important to know that work in any particular line has not been done as it is to know that work in some other line has been done, they would answer every letter of inquiry promptly. We give the rag-man the courtesy of a reply, even if we have no rags to sell. We certainly should be as polite to a W. C. T. U. superintendent. Our unions are a little too much like the woman whose husband said she had "no religion to speak of." If we have done "no work to speak of," let us testify to that effect, that our shortcomings may be known and superintendents thereby learn what are the needs of their departments.

We do not report simply to make a big showing, but to obtain facts. Reports are not a fancy display in a show window, but are an inventory of stock. Suppose that a merchant taking an inventory should not report that he was out of sheeting, that the stock of towels was low and but few calicoes were on hand, but that the silks were abundant, the laces well supplied and the kid gloves numerous. We should at once say that he did not understand his business. It is quite as needful to know what he lacks as wherein he abounds. So in reporting our work we need to know the true condition, and more especially if no work is being done than if work is flourishing. So, dear superintendents of local unions, please fill up your blank reports promptly, even if you can say no more to each question than "I do not know." "No." "Nothing at all," etc. The National superintendents should have the state reports by October 1, so that they may be ready for the Convention, October 16.

"Every thought is an embryo,
Every word is a planted seed;
Look to it well, that the seed you sow,
Be for the flower, and not for the weed."

Canon Wilberforce says regarding compensation to the liquor dealers for their vested interests: "I would as soon admit vested interests in small-pox. I would as soon compensate a cancer." Concerning the position of the Conservative Party of England on the temperance question, he declared it reminded him of the Irishman who said of his wife, "When I took her she had not a rag to her back, and now she is covered with them."

A Parsee woman named Miss Sobragi has been studying law at Oxford, England, and her friends say that she is going back to India to practice, "although there is good reason to think that the husbands there will be so jealous that she may be poisoned." She is at present with a legal firm in London. So far as I know this is the first venture of the Oriental woman into the domain of jurisprudence, but I hope that many women of equal talent emboldened by her gifts, courage and success may follow where her firm little hand has opened the door.

A young inebriate excused himself to a young white ribboner by saying, "My heredity is against me," whereupon she made him this well-instructed answer: "If you had lived up to your best heredity instead of down to your worst, you might have been a man of whom all your friends would have been proud."

Mrs. Josephine Butler says that in the early days of Queen Victoria, the British government wished to introduce a contagious diseases act, but could not make up its mind to ask the virgin queen to sign such a bill. England has carried the Bible, and alcoholic drink and legalized harlotry to every country she has conquered. The conception of legalized vice, so far as we know, was hatched in the brain of Napoleon Bonaparte a hundred years ago.

"Who Killed Cock-Robin," is the title of a new version of this old fable, written by the Hon. R. D. Gilmer, of Waynesville, N. C., who championed the scientific temperance instruction bill in the North Carolina legislature of 1891. He has given a most human-like scene of the trial of the sparrow, before "Judge Daw, versed in the law," and "a grand jury indeed" of twelve crows. This juvenile book is amply and fittingly illustrated, the most amusing illustrations being, perhaps, when the sparrow is led to court, "In chains by Sheriff Quail," and

. . . . "the widow Robin,
In her long veil a-sobbin'."

The allegory represents a wedding ball where the party "Quite freely drank of currant wine."

The trial is such a mimic of a court-room scene as to amuse the reader and I should think every Loyal Temperance Legion boy and girl in the United States would rejoice with the birds at the acquittal of the Sparrow since it was King Alcohol that killed Cock-Robin. It is a good omen when our legislators turn to writing temperance books for the children.

Mrs. Helen M. Barker stated during the woman's suffrage congress recently held that at the beginning the Board of Lady Managers was composed largely of women who were opposed to woman's suffrage but that nearly every member had now become an enthusiastic suffragist. The most notable convert is Mrs. Palmer. It is a fact beyond dispute that when women go into public work of any kind, the great majority of them become woman suffragists and full believers in the doctrine that each woman's sphere should be decided by herself. To us this is conclusive evidence that "God's facts" teach the full emancipation of woman and her restoration to her original, rightful position as the peer and companion of man in every field of work, but we suppose the opponents of woman's suffrage will regard it as proof positive that women should be kept at home. This, however, cannot be done. Women have gone out into the wide, wide world and having found how terribly its affairs are mismanaged and how much their presence is needed, they can never again be driven out of it. The question which confronts these people is no longer, "What shall be done with the women?" that is settled for them beyond a peradventure. The problem they have to consider is, "What shall they do with their theories?"

THE W. C. T. U. of Van Wert county, O., held their first gold medal contest on the evening of August 23. Six young girls took part and their rendering of telling temperance speeches was effective and cannot fail in awakening the public mind to the curse of our nation. Miss Ora Murphy spoke the well-known selection: "A Voice from the Poorhouse," and was awarded the medal. The contest was held in the opera house in Van Wert and the sale of tickets amounted to about forty dollars. During the day an excellent convention was held. This county has three unions and its officers are: Mrs. D. Augustine, president; Mrs. Jones, treasurer; Miss Emma Sammons, secretary.

THE SOUTHERN ASSEMBLY AND SCHOOL OF METHODS

was held in Waynesville during the last week in July, presided over by Mrs. Mary C. Woody, state president. Several departments were represented by those who had given much time and study to their special branches.

The baneful effects of narcotics was ably presented by Miss C. S. Burnett of Ohio. W. C. T. U. finances was shown from a successful and unsuccessful standpoint by Mrs. N. C. Weatherly of Greensboro, N. C. The subject of social purity was well handled by Mrs. Cadwallader of Georgia.

Mothers' meetings, as illustrated by Mrs. E. Turner, Asheville, N. C., was shown to be a most effective and permanent method of reaching weary women who know not how to find rest and peace in life's conflicts.

A class in physical culture was successfully taught in the afternoons by Miss Clegg.

Dr. Eavanson of Philadelphia, gave instruction on health and heredity. This drew forth lively discussion from opposite standpoints which interested and instructed the audience.

Bible readings throughout the assembly were made unusually attractive by various members and the noon hour was always made a blessed time to all present.

Mr. J. B. Ferguson, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Asheville, gave an excellent address on "How to Read the Scriptures," and his Bible reading was uplifting to all who heard.

Dr. Cadwallader, of Georgia, gave support to the assembly throughout; his Bible reading on trust was most helpful.

Mrs. Walter, of South Carolina, should be mentioned as giving a Bible lesson still different but equally helpful. The free discussion which often followed brought out not only experience and facts edifying to the Christian but suggestive methods also.

Among other points of interest in the assembly the eloquent address of the Rev. H. F. Chuetzburg, pastor of Asheville Central church, should be mentioned. Mr.

Chuetzburg is a genuine Prohibitionist; he arraigns the church in a fearless manner, and in a degree throws upon it the responsibility for the existence of the liquor traffic. He gave both sides of the dispensary law as now operated in South Carolina.

Governor Anderson gave some helpful hints and encouraging glimpses of what the future for our work may be.

We came away from this great health resort, nestled in the heart of the mountains, wishing all our weary women north, south, east and west could have such a time of refreshing on the mountain top each year. We believe that in time Waynesville will be a place visited by many more Christian workers than at present. During the remainder of the year the buildings will be utilized as an industrial school where the mountain children may learn kitchen-garden, kindergarten and more advanced training of which they now know nothing.

The music during the assembly is worthy of mention, especially that given by the Cherokee Indian Band.

Mrs. M. J. Branner, Waynesville, was reëlected solicitor for the memorial fund. She has given faithful attention to her work and reports that the Mary Allen West memorial fund is increasing its proportions. All contributions for memorials should be sent to the assembly treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Hilliard, Asheville, N. C.

The officers for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. A. A. W. Cadwallader, Augusta, Ga.; vice-president, Mrs. H. R. Walter, South Carolina; secretary, Miss Sally K. Stevens, Asheville, N. C.; treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Hilliard, Asheville, N. C.; general canvasser, Mrs. S. V. Tomlinson, Greensboro, N. C.

The vice-presidents are the state W. C. T. U. presidents of the eleven charter states.

BELKNAP QUARTERLY COUNTY CONVENTION

held a very interesting meeting in the Freewill Baptist church at Belmont, with Miss O. A. Knowles, of Meredith, president, in the chair, and Mrs. Carrie R. Hays, of Laconia, secretary. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. May Davis, of Belmont, followed by the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee." Mrs. Davis read a letter from Mrs. Mary L. Goodell, of Hillsborough Bridge, on evangelistic work.

Remarks were made by Mrs. A. C. Calef, of Tilton, in regard to the great need of reading rooms for the young men who go to the saloons for the want of better places. Mrs. Mitts Allen, of Belmont, spoke about organizing Current Event clubs. Mrs. Calef made very touching and impressive remarks on the subject of social purity. The noontide hour was led by Mrs. Rev. E. R. Philips, of Belmont. At 12:45 dinner was served by the ladies of Belmont.

The afternoon session at two o'clock was opened with singing and Scripture reading by Rev. J. B. Davis. An address of welcome by Mrs. E. R. Philips was answered by Mrs. May Hoyt, Laconia. We were all proud of both addresses. Miss Blanche Grant gave a recitation, "God Wants the Boys and Girls." Interesting and encouraging remarks were made by Revs. J. B. Davis, E. R. Philips and E. S. Moulton, all of Belmont. Mrs. Worcester Hoyt, of Laconia, and Mr. Sanborn, were also called upon. A paper was read by Mrs. Calef, subject, "Early Influences and Later Results." Good reports were received from the unions. At this time Rev. A. J. Wheeler, of Concord, was introduced to the convention. A paper was read by Mrs. Lizzie Brow, Lakeport; a letter was read from Mrs. Altie Philips, Kingsville, O., formerly president of Gilford union.

At 7:30 p. m. a lecture, given by Rev. A. J. Wheeler, was very bright, spicy and interesting. The church was decorated with potted plants.

The resolutions passed at the last Merrimack county convention denouncing the play entitled, "The Temperance Town," has called forth many comments from all over the state. Some so heartily approve of the movement that they urge every local union to indorse the same resolutions. At a public meeting in North Charlestown action was taken upon them and thanks sent to the chairman of the committee on resolutions.

The following queries were up for discussion at a recent W. C. T. U. meeting in North Charlestown and a decided "No" voted to all:

IS IT RIGHT—

To build churches to save men and at the same time license shops that destroy them?

To license a man to sell that which will make a man drunk and then punish the man for being drunk?

To license a man to make paupers and then tax sober men to take care of them?

To license a saloon to teach vice and then tax people for schools to teach virtue?

To derive a revenue out of a traffic which no decent man defends?

To teach boys not to drink and then vote to license a place where his worst passions are inflamed?

To take care of your own boy and license a place which will grieve your neighbor's boy?

To teach justice and charity and then vote to license a thing which robs the widows and orphans of their bread?

ROCKINGHAM COUNTY CONVENTION

was one of especial interest, and was in charge of Miss Abbie E. McIntire, county president, who gave an interesting address. Rev. Mr. Bean, of Seabrook, and Miss Fogg gave interesting accounts of how this community is interested in temperance. I wish that the various towns throughout our state might catch a like inspiration and awake from their indifference, then surely would the work of reformation be begun. Mr. Bean said what all the women truly feel, "The men should be ashamed of their want of backbone." Rev. Mr. Kimball spoke very encouraging words, and thought there was a growing interest in the world upon the temperance question. The children were to do much good work, and the work among railroad men was telling. Mrs. Clark reported scientific temperance instruction work done in the school in Auburn and the circulation of temperance pledges in the Sabbath-schools.

During the afternoon the L. T. L. came in and gave an entertainment. These little folks are making a quilt for the Mercy Home. Miss Sophia Bedell, of Exeter, recited "The Deacon's Match." Remarks were made by several gentlemen.

CHESHIRE COUNTY CONVENTION

at Fitzwilliam had a very bad day, but those who were present came forward with much earnestness, and the day, in spite of the weather, proved a very profitable one. The county president, Mrs. C. S. Moors, called the meeting to order. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, from Roslindale, Mass., was with them, and being ready for any emergency and never detained by the elements, gave many stirring words. She also lectured in the evening.

NOTES.

Keene union is alive and active, keeping many from the saloons by their coffee rooms.

Hinsdale union has twenty-eight active members and has held many evening meetings.

The ladies in Marlboro, attended the annual school meeting and exercised the right of suffrage. They have distributed ten thousand pages of literature and one hundred copies of The Young Crusader. They have sent fifty dollars to the Mercy Home and a barrel of books, magazines and comfort bags to the lumbermen in the northern part of the state.

Especial mention should be made from Hillsborough county of the report of Mrs. Goodale, of jail and almshouse work, which shows great faithfulness.

Miss Brown and Mrs. Corey, the police matrons in Manchester and Nashua are doing a noble work. Mrs. Corey has been presented with a badge, by the Nashua union as the insignia of her office, also a beautiful picture for the matron's room at the police station. Several homes have been won back to honor and purity by her earnest work and prayers.

The following officers have been chosen for Hillsborough county: President, Mrs. Emily R. Jewett; secretary, Mrs. Addie Jones; treasurer, Mrs. Mary Chase.

Miss C. R. Wendall, our state president, has been on a vacation including the World's Fair.

By invitation of the state Baptist association the W. C. T. U. occupied one day at their recent grove meeting at Weirs. Mrs. C. L. White, Somersworth, led the devotional exercises. Short addresses were given by several clergymen present. At 10:30, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, Roslindale, Mass., gave an address on "Who is Responsible?" The conclusion that the responsibility of the liquor traffic rests upon the indifferent people, was apparent to all. Mrs. D. W. Goodale, Hillsborough Bridge, superintendent of evangelistic work, conducted the devotional half-hour at noon. Mrs. Gov. Smith presided at the organ. In the afternoon Mrs. M. A. Chase, Manchester, gave some account of the work of the Mercy Home. A gold medal contest followed, conducted by Mrs. M. E. Tucker, Lakeport; Miss Nellie G. Corey, Franklin Falls, received the medal which was presented by Mrs. S. W. Bradbury, Boston, Mass., for several years a public school teacher there and a member of the Board of Education. Music was furnished by a quartette under the direction of Rev. W. Bradbury, Laconia, and by a little miss of Lakeport, Ada Bundy. Miss Wendall, state president, presided over the meeting.

The state convention will be held in Jefferson, among the mountains, the last week in September.

New unions have recently been organized in New Ipswich and West Unity.

HARRIMAN NEWS.

With the thermometer past ninety and reaching up toward one hundred in the shade almost continuously for the past six weeks or two months, our women have thought of little else but finding out the coolest place. After waiting several days over time, only one report of work done was sent in to me.

Harriman reports holding its meetings regularly through the past two months. They held a platform meeting the 13th of July. Five superintendents presented the work of their departments. Four read essays, which were well received, on account of their ability and fitness. These were prison work, mothers' meetings, legislative work and press work. The juvenile work spoke for itself in the active participation of the L. T. L. in the meeting.

They have appointed a committee to consider the advisability of doing some work at the county fair. It has been proposed to open a home for girls in connection with the temperance university, which opens September 12, and a committee has been appointed to ascertain what can be done.

A Demorest medal contest was held August 4. Eight young people recited so well it was difficult to decide between them. Miss Maude Keesler received the medal, and Miss Barnes a floral tribute as second best.

The first convention of the fourth district met at Harriman, August 1 and 2.

The executive committee of the district met at 2:30 p. m., August 1, and discussed subjects preparatory to the work of the following day. Among other things, the articles of a constitution and by-laws for a district union were approved by the committee and made ready for the action of the convention.

The evening session was occupied after the opening exercises with the address of welcome by Mrs. Alma Fitch of Harriman. The response by Miss Hannah Baker, president of Deer Lodge union, was followed by an earnest and instructive address by Mrs. Trego of Delaware, Ohio.

After an impressive consecration service conducted by Mrs. Trego at 9 o'clock, Aug. 2, the convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. Thayer. After the seating of the convention, Mrs. C. T. Cory was elected secretary and the business of the day was begun with reading the published program. Mrs. Verity suggested that we dispense with the proposed committee on constitution and that the whole convention discuss, adopt or reject as is thought best, which suggestion was adopted by consent.

A motion was made and carried that all ladies present who had signed the pledge be invited to seats as members of the convention. A motion was carried that the committees be appointed by the chair. Committees on finance, enrollment and resolutions were appointed. The constitution and by-laws were then read and adopted with the amendment of one article of the by-laws and one being rejected. Mrs. Trego of Delaware, Ohio, and Mrs. Harker, an Ohio Crusader, were made members of the convention and greeted with the Chautauqua salute. "Stand up for Jesus" was then sung after which the work of Deer Lodge union was presented by Mrs. Dunsmore in a manner which showed that Deer Lodge union is composed of earnest and faithful workers. Harriman union was reported by Mrs. Cory and the reports were accepted by the convention. Mrs. Watt read a poem entitled "Beautiful Hands."

Department work was presented as follows: Mothers' meetings by Mrs. Bridwell; press work by Mrs. Dimond. Noontide having arrived the convention was led in prayer by Mrs. Dunsmore, of Deer Lodge.

At 2 p. m. the convention was called to order by the president, with singing "Revive us Again," followed by prayer by Mrs. Whittier. Mrs. Watt favored us with a solo, after which Mrs. McDowell read an able paper on communion wine.

Mrs. Keller, superintendent of colored work, spoke in an able and feeling manner of the condition of the colored people throughout the land. One member of the L. T. L. recited in a manner which would have done credit to a fairer skin. Others sang and another recited, and we felt that Mrs. Keller's work had spoken for itself.

Mrs. Dunsmore, of Deer Lodge, read a paper, "How to Relieve the Suffering," which was followed by singing, "To the Work."

Mrs. Trego then spoke earnestly and with feeling from John 15:1. Report of committees followed. Mrs. McLauffin read in her own inimitable way a humorous selection which was much enjoyed by the audience.

The election of officers was next on the program with the following result: President, Mrs. T. H. Thayer; secretary, Mrs. C. T. Cory, of Harriman; treasurer, Miss H. Baker, of Deer Lodge. The following ladies were then nominated by the executive committee and elected district superintendents: Scientific temperance instruction, Miss W. Weaver; Sabbath observance, Mrs. Dunsmore, of Deer Lodge; prison work, Mrs. Anna Smith; juvenile work, Mrs. Manly, of Harriman. The convention sang "God be with you till we meet again," and was dismissed with the benediction.

The state convention of the W. C. T. U. will meet at Maryville, September 27, 28 and 29. The first evening will be given the address of welcome by some member of the local union, followed by the response by Mrs. Gardner, of Nashville. This will be followed by three-minute talks from local presidents. Services will be held in memory of Mary Allen West, Jennie Casseday and our own loved Belle Sasser. The papers to be read at this service are by Mrs. Holman, Mrs. Bang and Mrs. Roach. Mrs. Meriwether delivers her address of welcome evening of 28, and will speak again on the evening of 29. We hope to have a good convention with a rousing attendance.

OREGON.

QUARTERLY CONVENTIONS.

I made my last letter a state convention report entirely, and consequently some of our little quarterlies have been shunted back from their proper place in point of time. The farthest away of all was that of my own county, although still fresh in my mind as being very pleasant and inspiring. It was held at Monroe, a little town away off from railroads on our side. However, the Oregon rains, that bring the sides of the "chuck holes" beyond the hub of the wheel, are good to keep the river steamers running, so by water we came, the kind friends at Monroe fetching us with their teams. This town it was that had made such a stalwart fight to rid herself of the saloon, and has still a case in docket against an unjust count of names on the remonstrance to the saloon petition. Although Mr. Saloonist is there pending the hearing, the agitation has worked up so much feeling against him that he has little enough custom, and he will have to go (he says) of his own accord.

We had Mrs. Riggs with us to help us, Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, National organizer and Mrs. Kate H. McClung, of Eugene, state evangelist, besides the little lights of our own county. In fact, on the second evening there was, as the French say, quite an embarras de richesse. Mrs. Additon had a comprehensive and able paper on the labor question. With our very good music and excellent recitations, we "kept it up" till quite late at night. Our steamer deserting us on our way home, we were benighted at the little wharf—ten white-ribboners, thankful for a "shake-down" on a hard but hospitable floor, and so we determined "To drive the cloud of blues away,

By telling all in golden rhyme
The story of this gloomy time,
For fear the world would never know it
Each sought to prove herself a poet."

This is the last time for a similar convention, for our county has been cut in twain. I only will have the privilege of belonging to both from having a ranch summer home in the "burnt woods" of the new county.

Our convention with Mrs. Wallace, the president, and her husband, the minister of the place—quite a leading spirit—was a lively and interesting one. Indeed, some local points brought out almost too live a discussion, but department work was not neglected nor the usual trouble—finance! The collections were good and helped us to pay our way well.

County conventions ought to pile up, as we have now seventeen organized counties as against eleven last year.

Love county met early this year under the guidance of Mrs. Sawyers, the president, with our state president there to assist. Mrs. Condon, of Eugene, gave an eloquent address, the "Mother in Temperance Work," and her report of the Eugene reading room, a new venture, was very encouraging for those about to embark similarly. The open air gospel meetings held at Eugene have been very successful and productive of much good. Mrs. G. M. Miller (quite a writer herself, and daughter-in-law of the well-known poet of the Sierras, Joachin Miller) urged the use of original matter in our press work as being much more acceptable to editors as well as the public they cater to.

Miss Trumbull, the "White Rose" of the Y's, spoke stirringly at the evening session, as she did at the Polk county convention, quickly following on that one. (I omit these dates, being too stale.) Her subject was "Mary and John," and as one gentleman remarked, "She gave us something to think of." Although so youthful a maiden, she is not afraid to speak on subjects that touch maidenhood to-day in so sore a manner, and that have been for so long preserved in a shameful and shame-faced silence.

Mrs. S. H. Spangler, a Methodist minister's wife, sharing in the ministerial work, has lately moved to Marion county, and made haste, as is her wont, after her many removes, to call the county to arms. Her convention was held lately, and she has arranged for quarterly meetings. I think it won't be a bad thing for Oregon, if she keeps on making about biennial removes to each of our unorganized counties in turn until they are all in working order.

Sherman county convened likewise before the meeting of the state. Mrs. Jennie Leet, who did much in Benton, has now moved to Sherman, where she does not allow herself to remain idle. Miss Maggie Eaton, the president, is the lady who drives Mrs. Riggs on her trips all over her mountain roads, and has proved herself a capital pioneer in more ways than one. Mrs. Edgington and her L. T. L. distinguished themselves one evening, when her young army gave a hoop drill, which quite rivetted the audience.

Yam Hill county met at Newberg, the seat of the Friends, who know how to prepare many good things for such occasions. The evening address was to have been made by Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, but she being detained by sickness, Mrs. Delle Cox was equal to the emergency.

Washington county met the same week at Forest Grove, a university town, where the inhabitants have shown themselves mindful of the youth brought into their midst by perseveringly fighting by legal measures to keep the saloons away from their town. This local warfare was the question of paramount interest at the convention.

A very useful paper was read at the Wasco county convention by Mrs. C. I. Donnel, on the onward march of the W. C. T. U., emphasizing temperance literature as a most necessary staff for the way, as well as the suppression of impure reading as one of the stones of hindrances to be gathered up.

An equally interestirg paper in the shape of a social purity report was read by Mrs. O. J. Bales at the convention in the neighboring county of Union. It met at Summerville on June 14. Mrs. Riggs had assisted at this as well as most of the foregoing conventions. I should judge this must be the banner county for Demorest contests, seeing five silver medals had been held during the year. Astoria and Pendleton had likewise held them.

Some of the locals have been up and doing, Grant's Pass, for instance, with its gospel temperance meetings of so aggressive a character, that they have set the rum power up in arms. It is likewise circulating a petition to close all business houses on the Lord's day; and interesting itself, too, in starting a reading room.

The Sheridan union being invited to participate in the celebration of the Fourth of July, engaged Mrs. Delle Cox to deliver the oration, which she did in a highly satisfactory manner.

The young union of Heppner, in the midst of the wool-raising country is progressing well, meeting weekly in the Baptist church. It has opened a reading-room which is much appreciated by the citizens.

Gardiner is jubilant and thankful for the success of its efforts in banishing the saloon by means of the remonstrance petition, which is available by law in towns without a charter.

The L. T. Legion branch continues to grow and strengthen. At Wasco were the first commencement exercises when four members graduated from that town and three from the adjacent Moro. Oregon boasts forty-seven organizations, thanks to the untiring efforts of Mrs. Ada Unruh.

Immediately after convention Miss Ackermann, whom we had welcomed there, visited several of the valley towns, where all who heard her were deeply interested in her addresses. Miss Jennie Smith and her traveling companion, Miss Sherman, had been through Portland before that and organized a temperance society among the railroad employés in Albina.

After state convention our president resumed her "field" activities. In response to a call she spoke at the state Sabbath-school convention which was held at Newberg. "This afforded me," she says, "a fine opportunity to speak on the 'Relation of the church to the liquor traffic' to a large and representative audience. The opportunity was far beyond what it is to appear at a W. C. T. U. convention, as the audience was not only large and representative as to numbers, but also as to character and locality."

She likewise spoke by invitation on Sabbath afternoon for the Y. M. C. A., in Portland, and another Sabbath for the Good Templars. But I will quote from her logbook.

"When visiting Coos Bay, I effected a county organization for Coos county, on which occasion I spoke both evenings, and conducted the department drill during the day. Assisted Mrs. Spangler in a two days' school of methods at Silverton besides a number of minor appointments, and kept up my part of the work for the White Ribbon and Refuge Home."

From press reporter, Mrs. Cox, I hear that: "The Newberg union held the Jennie Casseday memorial service with crowded house and collection taken for the Jennie Casseday Home. Since then we have had our public meeting addressed by Prof. Joseph Moore, of Earlham College, Indiana, and a W. C. T. U. picnic where a good program was rendered, including a bountiful dinner with ice cream, and thirteen new members were the result. We expect to have another soon in another locality. Go and do likewise; let us carry our W. C. T. U. into every adjacent neighborhood. In spite of the Fair at Chicago, in spite of the hard times, in spite of midsummer weather, we are keeping up our business and mothers' meetings regularly, and hold very few meetings without adding new names to our roll.

Yam Hill county has just held its second gold medal contest at Dayton, the other was held at McMinnville, and in this case as in the other, Newberg carried off the medal, Stella Lyon and Mary Cook being the happy winners. We expect to hold another contest in October. We had a crowded house at Dayton with thirty-two dollars receipts at door.

Yam Hill county expects soon to inaugurate quarterly conventions and to this end a mass convention or conference has been called to meet in Amity in October, when a school of methods and general discussion of our work will be interspersed with music and addresses, and a more perfect organization is hoped to be effected throughout the county.

The memorial service was held in Corvallis under the auspices of the Y's. I should like to add a word concerning the success of our junior Y's. They number now twenty-four earnest and energetic members, and have full and interesting meetings. Boys and girls have equal privileges. They edit between them an able little journal which is read with much interest at their weekly meetings. They have committees for flower mission work, visiting the sick, etc., and a social of some kind monthly. They require all members to sign the triple pledge, but those, who so desire, are permitted to limit the obligation to their twenty-first year.

L. A. NASH,
State Reporter, Corvallis.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS ELIZABETH U. YATES, who has been very ill is now recovering and will probably be able to resume lecturing by October.

DR. ANNA SHAW will be in Oil City, Pa., for one date, September 3, at Franklin, September 4, and at Hickory on the 5th at the Forest county W. C. T. U. convention.

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was held at Coventryville, Chenango county, N. Y., August 24. The medal was won by John R. Whitney, and the second prize by Miss Mamie Pearsall.

THE Venango county, Pa., L. T. L. convention held at Siverly, August 16, was a gratifying success, giving to this department a "come to stay" appearance which it sadly lacked before.

THE W. C. T. U. convention of Venango county, Pa., meets at Franklin, September 20. Rev. Henrietta G. Moore will make the address on the first evening and a gold medal contest is being prepared for the second evening.

CLEARFIELD, Pa., is to have an eight day campaign under the joint auspices of the W. C. T. U., the Y. P. S. C. E. and the Epworth League, under the leadership of Major Geo. A. Hilton. It is thought Bellefonte and Butler and other points will fall in line under the same strong union of forces—one that in any community should work mightily for righteousness and temperance.

CAMPBELL PARK Presbyterian church was the scene of the third annual convention of the third district Illinois W. C. T. U. last Tuesday. The forenoon and afternoon sessions were occupied with papers on important departments of work following the devotional exercises and reports of work by unions. A question box was conducted by Mrs. Louise Rounds, state president, who also delivered the address of the evening, "The Three Reasons."

NOTICE.

To State Corresponding Secretaries:

The blanks for the annual tabulated statement for the National report have been sent to each state corresponding secretary to the address given in the Annual Leaflet. If any have failed to receive a copy they should let me know at once and duplicates will be sent. I shall send out no other blank this fall but ask each secretary to present her report in such form as she may desire.

I however wish to ask that all distinctly state work be carefully and fully reported somewhat in detail; at least enough so to give the reader a clear idea of its scope and purpose.

No credentials will be sent out before the Convention opens, but the plan which I inaugurated some years since and which has now come to be used in many states, will be adhered to. CAROLINE B. BUELL,

NARCOTIC BULLETIN.

[This bulletin is prepared for the use of state superintendents.]

Hundreds of acres of tobacco in Connecticut and Pennsylvania were damaged by hail early in August and will be plowed under as fertilizer.

An important amendment to the factory law in New York City regarding the goods manufactured in "sweating shops" went into effect in April. It contains a clause regarding tobacco. No person can manufacture cigars or cigarettes in the living room of another without a written permit from the factory inspector.

Ohio's cigarette tax went into effect August 1. The new law taxes the wholesalers of cigarettes three hundred dollars, and retailers one hundred dollars a year. An effort is being made to prove the law unconstitutional. If this fails, a tobacco wrapper will be put upon the ordinary cigarette and the result labeled "cigarine."

"The dullness in tobacco manufacturing in the past few months is strikingly illustrated," says the Western Tobacco Journal, in its comparisons between the manufacture of the first four months of 1892 and 1893. In the first four months of this year the total does not exceed 82,000,000, as against 85,315,000 pounds the same period of 1892, showing a clear decline of at least 3,300,000 pounds, which if continued through the year would show practically 10,000,000 pounds of a shortage, whereas in former years the increase was always from 8,000,000 to 13,000,000.

There seems to be no end to the discoveries that await us concerning bacteria, and the relations of those microscopic organisms to the well-being of man. Who would think that the peculiar flavors which characterize different kinds or brands of tobacco are due to the presence of bacteria? Yet that is the conclusion to which recent investigations by a German botanist lead.

In curing tobacco, or preparing the raw, green leaf for use, a fermentative process called sweating is gone through with. It has been supposed that the chemical changes induced by this process were the source of the peculiar qualities possessed by the cured tobacco, but according to Suchsland's experiment it appears that micro-organisms may be the real cause of the changes.

He has examined tobacco, which had been cured, from all parts of the world, and has found in it an abundance of micro-organisms, and upon cultivating the bacteria from a particular kind of tobacco, and then inoculating another kind with this culture, he has produced in it the taste and aroma of the original. Wines have already been improved by a similar process.

More money is spent for tobacco than for the necessaries of life, $24,700 per day being spent in Chicago alone.

The American tobacco company (the tobacco trust) last year made a profit of $4,000,000 from cigarettes.

The secretary of Atlanta University, at Atlanta, Ga., (where there are more than five hundred colored students in all departments) writes: "This is an anti-tobacco school; none is used on these grounds in any form whatsoever."

In the school of reform at Westborough, Mass., all the boys committed have been tobacco users, and nothing else gave the master so much trouble.

I want to meet all state superintendents of the department of narcotics who attend the National Convention in October. Please inform me if you expect to be present. Our next bulletin will be on opium.

ENTERTAINMENT FOR WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

Many questions have come regarding entertainment for delegates at the World's and National Conventions, therefore this announcement is made.

This being World's Fair year it is impossible to furnish free entertainment as heretofore, but we hope to be able to give in THE UNION SIGNAL from time to time, lists of hotels and boarding houses where good entertainment may be secured at reduced rates.

These lists will necessarily not appear till nearer the time of opening the Convention as terms given now might be changed to meet changed conditions in the large numbers who will possibly visit the World's Fair in October.

Effort will be put forth to make the securing of pleasant homes as easy as possible when the time arrives. Please watch for official notices in THE UNION SIGNAL.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Delaware W. C. T. U. will be held in Dover, September 27, 28, 29. The change of place is made because of conflicting circumstances in Wilmington, and the dates are earlier than usual to meet the earlier dates of the National Convention. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap is engaged for September 28, and other workers will be with us. Let us plan for our best convention this Columbian year.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form, and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

Our Library Table.

SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

SCRIBNER'S magazine for September is replete with things fresh and good. Lovers of rare literary "finds" will be particularly delighted with "A Thackeray Manuscript in Harvard College Library," by T. R. Sullivan. Enthusiasts of the fish-hook persuasion will be glad to read Alexander Cargill's excellent paper on "Izaak Walton." Edward J. Lowell gives a comprehensive discourse on "Clothes—Historically Considered," with illustrations by W. L. Taylor. Fiction devotees will mingle smiles and tears over Robert Grant's "Opinions of a Philosopher." "The Sharpness of Death," by Elizabeth Knight Tompkins, and "The Rich Miss Girard," by Harrison Robertson.

Charles Scribner's Sons, New York City.

LIPPINCOTT'S for September contains a paper entitled, "Uncle Sam at the Fair," by Captain Charles King, describing the government exhibit at Chicago, and telling how that part of it which relates to the army is thronged by visitors, while those which display the arts of peace are comparatively neglected. Mrs. Elizabeth Wormeley Latimer gives "A Girl's Recollections of Dickens" on his first visit to America in 1841. A short study of "Forest Fires," by Felix L. Oswald, is accompanied by his portrait. Judson Daland, M. D., writes of "Hypnotism, its Use and Abuse." Commander C. H. Rockwell, of the United States Navy, narrates "A Sea-Episode" on a fever-stricken ship. These are a few of the very readable contributions in this well-known and highly appreciated magazine.

J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

Ernest Hart, F. R. C. S., editor of The British Medical Journal, has an article in the September POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY tracing "The Pilgrim Path of Cholera." He shows that the hordes of pilgrims that gather at Mecca, Kalighat, and other sacred places, bathe in and otherwise pollute, yet at the same time drink the sacred waters, and then scatter to their homes, are the means of conveying cholera to the shores of the Mediterranean and across to southern Europe. The indescribable scenes on the banks of the sacred waters are shown from photographs. "Scientific Cooking," is the subject of an essay by Miss M. A. Boland, instructor in cooking in the Johns Hopkins Training School for Nurses. It is "a plea for education in household affairs," pointing out the dangers of improperly prepared food, and the need of systematic instruction in cooking.

D. Appleton & Company, New York City.

The September ATLANTIC MONTHLY contains an article, which will be of special interest for a considerable number of readers, on "Edwin Booth," by Mr. Henry A. Clapp, the eminent Boston critic, whose appreciation of Mr. Booth is equal to his skill in literary art in adequately describing him as an actor. A second article of special value just now is one on "Wildcat Banking in the Teens," in which the historian, J. Bach McMaster, gives much information with regard to the old state banks which some people fear are to be restored. Charles Egbert Craddock continues with even increased vigor the serial story, "His Vanished Star." Charles Stewart Davison has an article of very great interest on Swiss travel, "A Slip on the Ortler." Agnes Repplier writes in her incisive and engaging way on "A Kitten." "A Russian Summer Resort," furnishes a theme of excellent variety for Miss Isabel F. Hapgood. Miss Preston and Miss Dodge continue their translations and notes on Petrarch's Correspondence. President Walker, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, writes a strong paper on "The Technical School and the University," taking decided exception to some views advanced by Professor Shaler in the August number. Aline Gorren treats of the "Moral Revival in France." Notices of New Books and the Contributors' Club complete a very good number.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

GREELEY ON LINCOLN, with Mr. Greeley's Letters to Charles A. Dana and a Lady Friend, to which are added Reminiscences of Horace Greeley. Edited by Joel Benton, with a photo-sculpture portrait of Mr. Greeley, and a fac-simile of a part of his MS.

The treatise which gives the title to this volume, shows Mr. Greeley's mind in contact with the questions and the personality which, perhaps, were most prominent in the course of his own career, and to a certain extent epitomize it. The letters to Mr. Dana, and those to an intimate lady friend, not only cover rare periods and incidents in Mr. Greeley's life, but they show the naïve, unconscious motions of a mind never tempted to dissimulation, and (in the privacy for which they are intended) without motive to be other than sincere.

Penn, the noted evangelist of Eureka Springs, Ark., says: "I was cured of Catarrhal Deafness in 1886, by the use of the Aerial Medication, and it has proved to be a permanent cure; and I know of many cases of catarrh that have been cured by its use. Rev. J. H. Cason, of Russellville, Ark., was compelled to abandon preaching several years ago on account of lung trouble. I advised this treatment and after three months of its use he was cured and has been preaching ever since."

SEPTEMBER 28.

Our L. T. L. workers will please not forget that one of the plans adopted by the National for the Harvest Home celebration is the giving of a card to each child as a souvenir of the day. Of these we make two special offers. Note.

1. Cards with an autograph message from Miss Willard. Per 10, 15 cents.

2. Souvenir cards that have been prepared expressly for this Columbian year. They are of a delicate blue—the L. T. L. color—and contain a beautifully embossed picture of the Willard Fountain, together with the pledge in gold letters. We think them the most beautiful pledge cards now in stock, and we place them on the market for the first time for the Harvest Home card. But the price is even lower than that of other pledge cards.

Per 100, 60 cents. Send a two-cent stamp for sample.

NEW LEAFLETS.

We have just published a revised edition of National Leaflet No. 53, "Children in the Church," by Rev. C. C. Harrah. The author has carefully rewritten the original leaflet, bearing in mind the comments made on the first edition, and we are satisfied that the most ardent sectarian can find no fault with the present form. It ought to have a large circulation among Christian people, for the truth which it contains, a truth which we regard as vital to the success of the Christian church. Send for it.

BOOKS.

Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer.

By REV. S. B. SHAW. Cloth, $1.

This book is neither doctrinal nor denominational, yet distinctly Christian. Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer.

The Well-Dressed Woman.

By HELEN GILBERT ECOB. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.

This is a work which appeals to every intelligent mother. It is valuable in its exposition both in text and illustrations, of the artistic ideal and rules of dress, and is full of the best of advice for school-girls, young women at college and young mothers. Miss Willard and the whole corps of earnest workers in the W. C. T. U. are very hearty in their indorsement of this book, and it should be in the hands of every sensible woman.

Bright-Eyes

Or, Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon. Arranged by ALICE M. GUERNSEY. Price, 50 cents.

This pretty little quarto is ingeniously devised, so as to suggest to children, by means of outline pictures, the work of searching the Scriptures in order to find the passages which the vignettes chime in with. It will be of service to many a mother, or older sister, or brother, on a Sunday afternoon, in the endeavor to teach or interest the little ones.—Central Christian Advocate.

A Young Woman Journalist.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD. Cloth, $1.

A book designed by the author to stimulate other young women to "be something," to make the most of their opportunities.

A Woman's Evangel.

By EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH. Price cloth, $1.25

"This book will interest and benefit many readers. It has some literary merit, but its special feature is the fact that it is written to explain and advocate the various kinds of effort in behalf of total abstinence which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is making. The many members of, or sympathizers with, that influential organization, will read it with approval, and so will others."—The Congregationalist.

Columbus, and What He Found.

By MRS. MARY H. HULL. Price $1.

This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. There is already a large demand for this unique child's history among parents and teachers who desire to answer authentically all questions and controversies which come to the ears of children. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home-nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm.

Child's Christ Tales.

By ANDREA HOFER. Price $1.

In teaching little folks the Christ example by story, no book will help so much as this. It is written from the kindergarten standpoint, and full of deep, sweet truths simply told.

Around the World With Jesus.

By CHARLES A. CRITTENTON. This charming booklet describes the Holy Land and contains a sketch of Florence Crittenton Missions by Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press of World's W. C. T. U. Price, 35 cents.

As is well known by white-ribboners, Mr. Crittenton, the famous evangelist, already largely supports eight Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls, and at the Denver convention pledged $5,000 to the W. C. T. U. for founding five more missions under their auspices. These are now being established, and every cent realized from the sale of "AROUND THE WORLD WITH JESUS" will be given to the Florence Crittenton Missions, and every one whose heart throbs for our erring girls may aid the grand work for their redemption by circulating this little souvenir. It contains beautiful pictures of Mr. Crittenton, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and Mother Prindle, Matron of New York Mission, all white-ribboners, and it cannot fail to interest all.

A Literary Guide for Home and School,

By MARY ALICE CALLER, teacher of English classics in Alabama Conference Female College. Price $1.

The Literary Guide is the outgrowth of a need wisely considered, and in the hands of parents, teachers and friends must prove a valuable aid in the guidance of literary tastes.

FROM THE SCHOOL JOURNAL, THE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Some very useful books are issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Temple, Chicago. In A Song of Life, Margaret W. Morley treats the delicate subject of development. The White Ribbon Birthday Book contains a selection for each day. Elizabeth W. Harrison's book, A Study of Child Nature, is crowded with helpful suggestions for mothers and teachers. "Columbus, and What He Found," is a series of delightful talks between the author and her own children.

THE UNION SIGNAL AN EDUCATOR.

An earnest white-ribboner writes: "If our own women would take THE UNION SIGNAL it would be easier to induce outsiders to subscribe. I read at one of our late meetings the leaflet, 'The Hour and its Needs,' by Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, and secured three subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL. A lady who did not belong to our union said, 'If THE UNION SIGNAL is such an educator and helper I want it in my family,' and gave me her name."

If one woman in every union would send us four new subscribers we would be glad to send a copy to any minister named by the union free.

A pamphlet that will meet with a wide reading by members of the W. C. T. U. and its friends is one recently prepared by Sho Nemoto, and which contains the telegraphic communications and correspondence in Japan relative to Miss Mary Allen West's sickness and death and funeral. Sho Nemoto has translated these from Japanese to English and they contain many beautiful and touching passages. In the same pamphlet is also printed Miss West's most popular and effective address on "Citizenship," interpreted by Rev. S. Ogata. The translator says: "When she delivered this at Shiba church, Tokio, Japan, the house was packed with two thousand people." Price 15 cents.

A New Jersey Miracle.

Helpless for Years with Locomotor Ataxia and Rheumatism. His Case Pronounced Hopeless by the Leading Physicians of Sussex County.

(By Special Correspondence to the N. Y. Press.)

The busy little village of Branchville, N. J., has been the scene of a modern miracle. Chas. F. Struble, a well-known and prosperous farmer, living on Homestead Farm, in Frankford Township, a few miles from Branchville, is just now the chief subject of discussion throughout Sussex County.

The Press is always up to date in its news; both political and medical, and has procured the following from Mr. Struble's own lips.

"I have been troubled with rheumatism off and on for twenty years. I have tried all kinds of medicines and treatments. I have taken sulphur baths at Hamburg, N. J., Newton, N. J., and in New York City with a doctor who charged me $2.50 a bath each day. An English doctor treated me with a galvanic battery at Rockaway, Morris Co., N. Y. I have tried many doctors. None of them did me any permanent good. I used all kinds of liniments I could hear of but without avail.

"About two years ago I was taken much worse and my doctor said I had locomotor ataxia of the spine, and that the chances were against me. After treating for a time he finally gave me up and said he had done all he could for me.

"The cords of my limbs were drawn tight as the cords on a kettle drum, and I had such cramps in my limbs that I suffered terrible pain. My feet were cold all the time. I had to use a hot water bag and heated bricks to my feet, but even then I could not get any relief.

"Finally, I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and I commenced taking them on February 5, 1893. I found in three days' time that the cords in my legs began to 'let up,' my feet began to get warm, I began to eat and sleep well, and in one month I had gained six pounds. The numbness in my limbs began to leave me too, and to-day I feel like a new man, and cannot say too much in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I am able to walk and do some work, and all this is after using only nine boxes of Pink Pills. I feel so grateful for my recovery that I am glad to let the public know what these pills have done for me."

In order to emphasize his story, Mr. Struble made the following affidavit:

Sworn and subscribed before me this thirteenth day of April, A. D., 1893.

IRA COSS, Justice of the Peace.

Justice Coss evidenced his interest and good feeling by the following certificate:

I hereby certify that all that Mr. Struble says regarding his rheumatic and other troubles I believe to be true and correct.

IRA COSS, Justice of the Peace.

On the farm with Mr. Struble lives his two adult sisters. Miss Anna M. Struble made the following statement:

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have done wonderful things for my brother. He was in a helpless condition when I left him on Jan. 12th last, and when I returned on March 25th, I found him cured. The most remarkable thing about the case," she continued, "is the curing of his lameness. Of course I wanted to know all about the causes of such a wonderful change, and I learned from him and my sister and others, that during my absence he had been using the Pink Pills, and that his recovery was attributed solely to them."

Miss Mary E. Struble said: "I saw my brother in all the stages of the disease. He began improving as soon as he began taking the Pink Pills. When my sister went away in January he was apparently at death's door and nobody seemed to have any hope for him. He certainly had little or none for himself, and he was very despondent in spite of all efforts to cheer him. He declared that he felt better as soon as he began taking the Pink Pills, and to one who, like myself, was attending him day by day, there could be no doubt that they and they alone were the cause of his improvement. Why all other things he had tried he had abandoned, for they had failed to do him the slightest good. What else could have put him on his feet again? We don't wonder at his enthusiasm for the Pink Pills."

George J. Bowman, the proprietor of the American Hotel at Branchville, said: "All that Mr. Struble says in reference to the Pink Pills I know to be true. In fact he can't say too much about them for they have undoubtedly saved his life."

At the Branchville drug store, chief clerk Henry Beemer remarked: "I have no doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured Mr. Struble." Joseph H. McDonald, the proprietor of the General Store of Branchville, and Postmaster Knox expressed themselves in similar terms.

Pink Pills for many years previous to their general manufacture were used as a prescription. At first they were chiefly prescribed for impure blood and general weakness. Now they are found to be a never-failing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of La Grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, and all diseases of the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc.

They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred, and the public is cautioned againt numerous imitations sold in this shape), at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N, Y., or Brockville, Ont.

Don't get constipated. Take BEECHAM'S PILLS.

MOVING SOUTH.

Convenient markets, good soil, pure water and excellent climate are advantages to be considered when looking up a home, business location, farm, etc. Maryland and the Virginias afford these, with many more advantages. Improved farm lands, adapted to stock raising, dairying, grain, grass and fruit growing, can be obtained at low prices and upon easy terms. Thriving towns invite the merchant, mechanic and business man. Abundance of coal, timber, ore, water power, etc. Free sites for manufacturers.

A SEWING MACHINE.

What is home without a sewing machine? Home without a sewing machine to-day is primitive. It is indispensable; it facilitates and lightens work, saves time and avoids waste of power. A person would naturally think that every home contained a sewing machine by this time; but not so, thousands are without them.

To the purchaser the perplexing question is which make to select. To our readers we would cheerfully recommend the Oxford Mfg. Co., Chicago, whose advertisement appears in another part of this issue. Their machines are highly indorsed.

CHEAP EXCURSIONS TO THE WEST.

An exceptionally favorable opportunity for visiting the richest and most productive sections of the west and northwest will be afforded by the series of low rate harvest excursions which have been arranged by the North-Western Line. Tickets for these excursions will be sold on August 22d, September 12th and October 10th, 1893, to points in Northwestern Iowa, Western Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Manitoba, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, and will be good for return passage within twenty days from date of sale. Stopover privileges will be allowed on going trip in territory to which the tickets are sold. For further information, call on or address Ticket Agents of connecting lines. Circulars giving rates and detailed information will be mailed, free, upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western Railway, Chicago.

EIGHTY per cent of Russian and Servian soldiers are unable to write and read.

One hundred thousand absolutely homeless people are wandering through England.

IN one week nine persons in London deliberately killed themselves by drinking alcohol.

Two hundred and two million pounds of tea are consumed in one year in the British kingdom.

THERE are two hundred centers in the United States where university extension work is carried on.

There are five hundred thousand attempted opium suicides in China every year, a missionary states.

THE U. S. consul in Belgium says that more than one-fourth of the voters there are proprietors or agents of saloons.

A STOCKHOLM police official gives the Salvation Army credit for accomplishing more against crime and misery than all other organizations put together.

A NEW secret society is said to have been organized recently in Kansas called "The Army of Liberty" with the express purpose of electing only whisky men to office.

LEGISLATORS, aldermen, etc., travel on public funds, but in Berlin five teachers have been voted a traveling stipend, one of whom is at the World's Fair to study American educational methods.

EDWARD ATKINSON, said to be the leading fiscal statistician of our times, says that it costs five dollars a head to run our government, but the ar ual cost of spirits, beer and wine is fiftec dollars a head.

AT the last yearly meeting of the Society of Friends in England a more advanced stand was made for temperance than ever before, every member pledging himself to abstain from use and sale of liquors and the buying of brewery shares.

SUPT. BYRNES of N. Y. police force says that the reasons why men are unable to find work are four, viz., incompetency, laziness, intemperance, and last but least, old age and sickness. These account for the crowded cheap lodging-houses.

AT the opening of a second creche in Edinburgh, the surgeon of the police of the city said that the mortality among children under five was something terrible in certain districts, two hundred per one thousand, while the general mortality would be only twenty per one thousand.

THREE philanthropic organizations in Boston have been incorporated into one society called, "The People's Building Association." The new company will accommodate persons of moderate incomes by building cheap houses, and by not demanding a payment down at time of purchase.

THE Sceptre Life Association gives some interesting testimony in regard to the longevity of total abstainers. For the nine years ending December, 1892, in the general sections seven hundred and sixteen actually died out of the nine hundred and thirteen expected; while of the four hundred and thirty-three expected deaths in the abstainers' section, only two hundred and forty-one died.

PEOPLE are often inclined to feel discouraged at the slow progress of temperance sentiment, but a review of the condition of affairs in London over one hundred years ago should certainly inspire hope. In 1736, when the population was six hundred and thirty thousand, there were fifteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine saloons at which intoxicants could be purchased. In 1836 there were over one million seven hundred seventy-six thousand population, and the number of saloons was about five thousand. In 1782 there were two hundred and ninety-six public gaming tables.

IMPORTANT TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE

Total Abstinence Life Insurance Ass'n

OF AMERICA

You believe in insurance for Temperance people in a strictly Temperance Company.

You want a straightforward life policy at rates as low as possible commensurate with safety. You DO NOT want a ten-year term policy, which either leaves you without protection at the end of ten years, or compels you to re-insure at the advanced age rate.

You are therefore invited to transfer your policy to the

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE LIFE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION,

187 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

This is not only the pioneer organization of its kind, but has just absorbed into its business the entire membership of the Good Templars' Mutual Benefit Association, thus doubling the strength of The American Temperance Life Insurance Company, both in membership and in business.

☞Members of the Total Abstinence Company will be accepted on the basis of their original application, and without medical re-examination. The Annual Dues and the Membership Fee, which are usually charged upon entering, will also be remitted, so that your insurance is ABSOLUTELY WITHOUT COST FOR THIRTY DAYS.

This is the only regular Life Insurance Company in the country insuring only total abstainers. It is now absorbing the membership of temperance orders, and proposes to continue until it is the strongest temperance organization in the world.

This Association insures members whose ages are forty-five and upward at a fair increase over the cost of younger members, instead of excessive rates charged by old-line companies.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Read the announcement of DAILY UNION SIGNAL on page 14, cut out the coupon, fill out as directed and send the same with twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. Prompt attention to this will enable us to prepare the wrappers before the Convention and insure our subscribers the daily reception of this indispensable and accurate report of the two great meetings mentioned above.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Money is said to be more plentiful in the Eastern marts.

The Pan-American Medical Congress met last week at Washington, D. C.

Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and California each celebrated a day at the Fair last week.

The naval revolt in Brazil has caused a serious interference with the foreign commerce of that nation.

J. S. B. Adams, of Massachusetts, has been elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic.

A fatal wreck, caused by criminal negligence of railway employés, occurred on the Pan Handle road at Colehour, Ill., Thursday.

An international exposition, with Alfred Picard as director-general, to be held in France in 1900, is announced in a Paris dispatch of September 10.

As predicted, the Irish Home Rule Bill was overwhelmingly rejected by the House of Lords, the vote being four hundred and nineteen to forty-one.

Emperor William made a notable speech at Metz during the recent German army maneuvers, in which he declared himself in favor of peace and unity.

Chinese laborers in California who have not complied with the registration laws of the United States under the Geary bill are being arrested and returned to China.

The London Times of September 10 publishes a letter from the explorer, Nansen, written at Charabowa, Yugorski strait, August 2, before the ice closed about his vessel.

A dispatch from Melbourne, September 7, announces the welcome news that the Legislative Council in Wellington, New Zealand, has passed the woman's franchise provision of the election bill.

Hon. Hamilton Fish, of New York, formerly governor of that state, a United States Senator and Secretary of State under President Grant, died September 7, after an honorable and useful life of eighty-five years.

Reports during the week confirm the rumor of Emin Pasha's death which occurred during a battle with the cannibal natives, February 26, near the Ialiba river. Emin Pasha (Edward Schnitzer) was a German officer and scientist, who lived for five years in the heart of Africa controlling a large territory and making many valuable scientific researches.

THE great Minnesota coal trust, which forced the consumers of that fuel to pay such unjust and exorbitant rates last winter, has dissolved before the heat of the united opposition against it. The new law of the state makes a combination for the purpose of raising the price of food and fuel a penitentiary offence, without the option of a fine. Such a law enforced by a committee of earnest citizens might well be on the statute books of every state and municipality.

THE Radical constituency in England are not taking the defeat of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Lords calmly, and their newspapers are calling upon the people to abolish the House and imploring Gladstone to pose as a second Cromwell. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, president of the Alliance for the suppression of the liquor traffic, declares: "We are the poorest spirited nation that ever existed if we submit to this latest insult and injury at the hands of the great landlords."

THE present week bids fair to be one of supreme interest in the United States Senate, the repeal silver bill having the right of way. Prominent speakers have given notice of formal presentations of the silver question pro and con, and a week of solid discussion is anticipated. The ways and means committee will give special hearing to representatives of all the leading manufactories of this country, with a view to further enlightenment on the mooted tariff question.

Do not miss the account of the Sunday-school convention on page thirteen. It came too late for insertion in any other part of the paper and was too important to hold over another week. White-ribboners will rejoice that such strong advocates as Mrs. Ingalls, Messrs. Crafts, McLaren, Jacobs and others were on hand to urge our side of the question. Unquestionably this is the greatest victory that temperance has gained in the grand ranks of the Sunday-school army.

THE reporters of the Chicago press have shown a commendable faithfulness to morality and decency in exposing the vile dances of the Midway Plaisance, some of which have finally been suppressed by the authorities. The public is to be congratulated upon the high quality of mind and heart which the young men and women (for there are many of the latter on the Chicago newspapers) of our reportorial staffs possess. The World's Fair has been reported daily in our home papers in a manner that is not only attractive to the intellect, but as a rule, elevating to the morals. The educational value has been emphasized and the artistic and helpful made prominent. Let white-ribboners rejoice at all this.

LAST Saturday was the third largest day in point of attendance at the World's Fair, and probably the leading one in point of interest and pleasure since May 1. The three special attractions were the celebration of California, the G. A. R. and transportation vehicles. California's noted generosity was illustrated by the giving away of six carloads of fresh fruits. The dedication of the "New Liberty Bell" took place on the grand plaza, and was witnessed by tens of thousands, including many of the two hundred and fifty thousand school children who have given trinkets and pennies to be melted for this unique bell of liberty. This is indeed a cosmopolitan bell, for the coins of the world are in it—from those used by the Ptolemies to the copper penny of the humblest or youngest citizen of the new republic. It was fitting in the light of the new liberty which this bell is supposed to ring out, that it was first struck by a young lady, Miss Alice Scott, and that the song, written for the occasion by Mrs. Madge Morris Warner, was sung by Miss Alice Mitchell, all of California. Truly, this is "woman's century," and the World's Fair woman's opportunity.

ALTHOUGH the public press is amazingly silent, except for unbecoming inuendoes, the Prohibition Republicans of Iowa are not meekly submitting to the friendly attitude of their recent state convention towards the saloon. Within a week after this convention another was called. The callers were also Republicans, or, rather, were formerly Republicans. The object was to nominate an independent Prohibition ticket, and express their contempt for the repudiation of state prohibition by the Republican leaders. Their resolutions, which are remarkable for brevity and directness, state that "The question of maintaining and enforcing the prohibitory law of the state we regard as the paramount and practical issue involved in the approaching November election, and that we will not be deceived or misled by those who shall attempt to divert the attention of the people from this question by the discussion of those questions over which the governor and members of the General Assembly to be elected can exercise no direct control. That while we recognize with regret that the enemies of prohibition in Iowa have by questionable means and methods nominally captured the party organization in which many of us have heretofore placed our confidence and trust, yet we have faith to believe that the manhood and conscience of the individual Iowa elector cannot be intimidated or debauched, and we appeal with confidence to them, that in the coming election the verdict at the ballot box may not be construed as an abandonment of their heretofore cherished principles, and the cause of the home and of the best interests of humanity shall triumph still throughout this our beloved Iowa." While we believe it would have been wiser for these earnest, honest ex-Republicans to have joined their forces with the existing Prohibition party, we heartily welcome each and every organized opposition to the saloon oligarchy.

THAT the hope of the world is Christ was never so widely evidenced as by the vast crowds that thronged the halls of Memorial Art Palace on September 10. From the breakfast hour the trend of pedestrianism was to the Lake Front and long before the opening hour every seat was taken in the Hall of Columbus and every foot of standing room was preëmpted. Cardinal Gibbons came to the platform leaning on the arm of Judge C. C. Bonney, president of the World's Congresses, followed by Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Chas. Henrotin, of the Woman's Auxiliary, these succeeded by Rev. John H. Barrows, D. D., chairman of the Parliament of Religions, and after them the most brilliant and cosmic cortege of ecclesiastics,—among which were two women—the world has ever seen. Archbishop, bishop and priest of the Greek Church marched with Judaism, Christian and Confucian, Hindoo with Mohammedan, Parsee and Presbyterian, Buddhist with Shintoist—until ten different faiths of the world were seated on the rostrum, gorgeous in many hued pontifical robes. Cardinal Gibbons led in the universal prayer of our Lord in the opening of the solemn and majestic event of the World's Parliament of Religions. A Hindoo said that twenty centuries ago a ruler of India had called a similar gathering of faiths in that cradle of religion at the foot of the Himalayas, but it was demonstrated that such a crowning glory as the fraternal union of religions has not been possible till within the last fifty years, when steam and electricity and science have thrown down the barriers between nations. In this "more than imperial feast," men eager for the truth have come together with mutual respect and tolerance and without surrender of what each holds most dear. In "this new, great act in the historic evolution of the race," the supreme fact is the universal brotherhood in the family of God; and a joy dawns in every devout heart that this day, when "acid sect dissolves in Christian charity," is the precursor of a reign of the Spirit which shall ultimate in universal love and peace. "Joy to the world, the Saviour reigns! Let earth receive her king."

FAITH'S GREAT HARMONY.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

The world would be filled with gladness,
  The earth would be always June,
If to hours of trial and sadness
  Our hearts aye sang in tune:
Gentle in Sorrow's choir,
  Love in a minor key,
But pealing higher, higher,
  For Faith's great harmony.

Master, take Thou and fashion
  My heart with a Master's skill,
On the chords of faith and passion,
  Play as Thy fingers will,
Though my soul throb 'neath the tension
  The music will thrill with love,
And my spirit's comprehension
  Learn the song of the saints above.

THE SILENT WIRES.*

IV.

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

They were drawing near Miss Hilton's home. Karl, still thoughtful over the lilies he carried on his arm, at this moment caught sight of Hattie Starkey approaching from the opposite direction. He sprang forward, and confronted her on the doorsteps.

"Where have you been, Hattie?" he asked, suspiciously. Hattie ignored his hand, with a scornful laugh at his authoritative tone.

"What's that to you, Karl? You appear to have been enjoying yourself," with an expressive glance at Miss Hilton, whose face flushed at the insinuating look and words, but who said, pleasantly: "Come up to my room, Hattie, please, and see my beautiful lilies."

Hattie followed Karl and Winifred sullenly up the stairs. The little sitting-room was silent and dark, the girls having retired, and they were obliged to count their pennies too carefully to leave a light burning for Winifred. Karl reached for Hattie's hand while Winifred groped for the matches. There was no tenderness in his touch, and the girl withdrew her hand angrily. He seemed afraid she might escape him.

Miss Hilton had lighted the lamp and was chatting easily about the flowers; Karl had not spoken, but stood waiting, pale and grave.

"I understood you were too tired to attend the meeting to-night, Hattie," he said, as Winifred paused. "Where have you been?"

Winifred was about to leave the room, but Karl detained her. "Do not go, Miss Hilton," and Hattie added: "Don't go, Winnie; Karl looks cross enough to bite a ten-penny nail in two. Now, Mr. Heiser," turning to him scornfully, "what right have you to ask me where I have been?"

"The right you have given me, Hattie," he answered, gravely, "the right of a man who is to be your husband in a few weeks."

Only Winifred Hilton noticed that he did not say, "the right of a man who loves you."

"If you must know," said Hattie, "I have been up to the Great Consolidated office."

"For what purpose?" asked Karl in surprise.

"To apply for a position," the girl replied, sulkily. "I am going back to work to-morrow."

"Why, Hattie!" broke from the lips of both Winifred and Karl in surprise.

"Do you mean, Hattie Starkey," thundered Karl, livid with passion, "that you have done this thing without a word to me, that you have gone back to the company on their ignominious terms, betraying the interests of us all, false to your own word, false to our Union, false to me, most of all?"

"I don't know what you mean by ignominious terms, Karl. The company's going to pay me twelve dollars a week while the strike lasts," Hattie said triumphantly, "then give me my old place back, with a fair prospect for a rise."

"I know," said Karl, coldly, "that great inducements have been offered Miss Hilton to go to the main office, but she has steadily refused; and only yesterday I was asked to go to Washington and work a wire at ninety dollars a month."

"Oh Karl!" cried Hattie, roseate visions of new ribbons and bangles floating before her, "what did you say?"

"I said Judas Iscariot had been dead more than eighteen hundred years," replied the man with lofty scorn, and stifling the passionate words that rose to his lips, he walked to the door.

"Go after him, Hattie," whispered Winifred, eagerly. "If he should get to drinking now, it would ruin everything."

"Go after him yourself!" retorted Hattie. "You seem to have a remarkable appreciation of each other."

Winifred flashed an indignant glance at the girl, and followed Karl from the room. He had reached the stairs, but she laid a detaining hand upon his arm.

"Mr. Heiser—Karl," she said earnestly, "do not go away like this. Come and talk to Hattie. Surely, you can win her back. She is so young. She does not understand what she is doing."

"She won't understand," Karl muttered. "She doesn't care for the shame she brings upon me."

"She will care when you explain it to her," said Winifred. "Please come back."

Karl hesitated. "Let me walk round the block and cool off."

Winifred flushed a little in dread of his anger, but said bravely: "You will remember your pledge? You will not touch liquor?"

An impatient look crossed the man's face. What harm could a single glass do? Suddenly he recalled the lily against Tom Cary's dirty blouse, and he answered: "I will not, Winifred; I promise you."

"But you will come back?" she asked, and receiving his promise, returned to her room where she found Hattie on the lounge in a flood of tears. She put her arms around the girl and talked to her long and earnestly, begging her for the sake of them all to hold out a little longer.

"You know, Hattie, dear, you have only to apply to the Union for aid, if you need money; and Karl and I will gladly share our pennies with you, if you will only be true."

"I don't want your money," replied Hattie sullenly. "Father's laid up enough to last us another week, and we ain't sufferin' anyhow. But I am so sick of bein' without a cent for myself. It's bad enough bein' poor, anyhow, but here I'm goin' to be married in a few weeks and not a penny laid by for clothes."

"Karl would rather take you in those you have, Hattie, than in new ones bought at the cost of his respect and your own. Do you not see how your going back will reflect upon him? What will the men say if the acknowledged leader of the strike cannot depend upon his own sweetheart?"

"Bother!" muttered Hattie, impatiently. "The men won't think or care anything about it. Karl ain't half so much importance as you and he think."

"He should be enough importance to you, Hattie, for you to respect his wishes. Do you understand how angry he is?"

"Oh! I can twist Karl round my little finger," exclaimed Hattie, confidently. "He won't like my goin' back, but he likes me. I can soon talk him round."

"You will never talk Karl Heiser round!" was the indignant reply.

"Why, Winnie!" cried Hattie, laughing. "What do you know 'bout lovers' quarrels? This ain't the first spat Karl and I have had, by a long shot. And I shall be his wife in a month, you know."

"If you go back to the Great Consolidated office before the company yields, or the strike is declared at an end by the master workman," said Winifred, with sudden conviction, "you'll never be Karl Heiser's wife!"

Hattie stared at her friend with eyes wide with astonishment. "What do you mean, Winnie Hilton?" she demanded. "What has Karl said to you about me?"

"You do not need to ask me that, Hattie," was the proud reply. "Karl Heiser is not a man to talk to any one about the woman he would make his wife."

Karl's knock was heard at the door before Hattie could reply, and Winifred left them together. Karl was very cool now, ominously so, thought Hattie, looking at him in some dismay. He drew a chair to her side and said, quietly: "I want you to tell me, Hattie, all that led to this step of yours, what motives prompted you and what influences moved you."

"You know I never wanted to strike," began the girl defiantly. "I didn't b'lieve 'twould do no good." Hattie was apt to blunder in her grammar when excited. "We was gettin' little enough, I know, but 'twas better than nothin'. I hated to lose a cent, for father said if I'd do the work at home, he'd provide for us, an' I could have my money to dress on an' to buy any extras mother wanted. I'd been saving my money for a lovely India silk trimmed with green velvet—an' you'd have been proud of me in that, Karl—when the old strike was ordered, an' I had to give it up. So mean! I never'd have cared about the old Union if it hadn't been for you and Winnie, but, of course, I had to do as the others did."

"Of course; our object is mutual aid," said Karl, oracularly.

"You all said the strike would be over in a day or two," continued aggrieved Hattie. "But it's lasted two weeks, an' no sign of its ending now; and we've had to scrimp at home worse than ever; father's been surly an' ugly, an' I think he's plottin' some mischief; an' mother's fretted an' stewed, an' nagged me till I told her I'd go back."

"Why did you not tell me of your intention?" he asked.

"Because I knew you would make a fuss," acknowledged Hattie. "But I thought if the thing was settled an' I got higher wages you wouldn't care."

"What made you think you could get better pay, Hattie?"

The girl blushed but answered boldly. "Jennie Tyman told me she got big wages, and she says the company sends a coupé for her and sends her home in the same grand style. They give her lunches an' dinners at the office—nice ones, with fruit and coffee—an' she don't work only when she feels like it. She tells the company she ain't got no wire, and half the time she ain't, and she goes shoppin' two or three hours a day."

Karl's face darkened as this recital of luxuries proceeded. What were this girl's ideals?

"So you thought you'd set up for that sort of a lady, too," he commented. "You know I have told you Miss Tyman is not a fit companion."

"Well, Karl, I don't pick out your friends and you needn't mine," she retorted, losing her awe of her lover in anger.

"Go on," he said.

"I went up to the office," she continued, "and found they'd be glad to get me back and pay me twelve dollars a week. I wanted the money so I took the place."

"You are not positively in need of money, are you, Hattie?" inquired Karl, gently. "I have asked your father to let me know when he or you needed money. I have a little put by you know I have been saving for our home."

"We ain't starving," answered the girl, shortly, "but I'm sick of drudging along when I might be having a good time like Jennie Tyman. I haven't got a jacket fit to be seen, and you know very well I can't be married in a month without some new clothes."

"Hattie," said Karl, gently, "if you won't go back to the company till the strike is over, I will manage to get you some pretty dresses. I will buy you the one you wanted so much with the green velvet, and a new novel for your mother every day the strike holds on, so she won't worry you. We are sure to win in the end, Hattie, and get higher wages without betraying our friends. Think of my position, Hattie. If you go back to the company what will the men think of me?"

"I don't care a rap what they think, Karl!" she returned saucily. "Why should they care what I do?"

"They will say he is a fine leader who cannot control a simple girl."

"Well, Karl, you may talk till doomsday, but you can't move me. I'm goin' to work to-morrow. I ain't so simple as you think, and I know a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Now, don't sit glowering at me like that," she coaxed. "Let's make up, and then go, for it's gettin' awful late."

"I cannot jest on this subject, Hattie. If you are to be my wife, you must obey me in this one thing, and I positively forbid you to take any position under the Great Consolidated until these troubles are adjusted, or the strike is declared off."

"It's rather early to forbid me, Mr. Heiser," remarked his betrothed, scornfully.

"It's none too early, Hattie," he returned. He had controlled his anger until now, but now he broke out passionately: "Have you no thought for any one but yourself, Hattie? Do you not care how you are selling us all to the enemy? Good God! there are men and women in our Union who are suffering for the bare necessities of life, who are still firm in their determination not to yield. You would sacrifice these noble souls for a new jacket, or a bangle for your pretty wrist."

"I don't do any such thing, Karl!" responded Hattie, angrily. "I go my way; they can go theirs."

"But your yielding places a big stumbling-block in their way, Hattie. Every one that goes back makes it easier for the company and correspondingly harder for the strikers. As for me, in whom can I trust, if not in the woman soon to be my wife?"

"You'd better not make me your wife, if you're so afraid," snapped the girl.

"I won't!" Karl announced resolutely. "If my honor is not safe in your keeping now, it would not be were I your husband. You shall choose this night, Hattie Starkey, between the Great Consolidated and me."

It was certainly time for coaxing, and the next instant Hattie's round arms were about his neck and her rosy face pressed to his, as she murmured: "You don't mean it, Karl. You would never break our engagement for a little thing like that."

The old glamour stole over the young man as he drew her to his breast. What would it matter after all? The strike would soon be over, and Hattie's weakness forgotten, and she would be a pretty little wife. But Winifred

Hilton's words rang in his ears: "A wife who is not a comrade is no wife." Could he ever interest Hattie in his plans for the elevation of the working man? Would she ever think of any great and broad question except as it affected her own petty interests? Could she be a comrade to a man like himself? Could he trust a woman who had betrayed him once? And he heard the "Never, never!" whispered by the phantom years. Then he disengaged her clinging arms, and said: "I was never more in earnest in my life, Hattie. You must choose between us now."

"Then you are mean, and selfish, and cruel, Karl Heiser, and I am well rid of you!" sobbed Hattie in a passion of angry tears.

"You will not change your mind, Hattie? If you send me away to-night, I will never seek you again. You will never be Karl Heiser's wife."

"I will never be Karl Heiser's slave!" she cried passionately, looking through her tears for some sign of relenting in the white face and flashing eyes.

He looked at her steadily a moment, took a step forward as if to clasp her in his arms, but checking the impulse, left her with a cold good-by.

THE LAW OF HABIT.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

That which has been done once is easier done the second time. Repetition is the only basis of perdition or perfection. Patient continuance in well-doing conducts by a straight path to glory, honor, and immortality, while persistent ill-doing as surely conducts to death.

From the raw material of truth set forth in those three sentences, destiny is manufactured, and if I were rich enough, I would emblazon them on the mirror of every girl in Christendom. Since 1874 I have been a steady student of the law of habit—I had well-nigh said the law of fate. I have seen it slowly, gently, imperceptibly wrap men round and round in its close winding-sheet, as if they were Egyptian mummies. So quietly was all this done that they never knew their bondage until the first faint movement toward a better life, when, behold, their helplessness recalled the Indian-tortured hunter perpendicularly planted in the ground with earth packed around him even to the lips. A miracle of faith has rescued some of these; but a study of years compels the admission that not more than five in one hundred inebriates, gamblers, or libertines are ever permanently reformed. The thoughtless boy, cigar in mouth, playing cards "just for fun," and a little later with a glass of beer as the stake, hiding all these things from his mother, saying to himself, "I'll quit this after awhile, but I want to sow my wild oats"; the idle, spendthrift youth with fondness only for the vile company where his worst passions can be gratified; the besotted man, sold under sin, accursed of God and his own conscience and his fellow-men—these are the piteous object lessons that have taught me the supreme power of habit over human destiny.

But I saw that the tendency to repeat the same act and the greater ease with which this is done the second time than the first, and the third time than the second, is the key to paradise, as well as pandemonium. I saw the slow, unerring, unfailing plan of God, by which our habits may become our stepladder to saintship. And I said to my own heart, what I now whisper to whoever reads: "No evil habit, however small, shall have dominion over me." For I am free to say I have set out for saintship and nothing less, though only God knows so well as I how long the road and how far off the goal. Let us have a sacred emulation in this slow, steady climb after good habits. I take it for granted that the law of repetition has confirmed us immovably already in the habit of chaste and reverent language, so that we should involuntarily stop our ears in presence of vulgar or blasphemous words. One's language is so thoroughly a part of one's own inmost self that in my hearing a young man whom I had befriended and who meant me no disrespect, once crimsoned every sentence with an oath, and when frequently called to account he kept repeating: "I beg your pardon, I had no idea of swearing—it says itself." By the same law, I know of men as well as women who would as soon try to grasp an object by turning their fingers backward instead of forward as they would use vile language or profane the name of God. They don't know how it is done. But there are doubtful pleasantries and witty irreverencies "into the habit" of which many good people have fallen. Whose vocabulary would bear the electric light of publicity from one year's end to another? But a Christian lought to stand this test. Let us raise a standard right here. Get out your memorandum book and pledge yourself hereby "with God's help":

Resolved, That I will utter no word and convey no thought unworthy of a Christian disciple.

Remember that this means to put away all "evil speaking." Ah, that is hewing to the line. So let it be, no matter where the chips fly, "In her tongue is the law of kindness." If we have not formed this habit we are still word scavengers, not ready for the society of the true household of faith, not trained in its etiquette nor cultured so as to feel at home within its blessed family circle. I do not mean that this gentleness of speech excludes analysis of character and commentary upon word and deed. Then would society become a Chinese picture without perspective and without atmosphere, our perceptions of moral distinctions would be dulled and the faculty of criticism dwarfed. We may pass upon the acts of others as right or wrong, we may even pronounce upon their personal tendencies as good or bad, but we must, in every debatable case, give to their motive the benefit of a doubt. So high an authority in criticism as the sculptor poet, William Story, once set out to prove that Judas Iscariot may have been determined to force from Christ the use of His miraculous powers by placing Him in a position where death was the only alternative, that thus the Jews might throw off the Roman yoke and the Messiah reign as was His right. You have all heard the story of a charitably-minded old lady, of whom a gainsaying youth declared that he'd wager that she would defend his satanic majesty in case his character were attacked in her hearing, and drew from the kind old saint the declaration that "if Christians would only imitate the perseverance of the devil this world would soon be saved." She must have been related to the one whose sons were sent to state prison and whose friends declared that "Aunt Heavenly Mind would find some good even in that." Sure enough, when told of the sentence, she mildly said: "Well, it'll be a dretful comfort to know where them boys be of a night."

We may all laugh at this, but who doubts the superior "live-withable-ness" of such characters as compared with the curl-lipped fault-finders for whom nothing on earth is good enough except their own delectable selves. We are to "do unto others as we would they should do unto us." This is the basis of all good habits pertaining to society. Now, we do not expect or desire that our character and deeds shall pass without commentary. That would be to covet living burial. Very well, since we are imperfect, no true commentary upon us can be made without involving criticism which, however just, it might pain us to hear.

Do we then wish to gag the human race that it shall not speak out its mind concerning us? What standards would it have upon that plan? What chance to develop keen discrimination and hold up illustrations now for imitation and now for warning? It seems to me we need more criticism instead of less. But it should be candid, courteous, kindly, and from high motives. Coleridge gave us the divine canon of criticism when he said we were to look for the beauties in a picture or a character. Instead of that how often have we heard a long discussion of some famous, and on the whole, benignant character, with not one appreciative word from first to last, and in neighborhood gossip it is the same. Let us, then, listen to ourselves carefully, and see if we have been so churlish or one-sided as to speak only of faults in our analysis, be it only of a child, a servant or a dog. We cannot afford to form the habit of detraction, and go about one-eyed forever seeing half. The nil admirari school of talkers, writers, and livers would soon transform this very tolerable world into a veritable slough of despond if they had it all to themselves. There is a crude, youthful period when this rôle is thought to indicate wisdom, but as life mellows us we ought to form a habit of humility which would lead us to esteem others better than ourselves.

Every considerate word we utter concerning those about us, every time we give them the benefit of a doubt in our judgment of their motive, every time we take occasion to couple with our demurrer from their position some saving clause of appreciation, we are habituating ourselves to that charity which "suffereth long and is kind," that heavenly love which alone can make us meet for heavenly company,

"Time doth the impression deeper make
As streams their channels deeper wear."

Just as you now play without the music and do not think what notes you strike, though once you picked them out by slow and patient toil, so if you begin of set purpose you will learn the law of kindness in utterance so perfectly that it will be second nature to you, and make more music in your life than all the songs the sweetest voice has ever sung.

"Do you believe in Christian Science?" "Not this week. There is so much to believe in just now, that I've had to divide up my time. One week I believe in Christian Science, and the next in rain-making, and the next in money-talk, and the next in objective apparitions. Then I take a week off to rest, and not believe in anything, and then I begin again. It's a good way, and helps lots to keep a man's faith from getting overstrained."

BUSINESS TRAINING FOR WOMEN.*

BY HARRIET WILLIAMS RUSSELL-STRONG.

Everybody knows what is meant by a business man. There are in every state in this Union a few business women (not salaried women) who are acting as principals at the heads of various branches of business, whom I regret are not called to Chicago to meet in council or congress; for these women are doing more for the great upward movement than is realized, else they would be here. They are gaining the respect in the business world denied to women as a class, and are proving inductively that what is possible for a few is also possible for the many.

Until women prove their ability to manage their own affairs with judgment and skill men will continue to fear the mischief they may do in the more responsible position of electors deciding by ballot great and grave questions. When the majority of women understand the business methods of the world, they will be asked to assist in the affairs of government.

It has been happily said that the world does not so much need reforming, as reminding. I will take the liberty to remind you that all people, however gifted, must breakfast and dine, must be clothed and lodged. Providing these necessities constitutes, we are told, the arterfes through which the life-blood of the nation flows—all the multiplicities and ramifications of business. Hence, commercial and monetary interests, finance and trade, should be better understood by women. I will remind you again, from the standpoint of business men, that women and children are suffering greater hardships to-day through lack of business knowledge on the part of women, than through any other cause. When deprived of the one who stands at the helm, they are plunged into a sea of difficulties, wholly unprepared to meet them.

Add to this the fact that the greatest necessity in the business world to-day is honesty, "a sentiment that makes it honorable to be honest," and you have a mission for woman not unworthy of her. You may not all know that the honesty of women already has a commercial value in the business world. Life insurance companies insure the lives of men for the benefit of their wives, but refuse to insure directly the life of a wife when the husband is the beneficiary.

One of the few great privileges that women enjoy in this country is liberty to transact business, yet this privilege is practically unemployed until necessity compels. Rarely from choice do women take up its cares; they are not crowding themselves into business; but all women are interested in the betterment of the conditions imposed upon wage-earners and are moved with pity for those who without preparation or training, must seek in subordinate, humiliating positions the food, clothing and shelter that must come through their own providing. It is believed that the betterment of the race will come with universal suffrage. I must say to you that there is a positive reciprocity existing between the ballot and business. The franchise would assist women in business, bringing relief many times when handicapped by circumstances only reached through the power of a vote; on the other hand a knowledge of business is an essential factor in the proper exercise of the franchise. We can afford to make no mistakes now. Ignorance is the menace of our institutions. We are in the midst of a forest; a large clearing has been made; just now, a direct way is before us, reaching out to the objective point. Business training is the weapon of this eleventh hour, and let this motto be inscribed upon that weapon: Antagonism to none, and a helping hand to all.

The business world is the man's world, and I hope the time will never come when he will cease to claim it his duty, his privilege and his pleasure to care for the mother, sister, wife and daughters. The home, the highest ideal of the human heart, is the central idea of civilization, but when the home is broken, then what? We all know. To be prepared for this sad possibility in the lives of all women will not crystallize that possibility into a fact. Because we maintain a military academy at West Point, preparing trained leaders for our army, does not precipitate war. Shall we not sensibly prepare our daughters for the exigencies of every phase of life while they are yet under the parental roof-tree? What are the fathers of America doing for their daughters to-day? They provide no dower, no settlement, no profession, no business interests or partnership, and everything that relates to girls is haphazard, unsubstantial and illusive, in all classes the same. They are fitted for nothing in particular, hence the excessive hardships met with when thrown upon their own resources.

The remedy is at hand. Instruction, practical education and employment made honorable, not ignoble. This can be done by proving good work possible, and making the only disgrace in work the doing it badly.

In every city in our land there should be one (or more) drygoods stores, managed to a certain point and owned by women. In these stores there should be numbers of girls under training as clerks, and when a girl leaves this store for a permanent position, it should be on full pay as a clerk. Merchants would gladly employ girls well trained. In every city there should be at least one bank owned by women. In establishing such a bank the directors might be four men and one woman; each year retire one man from the board and place another woman. In this bank girls should be employed, and taught the science of banking. Our bankers' wives and daughters could gain a thorough knowledge of this important branch, so that in case of the death of the head of the house the estate would be in the hands of those most interested, who would also understand the business methods and their principles.

It is noted that the great fortunes of America are coming into the hands of women. What are they doing with them? A few are managing them with marked skill. But as a rule the accumulations of good men during the best years of their lives are being dissipated by unprincipled agents, unchecked by the women of the family who do themselves and their children great wrong by remaining in ignorance of business.

Eight years ago when the weight of business was laid upon me, in utter ignorance and helplessness I essayed to carry it, and you may be surprised when I say to you there was nothing done or established by any woman or set of women that could help me in business. If there had been a business college worth the name, I could have learned in a short time much that I needed to know at once. It cost me six years of time and many thousands of dollars to learn that I must never sign a contract without submitting it to my attorney. The usual method when a woman is left with property, is to turn it all into money, invest it in interest paying bonds and live on a reduced income. I think every woman left with an established business should continue it, taking up the management just where her husband left off. It is harder for a woman to succeed than a man, but when she does she receives more credit for it.

The present business colleges teach little more than stenography, book-keeping and type-writing. The living, stirring, business world is where our business men are trained, and our more astute observers claim that a college education is a detriment to a business career. Not the education in itself, but the time given to books should be devoted in the service of actual trade. A boy should enter the business house, take apprenticeship, work all along the lines and grow up with it, drink it in and be part of it. From five to ten years are spent in this way in the making of a business man. A man is fully equipped for sacred business that is too deep, too high, too profound for woman's comprehension, and the world hears upon every hand, "What does a woman know about business?" Is there a statement more familiar? It is one way to express the impossibility of her learning anything about it.

The apprentice plan in the professions having become a thing of the past why should it continue in business? When Prof. Eggleson, in 1865, proposed to establish a school of mines in connection with Columbia College, N. Y., practical mining men smiled at the very idea of going to New York City to learn mining. The western fields of precious metals, a pick and shovel were the only colleges of any practical use. At present the Columbia school of mines stands so high the pupils therein are almost claiming superiority over other departments. The practical always resents the first enroachment of the theoretic and scientific; successful practice is good enough, and this position is maintained to prevent consignment to a secondary position, but the scientific must come.

The question of to-day is this. Is there a science of finance and trade? Can it be developed and become of practical use to the business world? Busy, overworked men have no time to theorize, study, discover or develop the science of business, but educated women have the time, the ability, the opportunity, and should employ it, and with equal honors stand side by side before the world with graduates from the colleges of letters and classics. The perfected university will have a college of business and finance brought to the front rank, where young men and women can be educated. Trade has never yet been placed in the front rank.

The ancient Persians were taught three things: To ride, to fight, to speak the truth. A Persian could not engage in trade, for no one could trade and speak the truth. Moderns believe this of our present business world, but let business be elevated where it should be and will be, and the science and ethics taught and understood, and doubtless commerce and trade can be made quite as honorable as any other profession when guided by truth, and governed by honesty. The women of America have a large part of this work to do; will they perform it?

Let women and girls lose no opportunity to learn something about business; ask questions, read trade journals, the newspapers, and, most important, begin with a close study of the laws regulating the property and persons of women and children. Study the laws regulating taxes; learn what is property and how many kinds of property there are. Learn all you can about mortgages, deeds, contracts, deeds of trust, etc. Study such questions as the tariff, reciprocity, currency and the coinage of money. You may think these subjects dry; they are not so dry as the bread of the wage-earner.

There is a great, privileged, idle class of highly educated, thinking people. To them I turn; will they not respond to the demands laid upon them? The women of America, with no responsibility except such as they choose to impose upon themselves, will they not as a class and as individuals, choose and claim the privilege of actively participating in the great business of the world as thinkers, not obtrusively, but with judgment and understanding and tact? A woman without tact is a woman without power and without influence. There are great questions to be solved; Will you help in the solving? Will you think? Will you study? Think and study as critics; criticise the past and the present, and thus prepare for future work. There is a science of business to be evolved. Honesty is needed in business and political circles. Philanthropists need business knowledge. Our representative system of government needs the Initiative and Referendum of the Swiss Republic, or something similar, so that important questions may be referred back to the people. Highway robbery is forbidden by law, but one class of wholesale robbery continues almost unchecked—the robbery of widows and orphans.

Womankind may be divided into two great classes—the bread or loaf distributers and the bread winners. The loaf distributer, the lady (depolarizing the word lady and restoring the original old English meaning), the queen in the sheltered American home, to you individually I turn. Your neglected duties come through ignorance of their importance. The most enlightened, those at the top of affairs, are the ones who uplift the bread winner. Every individual lady in the land, the lady who is the loaf distributer, must enlighten herself. She must study the business principles that regulate the affairs of the world. She must learn the basis of trade operations, learn everything that can be learned, and bear in mind that the individual fate of every bread winner depends either directly or indirectly on how she performs her part. It is in her hands to lighten the burden or make heavier, hers to place herself and her daughters where there will be no danger of swelling the ranks of wage-earners by study of the principles of business. She possesses no immunity from calamity. She owes it to the grand man, her husband, to be prepared should he lay down the burdens of business cares to take them up. Let her be sure that the loaf she distributes which he provides shall be a full loaf, not a crumb or half a loaf; a generous whole loaf, leavened with knowledge, wisdom and kindliness, examples of true womanly understanding of life's duties well performed. Let it be a symbol of that Bread that came down from heaven, which is the Light, the Life of the world. The American highly educated, idle class has work to do, and plenty of it.

Does any one think business study and knowledge unworthy of time and attention? There is more in that word business than is generally supposed. Let me again remind you that the first recorded words of the Master, and to his mother, were these: "I must be about my Father's business."

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XVII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

The result of the Spirit's influence in the meetings at the League room, was most manifest and helpful, and yet, the loss of the sweet songs of Zion on the early morning air in our Crusade services seemed greatly missed by many; indeed it had been to the outside world as an open-air concert, because of the superior voices of our faithful and devoted leaders, the three sisters, Annie, Bessie and Maggie Wilson. The older two especially were our reliance—for they allowed none of their active home duties to hinder prompt attention to the song service of church, street or saloon; their bright faces and the clear, soft melody of their voices gave inspiration to many a faint heart during those days of early rising, hard work and bitter persecution! Aided by the many young ladies of our town who possessed gifts of voice, spirit and will, the Crusade movement was peculiarly fortunate in this department.

But now that we must needs be shut up, as it were, in close communion, under our own vine and fig tree, as compensation for the loss of much that was inspiring, we almost daily witnessed God's power in some new and striking demonstration of the Spirit. Reports were now brought into our League room meetings of conversions in prison through our zealous sisters in charge of that work and letters were read from prisoners in our county jail who felt they were God's free men, saved from their sins by the merits of Christ and the kindness and the prayers of the good women!" After the release of one of these men from prison a request was sent to the society that he might, before leaving for his home, be permitted to attend one meeting in our blessed League room. Consent was gladly given, and some of our faithful brethren were invited to meet with us.

As the time drew on for our anniversary, the general feeling was that the day must have special attention, and a meeting was called for maturing plans, in fulfillment of which, on Thursday evening, December 23, 1875, Mrs. D. K. Fenner, as secretary of the Woman's League, gave a condensed report of the Crusade from the first morning, 1873, until present date, 1875. Mrs. Pickering, as secretary of the children's work, reported that branch, and Dr. McSurely (by the earnest request of the ladies), gave a finished address, showing that "this movement, extending as it has in its influence over the whole civilized world, is an inspiration of God's Holy Spirit." Thus was marked the second "mile stone" of the Woman's Crusade in Hillsboro.

At the regular monthly meeting, January 5, 1876, after devotional exercises and reading the minutes, it stands recorded: "Mrs. Thompson proposed that a committee be appointed at once to canvass the town for more subscribers to the woman's paper, THE UNION SIGNAL." The proposition was approved, and the following ladies were chosen: Mrs. Weatherby, Misses Sallie Stevenson and V. H. Wever and Jennie Harris.

The next business in order was the consideration of a letter from Mrs. H. C. McCabe, Ohio's president, with regard to a plan of her own devising, whereby the state treasury might be supplied, as at this early stage of our work it was empty.

Each local union was requested to send to her, at Delaware, a square of silk of given dimensions, patchwork, quilted or embroidered, but lined with linen, the usual gray color, and on that linen lining the names of all members who would send a dime or more must be written legibly, and if possible, in fadeless ink.

Our ladies at once responded, favoring the scheme, and a committee was appointed to take charge of the Hillsboro block for the "Ohio Crusade quilt." Mrs. Weatherby who was superintendent of the Children's Temperance Band at that time, provided a beautiful square for them, and sent it with five dollars, each child giving five cents with the name. Our woman's block was embroidered handsomely, and ten dollars in dimes sent with it.

During the winter of 1876 the different churches of our town had been faithfully served by their respective pastors with protracted services, and yet the "partition walls" having been so effectually removed during the Crusade, there was a great desire, on the part of the Christian women especially, that there should be a union service, where all denominations could once more meet around one common mercy seat. The subject was brought up at our meetings in the League room, and finding no opposition, it was made a subject of earnest prayer.

Very soon matters were all adjusted. The M. E. church being the largest in town, was by consent of the pastor, Rev. Lucian Clark, and trustees, agreed upon as the proper place for holding these services. Nathan and Esther Frame had been secured as evangelists, and for weeks a most blessed revival of religion refreshed and strengthened all denominations.

The humble little League room was found quite too small for the new additions to our numbers, who flocked to our gospel temperance meetings, hence the women of the union quickly procured and fitted up another hall, with dimensions ample for all purposes, even the children's meetings.

At the regular monthly temperance meeting, May 1, 1876, it is stated in the minutes that by request Mrs. Thompson gave a concise account of the progress of the work during the past two months; she also spoke of the work in Brooklyn, N. Y., and of its wonderful results expressing her confidence in the ultimate success of the cause. Her address was followed by short speeches from Rev. Mr. Bowen, of the Episcopal church, General McDowell and Judge Mathews. A letter was read, addressed to Mrs. Thompson, from the National president, Mrs. Wittenmeyer, requesting the Hillsboro Crusaders to send a telegraphic protest to the Centennial commission against permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Centennial fair grounds. Such telegram was at once forwarded and paid for by the League. Mrs. Wittenmeyer also requested the Hillsboro League to contribute to the National Temperance Fair, which was to be held in Philadelphia, beginning the second week in June.

The crusade fire still burned upon the altar of the W. C. T. U., and it is inspiring at this late date to read in their minutes the comforting facts, plainly indicating that the "God of Jacob" was still leading on to the victory, which unseen by them, was all planned by His mighty love and power.

A WHITE-RIBBONER'S VACATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have come to the conclusion that activity of some sort is vital. I sat in judgment on the lady who embroidered on the cars, and I find myself carping at the ladies I see crocheting on the veranda. But I, too, was busy in my different way from Chicago through beautiful Michigan, Ontario, and along the lake shore line of New York. I wonder if there are beautiful sights before the doors of the embroiderers and the crocheters when they are at home, and if the work they are absorbed in is just the change they need. But I do not know. And I also have been absorbed. I fancy the early French explorers must have toiled over nearly the same route we came by so swiftly. Only they went along from New Rotterdam (Scriba) to Oswego and Sodus in boats, with eyes alert for the "hobgoblin" Iroquois, and no inkling of the beautiful towns which were two hundred and fifty years later to hang like beads along a silken thread, on a thread of steel. Ruskin finds nothing poetic about a railway, but the railway man who adopted a four-leaved clover for the emblem of his road and set it upon a charming sketch of wooded hill and a gemlike lake was wiser. Instead of setting down the fact with mathematical precision, that it is delightful to reach this region either by historic Oswego, salt Syracuse, Rome (once Fort Stanwix), or beautiful Utica, he sketched that clover leaf upon a bit of Adirondack scenery, also on his route, and let the traveler find out its suggestion en route and his facts in the time tables. It certainly was in western phrase, "business," for our splendid iron horse to stop, that we might have five minutes unexampled refreshment at Falls View. But the Falls route offers all that the other roads do, besides speed, excellent service, delicate food, carefully kept, luxurious cars. That five minutes has a definite cost. The gift of it and the preparation and care of the little park, below which lies the matchless panorama of Niagara, on the whole one of the most satisfactory to be gained of this matchless picture, has its poetic as well as its practical side. We are living in an age of delicate ministries, of a charity finer than that dispensed at the public kitchen or the private one, of a justice that is given with gentle words and smiles.

After Chicago, Niagara and this enchanting "Venice of the North" seem like the lands the poet sings of, as "An idle sort of place, where all day long

It seems like evening with the day's work done."

No sound save the music of the river and the twitter of birds broke the silence at the Niagara reservation. The vociferous hackman, who, whip in hand assailed you, and terrified your last dollar out of you, has vanished. It is difficult to believe he ever existed. On the electric cars you discover that besides the Niagara of the great cataract, with its quiet hotels, there is another busy, beelike town, in the midst of which is—a W. C. T. U. center. You ride up to see the great tunnel through the solid rock and a mile and a half long, and a workman tells you in one minute that a load of hay could be driven through it, and that the power produced will be equal to 120,000 horse-power, and in the next he will assure you that temperance work is going on along with other undertakings at Niagara. There is a Russian Countess at our hotel, and at Niagara there was, I was told, a real Indian Maharajah. The countess and the prince are both bound for the World's Fair, as were other foreigners I met at the Falls, German, Scotch and English, and I looking at this lovely picture of sapphire river, and rocky islets, cannot help wondering why the work of a free people, for that is what the White City is, could not have escaped the soil of broken faith and disregarded laws, and have been more than an exhibit of material prosperity and acquisition.

This region is full of historic interest, but unluckily, Huron, Iroquois, Frenchman, Englishman and colonist left little trace behind them. Even the curious remains on Carlton Island cannot be definitely named, for it is not known whether the chimneys were raised by French or English hands.

The beauty of this bay is made by the fleets of little islands across the channel. Homes of all degree dot these rocky fastnesses, now it is a board villa, now sumptuous Castle Rest, modeled after a palace on the Rhine. Visitors return year after year to these shores. "It kind o' hants ye," said an old man to me this morning. It is his daily habit to visit the hotel verandas and the docks. He has a simple, wise, old face, and shows his days have been spent close to nature. "I went up an' down this river seventy years ago," he continued; "I was born here. When I got married I made up my mind there warn't much use in trying to get a living off a country that's seven-eighths rock, and we went out to Iowa, my wife an' me. She died a year ago las' February." He paused and nervously pulled at the snowy stubble beneath his chin, "I've been a-wanderin' ever since," he resumed after a little. "It left me alone in the world, an' I'm eighty-three." Again he paused and seemed to study the lines of the two brigs that went weltering by drawn by a snorting little tug, "Yes'm, I just went a-wanderin'. I sold my farm an' my town lots, and struck out for here. I make it my home with my sister-in-law, an' I do s'pose I'm liable to stay here long's I live. I was born here, and after my wife died it kind o' comforted me to come back. But I wouldn't give nothin' for this country for farmin' if I was young—my sister-in-law seems to think she has a pretty fine garden, an' she has, but I tell her what a feller gets here a-plenty is eye crop. Yes'm, begun a-goin' up an' down the St. Lawrence when I was just thirteen an' that was seventy years ago, an' I was always as tough as a hick'ry knot. Never drank beer or nothin'. They used to tell me when I begun here on the river I'd die without whisky. But I sez, 'Well, if I do I shan't fill no drunkard's grave,' an' when I went west they said the malary'd kill a biled owl, an' I mus' drink whisky, or, anyhow, beer. But I sez, 'No, I didn't come west to fill a drunkard's grave.' Them fellers as prophesied died long ago, an' here I be, pretty nigh as tough as ever. Yes'm, I've been a temperance man an' I like to think on it. Pears to me drinkin's 'bout the biggest cuss left in the world."

Some doctors of divinity and medicine at One Thousand Island park were pitching quoits beside the Columbian, which like all the large hotels in this region is delightful. One of the latter proved to be a school friend.

"What are you doing here?" I asked, thinking of his busy life.

"Sleeping as I have not slept for twenty years," he said gravely. "There is something in this sweet, dewless air, scented with pine and fir, more potent than any drug I know for tired nerves." ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

ENGLISH FAREWELLS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Only those who can understand something of the mental and physical strain consequent upon such work as Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell undertook in India will realize what a pleasure it must have been to those two intrepid women to receive a tribute of the deep regard and esteem in which they are held in this country.

At the invitation of Mrs. and Miss Woolcott Brown, the following ladies and gentlemen among others were present at a farewell breakfast which took place at the Westminster Palace Hotel, on Wednesday last: Mrs. Josephine Butler, superintendent of the purity department of the W. W. C. T. U.; Mrs. and Miss Woolcott Brown; Miss Conybeare; Mr. Stansfield, M. P.; Sir. W. Wedderburn, M. P.; Mr. McLaren, M. P.; Mr. H. J. Wilson, M. P.; Professor Stewart, M. P.; Mr. Alfred Webb, M. P.; Rev. J. P. Gladstone; Rev. Allen Rees, and Dr. Birkbeck Nevins, of Liverpool.

Mr. Stansfield, on behalf of the British committee, presented Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew with a handsome gift of money and an illuminated address, expressing for himself and the British committee the warmest appreciation and gratitude for their services, and for themselves personally a reverent affection. The report of the departmental committee upon the matter these ladies have been investigating in India, is now nearly completed, and the report of its proceedings will soon be given to the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for India.

Those who know the brave faith and courage which inspired Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell to start on this great undertaking, and to go through with it, without receiving any funds from America for their needs, but just trusting to God and their own efforts from stage to stage in the ofttimes perilous journeying, will appreciate the joy they must both feel that the cause of purity has gained a great advance.

It is now confidently expressed that a great victory for righteousness and for the deliverance of the women of India will soon be obtained, and not a few will echo Mr. Stansfield's words when presenting the tribute from the British committee: "I am specially delighted that this piece of good work has been done by women." It is also interesting from a woman's point of view to know that Mr. Stansfield alluded to the economy exercised by the ladies in all the expenses consequent on the undertaking.

In comparison with the loyal crowds gathered at the various great meetings these devoted women have addressed in London and the provinces since their return from India, the informal little gathering to bid farewell which took place at 57 Gordon Square on August 24, might seem insignificant. Only a few ladies representing the British Women's Temperance Association were in town at the time. The president, Lady Henry Somerset, being away in Switzerland, Mrs. Aukland, as honorary secretary of the B. W. T. A., was hostess on the occasion, and with Miss Phillips, of Tottenham, gave a loving God-speed and farewell from the sub-committee.

After refreshments had been served, the tables being decorated with flowers and white ribbon, Mrs. Aukland gave the message intrusted to her, and in a few tender and significant words expressed the gratitude that women feel towards these India missionaries for the great work they have accomplished in behalf of helpless womanhood, not only in India, but throughout the world. Miss Phillips then warmly indorsed the message of farewell, and Mrs. Aukland handed to each lady a garden posy of white roses and maiden-hair fern tied with white ribbon. Dr. Bushnell spoke some inspiring words not likely to be soon forgotten, relating to the great work she and Mrs. Andrew had recently undertaken. "What we have done," she said, "we have done as God's instruments. We have felt in this India work how easily we might have been defeated, and yet God has always marvelously opened our way and helped us. It was not our wisdom, it was God's." Referring to the inspiring truth that it is love only that will save the world, she referred to the native women in India, saying, you have only to go skin deep to find that a woman is a woman all the world over. It is this remarkable love for these native women that is so characteristic of the splendid work these India missionaries have accomplished, and perhaps no more significant word has been spoken than the emphatic utterance of Dr. Bushnell, that it is international hatred which is at the bottom of most of the terrible evils they are trying to uproot, and one reason why Dr. Bushnell looks so hopefully upon our women's work is because it is easy for women to love one another. "Women," she says, "have never taken up arms against each other as men have," and it is this great truth that love is the all-conquering remedy for all the ills that afflict humanity which has been so manifest in the magnificent work for social purity that these ladies have accomplished. Mrs. Andrew then gave those present a little account of her own experiences in taking up this work.

Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell embarked for America on Saturday, the 26th of August, by the steamship Paris from Southampton, in company with Miss Gordon, each returning to be present at the great white ribbon conventions which will be held in Chicago.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh.—Heb. 11:4.

The following extract is taken from a letter which appeared lately in the Virginia Call, written by Mrs. A. S. Wiley, superintendent of Temple work for Virginia:

"Can I not say something to make white-ribboners of Virginia feel a personal interest and pride in our beautiful Temperance Temple at Chicago? Do you know that in lovely Willard Hall, where each state has its name inscribed on its marble walls, you must look in vain for Virginia's tablet? The local superintendent of Temple work, of Brambleton union, has just returned from a visit to the 'White City.' She says the city is a wonder, the World's Fair Exhibition is the wonder of the world, but more wonderful than all is the Woman's Temple and Willard Hall inside of that. She attended the noon hour prayer service and felt such an uplift to her soul as she never had before for the great cause for which we are working, and when she looked at that wonderful building and thought that a woman, one of her own sex, had planned all this, her feelings were indescribable; the joy that took possession of her still lingers with her, and when she looked in vain for the name of dear old Virginia tablet, deep down in her heart she registered a vow that such should not be the case much longer. So she has come home and is now making preparations to hold a lawn party for the benefit of the Temple. She has out a good many mite-boxes but she felt that it was too long to wait until the year was up to call them in; she must do something now to help that noble woman in her stupendous work. She said she felt if every white-ribboner in Virginia would only take a mite-box and get it filled—that is a penny a day—or if each one would give just two dollars apiece no one would feel the burden of the gift, and oh! what a help it would be to dear Mrs. Carse toward paying for the Temple; for truly it does belong to the W. C. T. U., but not to me or you unless we contribute our mite, or of our means to help to own it."

The above noble confession of dereliction of duty to the Temple is, indeed, refreshing, and still more so is the determination that works shall testify that the repentance and confession are sincere. We are sorry that there are many more states in the condition of Virginia, their names not appearing in the beautiful, marble-lined corridors of Willard Hall, among those who have paid toward the erection of the Temple. What a mortification it must be to the white-ribbon women from those states who are now visiting Chicago and the Fair in large numbers, not to see the name of their state mentioned as among the donors to this magnificent building, which is such an honor to our organization, and is winning for us name and fame throughout the world; but there will be mortification of a different sort felt when the time arrives, as it surely will, when the building will be all paid for, and the states will begin to receive back an income from their investment. Then the women from the states that have not given will begin to cry out and say: "Why did not our state W. C. T. U. urge the importance of the Temple work upon us, and get each white-ribboner to give at least a penny a day for a year? None of us would have felt it.

Again we have marble cutters at work in Willard Hall. They have just completed cutting the names in the corridors of unions up to September 1, 1893, which have paid $100 or more towards the erection of the Temple. They are at present at work cutting the names of those who have been sent in by friends in memoriam. The tablets immediately under the thirteen memorial windows at the south end of the Hall have been selected as memorial tablets. Under the windows is a wide band of mottled reddish marble, on which is carved a text in large letters, so it can be read from any part of the Hall: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."—Rev. 14:13. In letters not quite so large, underneath this on the buff marble tablets, are the words: "IN MEMORIAM." Again, below this, in still smaller letters, is the name of the state. Under each state tablet is the name of the departed and of the town in which she lived. The names in memoriam by states will be published in this column as soon as they are all cut on the tablets. We are going to give each week the names of unions on each state tablet as they now stand in Willard Hall. We will also give the names of states that do not appear on this roll of honor. The names of unions which follow are copied from the New York state tablet, as the record now stands in Willard Hall:

Brooklyn union on the hill, Brooklyn; Jamestown union, Jamestown; Madison Avenue union, New York City; Brockport union, Brockport; First union, Brooklyn; Dansville union, Dansville; Cazenovia union, Cazenovia: Rensselaer county union; Washington county union; Troy Central union, Troy; Lansingburg union, Lansingburg; First union, Olean; Plattsburg union, Plattsburg; Pine Bush union, Pine Bush; Niagara county union; Watertown union, Watertown; Black River union, Black River; Ninth and Tenth Ward union, Rochester.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him who heals the drunkard's woe,
Praise Him who leads the temperance host,
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

Chorus.—

Oh, happy land; thrice happy land
Whose people always firmly stand
Upon the solid rock of right,
And shed the beams of gospel light
O'er all the temperance hosts, who stand
"For God, and Home and Native Land."

WEAR THE RIBBON WHITE.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

About an hour ago I was in the Epworth League service, held in our camp ground Tabernacle. Do you know what inspiring meetings our young people have? My heart glowed within me as I listened to testimony after testimony, and song after song, strong and sweet as is the union of youth and truth itself.

At length a young lady arose and gave a most interesting experience. The day before she wore a dark dress, and upon her breast was a bow of the Epworth League ribbon—white with a scarlet thread running through it—pinned with the silver badge.

As she threw back her jacket, this was seen by a man in the audience. Turning to a gentleman near he said: "What does that white ribbon mean?"

The gentleman supposed it to be a W. C. T. U. ribbon and replied: "It stands for temperance," and explained to him something of the aims of the white-ribboners everywhere. The man seemed much affected, as he said that he once had a sister who had worn one, but she was now in heaven.

Deeply convicted he left the service, and last night after a struggle of hours he was converted. The gentleman to whom he had spoken was fortunately a Christian, and as he added his testimony to that of the young lady, I gathered that his efforts had been freely given in aid of his stranger brother.

This morning he was handed a letter for the lady who had insensibly been the means of bringing the stranger to Christ, and after the service was over, she loaned it to me, and I copy for the encouragement of our workers everywhere.

"——— CAMP GROUND.

"MY DEAR GIRL:—I presume you will be offended with the liberty I take in writing to you. This man tells me he told you it was the ribbon. No, but it was the ribbon that I noticed, and then I heard what you said, and it carried me back to my boyhood. I had a sister that is now in heaven—she wore one of them. I can't say what brought me to the camp-meeting, I came to W—— on a business trip. I sell rum for —— & —— of L——. I was at the depot, got in a team and came over just to spend the time. I had to wait for a train, and I have been here three days now, and I am glad I came. God bless you. You don't know what you have done for me, though you never spoke a word to me. I am going back home to-day, and I promised God I will never sell another drop of rum or any other kind of liquor as long as I live. I have spent the night mostly on my knees, and I got saved, and God told me it was all right with my soul. May God bless you and help you to wear the ribbon, and may it and you help many more as you helped me. Pray for me. —— ———."

Oh, the great reward for "showing her colors"! Surely the League motto and watchword, "Look up and Lift up," was silently fulfilling its mission, when one soul in the great crowd was thus drawn toward the cross of Christ.

But the lesson and the reward is also for us—white-ribboners of the W. C. T. U. Will we learn—will we ever learn—that our ribbons are not simply for conventions and public meetings? Will we not wear them all the time, that sometime, somewhere, the one man or woman "waiting for a sign or signal" may see ours and turn toward purity and righteousness?

And the mothers, wives and sisters who wear it, and who pray and weep over sons, husbands and brothers "outside,"—take courage! Perhaps when you are in heaven the memory of your steadfastness may draw them also thitherward.

"NO METHOD."

Such qualities as method, order, and punctuality are regarded by some people as the lowest among the virtues. They are even despised as having something prim, priggish, "old maidish," about them, and as indicating an absence of genius. A vast number of the most serious evils that afflict ordinary people have their root in the fact that they have no method. Existence is all at random. No plans are laid; or if laid, they are never adhered to. There is no "fashioning" of themselves (I Peter, 1: 14), but they float about in daily life as the circumstances or moods of each day carry them. They do not, consciously and deliberately, shape, make, direct, or control their lives, but allow them to be moulded into any kind of shapeless figures by their containing circumstances. They have almost lost the use of their wills. They wish, but that is the utmost they can do. The feeblest outside conditions—the influence of weather and atmosphere, a fog, an east wind, a sunless day—can overrule and prostrate what ought to be a sovereign force, the will of an independent human being, who becomes, like any vegetable,

"Servile to all the skiey influences."

The consequences of no method are banefully seen in domestic life. There are a great many families who live in a perpetual scramble. There is no regular hour for going to bed at night. When the days are long, if the evening is fine the very smallest of the children are out and "a-gate" till nine or ten o'clock. If an interesting gossip comes on, the family party, and any visitors who have dropped in, stand talking it over till midnight and much longer. As a natural consequence there is no regular hour for getting up in the morning. You go in on business, thinking the day pretty well advanced, and you find the remains of breakfast on the table. "We were all late to-day." There is no particular time for the children to prepare their lessons for school. There is no regular period for paying the household bills. Accounts at the butcher's and the baker's are running up for weeks or months, and when they come in unexpectedly their amount seems appalling. The waste and destruction in such houses are incalculable. Nobody knows where anything is. There is a place for nothing and nothing is in its place. If an important paper or letter is suddenly wanted, every drawer is pulled out, and the contents tumbled on the floor before it is found, if it is ever found. All the household stores melt away in the most inexplicable manner. No one knows when the chest of tea was opened, or how long the box of candles ought to last. "He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand." Generally in these houses all the keys have been lost. Persons with no method never answer letters. I do not mean that they never write, sooner or later, after receiving a letter; but they never read it over in order to reply to its questions, comment on its news, and respond to its remarks.

You know perfectly well that if you lend a book to a member of a family with no method, you can hardly hope to see it again; or if you do, it will be with its back broken or some of its leaves gone. In fact, the house is a gulf, which seems to swallow up beyond recovery whatever goes into it.

We do not advocate being enslaved by rule in anything. Rule is a means and not an end, and with the best plans interruptions come, which, coming unsought, have authority higher than our plans, and must be met with cheerful readiness. "For by so doing," Thomas à Kempis says, "a good work is not lost, but changed into a better." But we advocate arranging our lives, knowing what we have to do, "doing everything at its proper time, keeping everything in its proper place." Not only shall we thus get more done, but what is done will be accomplished in a calm, quiet way, instead of the worried, heated state people get into who are trying to "overtake" a mass of work without method or preconcerted plan.

While we "let things go" and live "just as it comes" our brief allotted span is running out at a fixed rate. Though we have no method, the sublime processes of nature move above us with unswerving regularity. Are we "to end each day in a hurry, and life itself in a tumult, and when the hurried day is over, and the fevered life is closing, to leave half our work undone"?—Alliance News.

NOT even a god can change into defeat the victory of the man who has vanquished himself.—Buddhist text.

THE greatest fact of all is that we are bound to obey the truth, and that to the full extent of our knowledge thereof, however little that may be. This obligation acknowledged and obeyed, the road is open to all truth—and the only road. The way to know is to do the known. . . He who gladly kneels with one who thinks largely wide from himself, in so doing draws nearer to the Father of both than he who pours forth his soul in sympathetic torrent only in the company of those who think like himself.—St. George and St. Michael.

WORDS TO THE WISE—ACCORDING TO LAW.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

These continuous words regarding the laws of Oneness are not written merely to say interesting things about it, but because it has a bearing upon human affairs vital almost beyond conception. We have seen that it is by no means an unwritten law. Nature everywhere proclaims it in large type and small, and in the higher realm, mind, it is the common ground where science, religion and philosophy meet and merge. Science tells of the one causative force back of all the forms of force which manifest variously as heat, light, motion, electricity and attraction. In our own Scriptures, and in others, religion asserts the One Omnipresent source or Father of all that is, and makes us understand that a common Father implies the brotherhood of man, and this means family kinship. "God is the All." "God is the common of our souls." "We, being many . . . are every one members one of another." "He fashioneth their hearts alike." "God has made of one blood, all." "Love as brethren." "In thee, in me, in every one the Lord of Life resides." "God tabernacles with men." Not with a few persons but with man universal. And there is no privileged class "created a little lower than the angels," and who are "the temples of God," and in whom the Divine Presence dwells, "to will, and to do." In vain may human distinctions strive to create a separateness, since what God has joined can no man put asunder.

Philosophy, ancient and modern, dwells largely on "that unity, that Over-Soul, within which every man's particular being is contained and made one with each other." "The heart in thee is the heart of all." "One blood rolls uninterruptedly in endless circulation through all men as the water of the globe is all one sea, and truly seen, its tide is one." In the natural world, "The whirling bubble in the brook admits us to the secrets of the mechanism of the skies." There is much more to the same purpose, and the familiar strains of a poet-philosopher discourse bravely of the Divine Omnipresence which,

"Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent.
To Him no high, no low, no great, no small,
He fills, He bounds, connects and equals all.
From nature's chain, whatever link you strike,
Tenth or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike.
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.
All are but parts of one stupendous whole."

That a conception of the Oneness idea is thus universal goes to prove its truth, but our present concern with it is not as truth, neither as science, neither as religion, neither as philosophy, but as law. Mankind in general regard religion as more or less binding, science, philosophy and truth with more or less indifference, but make them know that they are under law, and dread of penalty commands attention. For this reason it is important that our law of Oneness be kept well to the front, even at the cost of repetition, and all the more because it has been slightingly spoken of as sentiment, idealism, visionary, utopian, and the like. It should be disconnected from all these and seen for just what it is, inexorable law. All that savors of softness, or pity, or mercy, or special consideration must be ignored, for law is an irresponsible power with no freedom to set itself aside, and offering but one choice, obedience or retribution.

The universe is arranged on the Oneness plan, as shown in organization—many in one. It is the true family plan. From solar systems to atoms everything tends that way. The human body is an organization; so is each of its members; so is every insect, flower, leaf. Every tree is an organization, or, if you please, a family. Yes, call it a family. Note well the management. The family resources are common stock, and are distributed according to the various needs. Each member receives all that is required for its own development, and by this full development is enabled to contribute to the common resources, and thus to help carry on the family. In this way the virtuous circle of take and give is made complete, and the tree lives long and prospers, because each member has life and prosperity, which is only another way of saying what has already been said, that the good of each and every makes the good of the whole, and the good of the whole depends on the good of each and every.

Humanity, as a part of the universe, settles naturally into the general order of things, organization. And now we have come to the immediate point of interest for us—the American people organized as a nation. Having adopted the universal plan, what should be its first care? What, indeed, but to fall into line with the universal law of Oneness and secure the good of the whole by securing the good of the individual members? To do this intelligently it must first recognize what is here meant by the term good. That is, what constitutes value in the individual and eminence in the nation.

GROWN-UP LAND.

Good-morrow, fair maid, with lashes brown,
Can you tell me the way to Womanhood Town?

Oh, this way and that way—never stop;
'Tis picking up stitches grandma will drop,
'Tis kissing the baby's troubles away,
'Tis learning that cross words never will pay,
'Tis helping mother, 'tis sowing up rents,
'Tis reading and playing, 'tis saving the pence,
'Tis loving and smiling, forgetting to frown;
Oh, that is the way to Womanhood Town.

Just wait, my brave lad—one moment, I pray;
Manhood Town lies where—can you tell me the way?

Oh, by toiling and trying we reach that land—
A bit with the head, a bit with the hand—
'Tis by climbing up the steep hill Work,
'Tis by keeping out of the wide street Shirk,
'Tis by always taking the weak one's part,
'Tis by giving mother a happy heart,
'Tis by keeping bad thoughts and actions down;
Oh, that is the way to Manhood Town.

And the lad and the maid ran hand-in-hand
To their fair estates in the grown-up land.

CANNING FRUIT.

I put up fruit, Jimmy? Ask Aunt Mary, and she will tell you that I do all the lifting, and at least half the other work. I never could see why a woman should do any more hours' work in a day than a man. "Woman's work," do you say, Helen? No such thing. Washing dishes is as much a man's work as a woman's, unless he has more important matters on hand; and when it comes to working over the fire, with fruit and cans and—but you know the rest; let us get to work.

No; not a recipe, nor a word as to treatment of different fruits. See the cook books, or ask your mothers. My field is outside, and we may as well enter one corner as another.

First, provide a comfortable seat. I suppose Tom, there, with more life than he knows what to do with, could sit on the top rail of a fence all day, and not feel tired. But when you are as old as I am, or as tired as many an overworked woman is, you will be glad to have an easy, restful seat. You will find that you have muscles in your backs. Your longissimus dorsi will ache: your quadratus lumborum and transversalis colli will complain of overtension; your trapezius, rhomboidens major will simply compel you to rest. You must have a seat that conforms to the requirements of these masters.

First, make the seat slant to the rear. Put cushions at the front, so that when you sit down your hips will settle against the back of the chair. Now another cushion, or roll of something, on the chair-back at the height which gives the most comfort. Tie these cushions to their places. Yes, use the chair at the table, as a support for weak people, and as a promoter of the proper attitude.

Next, get supports for the arms and hands. You will never know the pain and suffering caused by long holding up of the arms until you try it. Even sitting up to a table so that the body touches, and resting the arms on the edge, is a great help. But for the best result—yes, there they are, my automatic danglers. Two cords, nearly as thick as a lead pencil, suspended from the ceiling, two feet apart, one over each forearm when you sit in the chair. If the ceiling is too nice for nails, run cords across the room from the tops of door-frames, and attach the danglers to them. Make a ring of leather, or cloth, for the arms. Attach the cord to the ring by a slipping-noose, but make two or three ties so as to have more friction for length adjustment, and then wet the knot, if necessary. These supports can be varied from the elbow to the wrist, and frequent changes will prevent fatigue. Yes, for paring potatoes, or any such work. Should be in every kitchen, or attached to a frame over an invalid's chair.

Use a knife that fits your hand, with thin blade. Sharpen it with a file, as explained in No. XII. This rough edge is better than a smooth one, unless literally as sharp as a razor, and will cut peach-skin with an easy grace that is surprising. Keep the file by you, and use it as often as necessary. No good mechanic can afford to work with dull tools.

Next, something to hold the jars,—for if your fingers are as sensitive as mine, you will wish to preserve a minimum distance of six inches between them and a hot jar. You can buy them if you have the money,—five cents for the cover-holder and twenty-five cents for the jar-holder. If not, or for any reason, you wish to make them, take, for the cover, a 3-16 wire, and bend it around the groove at the top of the cover, then turn the ends out, so that they stand one half inch apart where they leave the cover, and two inches at the ends. Hook the ends inward, so they will not hurt the hand. Make the ring so it will pinch a little, and so stay in place when applied.

For the jar-holder, take a pine board, 1x5x5, cut a half-circle out of one end to fit the jar, and taper the other end, by curved lines, to about two inches. Now split this boot-jack through the middle, and you have two handles. Take a strip of tin, one inch wide, long enough to reach around the jar and well into the handles. Fasten well, at the farther ends of the handles, with small wire nails. No need of nails along the curve. Round off the corners of the wood, where the tin turns into the handles, as the greatest pressure comes here. Use nails where they will not touch the glass, that is, up in the straight parts of the handles. Now hammer down the sharp edges, and wrap the tin with a strip of cloth. Wet it, for use, as it will hold with less pressure. I hope you understand, for I have not space for more details, and there are several other points I want to touch.

Jars will break, sometimes, from original cracks or unknown cause—that is, the new ones will. An experienced jar never breaks. Don't be led away by the superstition—which I lately saw in print—as to leaving a spoon in the jar to prevent breakage from hot fruit. Do nothing of the kind. Put the jars into warm water, and warm water into the jars, a few at a time, in the dishpan. Improve the occasion to try each one with its cover, and see that it is tight. If you do this, there will be no loss from leakage, and no need to stand them on their heads as a test. This I consider an important point. From the warm water, take a jar on a warm plate, and clap the fruit in, fearlessly. Aunt Mary and I never break any jars; but we are extra careful with new ones, putting in cold water first, and then pouring in hot water without touching the glass. Don't let cold air touch an empty warm jar. Run a knife-blade around so as to let out the air-bubbles, heat the cover with a dip of the fruit, then put it on as far as convenient with the fingers, pick up the jar with a wire holder, seize the bottom with newspaper, screw tight, set into hot water and wash outside, then to its place, handling by the holder all the time. No future tightening necessary if you found no leak when tested with water.

Now you see my space is full, but I have much more to say. The other points will keep, however. I hope this will be in time to help some tired worker. You see I have not entered the cook-book's domain.

WHAT WHISKY FETCHES.

"What is whisky bringing?" asked a dealer in that article one day. He meant to ask, how much is it selling for? A gentleman who heard the remark took it in an entirely different sense from that. "What is whisky bringing, do you ask? I'll tell you. It is bringing men to prison and to the gallows, and it is bringing women and children to poverty and want." There never was a truer answer than this.

It is estimated that it sends to prison every year one hundred thousand men and women. Twenty thousand children are sent to the workhouse annually by drink. Three hundred murders are caused by intemperance every year. Two hundred thousand children are made orphans every year by this dreadful evil, and sixty-five thousand are killed by intemperance every year in this country. Does it seem possible that man will deal out to his brother such poisonous stuff when he knows that it will prove his ruin?—Exchange.

A SEVEN-YEAR-OLD Boston lad, building "better than he knew," invented the other day a new and exceedingly appropriate name for the ordinary run of city saloons. The little fellow knew that we bought tea at a tea-store, and boots at a boot-store. So this kind of unconscious analogy guided his speech. At the table the other day he broke out with the news: "I seed two men coming out of a drunk-store; and one of 'em was oxticated." "Drunk-store," the Boston Traveller recommends for general use as the more appropriate term for the regular business of such places.

A LITTLE four-year-old, who was much alarmed at thunder and lightning, was told by her grandma that she need not fear; God would take care of her. She looked earnestly at her grandma, and asked if God didn't cause the thunder and lightning; and, when told He did, she said: "I was just thinking that He might be so busy as to forget me."—Western Christian Advocate.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Along the sides of our exhibit at the World's Fair are tables, on which are placed samples of literature, papers, leaflets and cards, which visitors are invited to take. The other day a colored boy about twelve years old presented himself at the railing and pointing to one of the pretty pledge cards said to the young lady in attendance: "I reckon you ain't got one you'd like me to sign?" There have been a good many visitors to the W. C. T. U. booth at the World's Fair, but never one just like this before and the young lady was greatly surprised. But she smilingly said, "Do you understand what this card says?" "Oh, yes," answered the boy, and he recited the pledge word for word. In a few minutes he had signed it and departed smiling and happy.

The children's pledge cards fill a big decorated packing case and overflow in festoons and streamers about the booth and in the Children's Building. All this great exhibit is made up of single signatures of children like this boy who "wanted to sign the pledge" and many of them are members of our Cozy Corner, I know.

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I read the Cozy Corner letters from your nephews and nieces, and I would, if there is room, like to be one of your nephews. My mother used to take THE UNION SIGNAL and work for the W. C. T. U. when she was alive. I belong to the Christian Endeavor and the church. Hoping that I may be received.

GEORGE H. WAITT,
(Thirteen years.)

218 Brighton Ave., Allston, Mass.

A warm welcome to you, George. May the dear mother's love and teachings be ever the clearest and best memory you have.

In that happy circle of boys and girls, couldn't you please find a little space for me? I'm an out-and-out temperance girl and long for the time when the right shall overcome the wrong and our country shall be entirely freed from the dreadful demon of drink. I will answer letters from any of the nieces—the small as well as the large—if they will write to me. ANNA C. GALES.

Greensboro, N. C.

I wish our space would receive the whole of your good letter, Anna, for which I thank you. The address you want is 29 Hartington Place, Viewforth, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Enclosed please find one dollar toward the Willard Fountain, for which send me the medal. With love for Cozy Corner. VINNIE STATLER.

Reedsburg, O.

The dollar has been sent to Miss Gordon at Rest Cottage and I trust you have received the pretty medal, Vinnie.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. —Eccl. 12:13.

THE LABOR CONGRESS.

The present phase of the labor question in the cosmopolitan city of Chicago lent additional timeliness and significance to the World's Labor Congress. The spectacle of thousands of unemployed laborers fed daily by public "charity" is an object lesson which appeals forcibly to students of the labor problem and emphasizes the necessity for practical and speedy reform in our social and economic conditions. As was well expressed by a prominent leader, it is "less words and more achievements" that are needed in the labor movement, and the subject was discussed by the congress with a view to that end.

The chief obstacle in the way of a speedy settlement of all difficulties in our present social system is the difference of opinion among reformers themselves as to remedial methods, arising, of course, out of difference of opinion as to causes. And the labor question is no exception to the rule. Single-tax advocates, asserting as their fundamental principle that "all men are equally entitled to the use of the earth," regard land monopoly as the "bottom trouble," and would therefore abolish all taxation except a tax on the rental value of land, or in economic phrase, the "unearned increment" of land.

Another faction, believing that the present unequal distribution of wealth is due to the control by private corporations of railways and other "natural monopolies," favor "nationalism," or government ownership as a pivotal measure. Some leaders are of the opinion that in the "Referendum" is to be found the key to the solution of the labor problem; others, that proportional representation is the only effective remedy, while still others advocate an inheritance and an income tax as a starting point for the unraveling of this tangled web.

But while there are divisions and subdivisions within the ranks of the laborites it does not necessarily follow that the progress of the movement is thereby seriously obstructed. Society, in the process of evolution, has reached a critical point—a boundary line which it is wise to approach with caution and to cross with due deliberation. That radical changes in the social order are about to take place no thinking person doubts, but while we work without rest to bring about the new régime let us remember also to work without haste.

The attention which statesmen and law-makers are giving to-day to the claims of labor goes to prove that modern progress is along the line of organization and federation. The permeating influence of federated labor is seen in the efforts of governments in Europe and America in behalf of this reform. France has established a bureau of labor. England has done the same. Even autocratic Russia comes to the front in this matter. Only a few weeks ago the Russian Bureau of Labor sent out its first official report, a copy of which has been received by the president of the American Federation of Labor. In our own country much favorable legislation has been secured through organized effort, the state of Illinois having the honor—so said the congress—of giving to the people (in its law relating to the sweating system) the most advanced legislation of all on the labor question.

But while we are sympathizing with the workingman and devising ways and means to ameliorate the condition of the toiling masses, let us not forget to be just to the capitalist and the employer—to the man outside of what is popularly termed the "laboring class." Mr. Henry George, from the platform of the congress, defined "labor" as "human exertion in the production of wealth." Assuming this definition to be correct, it follows that in this country, at least, the non-laboring class constitutes a very small minority. "Human exertion" does not necessarily mean exclusively physical exertion. He who exercises the mental faculties in the production of wealth, is as truly a laboring man as he who uses merely physical force. He who plans and directs any great enterprise whereby all are benefited contributes as much—might we not say more?—to the common wealth as he who executes and obeys.

Wealth is the result of the combined exertion of mind and muscle, and we do not detract from the dignity and importance of manual labor when we say that there is no injustice, primarily, in mental effort along the line of commercial and industrial responsibility receiving the greater reward. If a monied oligarchy with its attendant abuses has arisen; if, as the author of "Progress and Poverty" declares, labor finds difficulty in getting the products of labor, and the working class is the poor class, it is because we have not yet learned the secret of true government; it is because the proper relations between "capital" and "labor" have not yet been established; because the law of coöperation (the logical sequence of the unification of human interests) has not been fully recognized.

The most significant feature, to us, of the congress, the most encouraging omen for the future, was the mass-meeting on Sunday evening when Religion, irrespective of creed or dogma, let its voice be heard in no uncertain tones for the cause of labor. The church, represented by dignitaries from both sides of the Atlantic, Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile, came upon the platform of the Hall of Washington, and pleaded earnestly and eloquently for the gospel idea of human brotherhood. "Man, a child of God whatever his religion," this was the dominating thought, and the necessity for a more practical Christianity was emphasized. "First the natural, then the spiritual" must be the order for the presentation of gospel truth to a hungry man, to a nature dwarfed by oppression and by a long and ineffectual struggle with discordant surroundings. "For the very sake of the spiritual," says the Church of Rome, through the mouth of its pontiff, "the church must care for the temporal interests of its children."

This coming together of religious leaders for the furtherance of a spirit of brotherly love in the entire human family is evidence of a stirring up of the dry bones preparatory to a revivifying of the whole church militant. Said the Rev. Mr. Coyle, of Massachusetts, "It is a law that every period of financial distress is followed by a wave of religious awakening. Be not surprised if you see great things in the future, for the coming awakening will be characterized by a sincere repentance of the sin of unbrotherliness, and by such efforts at contrition as were never seen." God grant it may be so!

"PHILANTHROPIC FINANCE."

The Westminster Gazette, now the leading evening paper of London, has been publishing a series of articles, entitled, "Philanthropic Finance," which illustrate a pitiful parallel between some goings-on across the water and some on this side. We cannot go into details, but it seems that some of the old line temperance leaders, of whom Dr. Dawson Burns is chief, have been for years connected with various "provident," "limited," "land artisans," "laborers" and "general dwelling house builders' companies," in which they have utilized, so far as practicable, their position and influence as temperance leaders.

Most of these enterprises have fallen through, as might be expected, for it is a general principle that workers for humanity should not be makers of money. As the Westminster Gazette pointedly says:

The incalculable misery caused by the failure of the "Liberator (Building) Society" and the almost incredible revelations now proceeding day after day in connection with the "Balfour Group" will not have been without their compensations if they only serve to give the death-blow once and for all to philanthropic finance. "A blade," says Macaulay, "which is designed to shave and to carve, will certainly not shave as well as a razor, nor carve so well as a carving knife. A gas company, which should also be an infant school society, would, we apprehend, light the streets ill, and teach the children ill." On the same principle philanthropy and philanthropists would do well to stick to their last, and not dabble in finance. A temperance society which should also be a financial speculating business is likely to speculate badly, and to do more harm than good in the end to the temperance cause. There were, of course, some knaves concerned with the Balfour group, but it is equally certain that the knaves made tools of men of good repute. Take, for instance, Dr. Dawson Burns, a man of the highest reputation in the philanthropic world. Who can say how many of the thrifty poor were led to invest their hard-won savings on the strength of the connection with the Liberator of so well-known a divine and so eminent a philanthropist? Or take, again, Mr. George Dibley, who has been figuring so prominently in recent proceedings before the Registrar. He also, beside being deeply versed in financial affairs, has been a shining light in the temperance world, and as such must have inspired confidence in many thrifty and temperate homes. How far such confidence was justified, all those who have followed the recent proceedings in the Registrar's court are well able to judge. The motives of philanthropists in embarking on building societies and other financial ventures may be most excellent. Descartes was once twitted by some courtiers for that he, a philosopher, was enjoying a good dinner. "Well," he replied, "do you think the good things of the earth were made only for fools?" And if philosophers, why not also philanthropists? Why should "good things" in the city sense of the term be reserved only for the ungodly, the intemperate and the unthrifty? But our complaint with the philanthropists is that when in the interests of those who trust them, they embark upon financial ventures, they so signally fail to recognize their responsibility. The higher the character of such men the greater is their responsibility, for the greater also must be the confidence they inspire in investors, and the evil purposes to which dishonest colleagues may turn their good names. But instead of realizing any such responsibility, it is abundantly clear that Dr. Dawson Burns and any other gentlemen of religious standing who were officially connected with the great Liberator fiasco, can only have continued that connection in virtue, either of colossally guileless simplicity, or of neglecting the opportunities they had for examination into the facts. But whether or not these alternatives exhaust the possible explanation of their action, the consequences were most deplorable and unfortunate. Apparently their neglect of their opportunities as directors does not render them obnoxious to the law. But as this is so, the duty is all the more imperatively laid on those who have in any degree the ear of the public to call public attention to the matter, and to bring home to the philanthropists themselves the true measure of their moral responsibility. It is with this object in view that we now propose to recall a forgotten chapter in the history of philanthropic finance.

We trust that the lessons that have been so hardly learned in this country, as well as in England, the last few years, and in our country, especially during this year of unequaled financial disasters, may be effective in checking the tendency of good men and women to wander off from their chosen straight path of philanthropy into the bye and forbidden paths of speculation. In saying this, we do not refer, as a matter of course, to the "affiliated enterprises" of the National W. C. T. U. (Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, National Temperance Hospital, The Temple and the Lecture Bureau), from which no one connected with them has ever expected to make money, and which have weathered so many a storm and outlived so many an evil prophecy that we have reason to believe that as they were founded in the love of humanity they will continue to enjoy the blessing of Providence and the favor of good people everywhere.

THE CONCLUSION OF THE WHOLE MATTER.

We do not wish to be over-confident, above all we would not be dogmatic on subjects which are admittedly beyond the ken of mortal man, nevertheless we think we are safe in informing our readers that the question whose discussion began over a year ago, Shall the World's Fair be open Sunday? is finally settled. We dare assert with the positiveness of absolute certainty that it has been settled thus far and that with a few exceptions the gates of the Fair have up to the present time been open. The remarkable closing scene in this drama was entirely in keeping with all that has gone before and the whole affair forms in our judgment one of the most disgraceful events which have occurred in a long time. In the first place, men chosen as directors because of their unquestioned integrity, repudiated on a technicality, a mere legal quibble, an obligation which they were in all honor bound to keep. The whole legal proceedings have been such as to bring our laws and their administration into contempt, and the final scene not only aggravates this feature but also, by the conduct of the presiding judge, places us all in the position of the attorney who, when asked if he intended to express contempt of court replied, "No, your honor, I am doing my best to conceal my contempt of the court."

Judge Goggin was asked to decide the question whether the Stein injunction against the closing of the gates on Sunday should be dissolved. He consented to act only on condition that two other judges be associated with him. Judges Brentano and Dunne were accordingly invited to hear the case with him. They accepted. Both of these judges were personally in favor of an open Fair on Sunday, but their decision was that legally the directors had an undoubted right to close the gates. Judge Goggin, however, thought differently and arrogantly declared that as presiding judge he had the right and should exercise it of overruling the decision of the other two judges and should continue the case. The two judges thus gratuitously insulted withdrew from the case. Judge Brentano is reported to have said that he was invited into the case by a brother judge and invited out again by the same judge and that he accepted both invitations. Aside from his disrespectful treatment of two judges whom he had invited to hear the case with him, Judge Goggin's remarks are utterly beneath the dignity of such an official. His replies to the attorneys were insulting and his speech as a whole consisted principally of a tirade against the English common law upon which our own system of jurisprudence is founded and which is in force wherever there is no positive legislation upon a subject. No one can read the judge's remarks upon that system, his flings at "that common robber, Pope," and "that sanctimonious creature, Sir Matthew Hale" without feeling that the judge allowed his Irish prejudice against everything English to overrule every consideration of law or justice. One of the worst results of this trial is the distrust of our judiciary which we feel must be excited in the minds of all thoughtful people and yet good may result even from this if it shall lead to the abolition of the pernicious system of the election of judges. Some evils may be incident to the appointment of these officials but they cannot possibly be so great as those attending their election. At present the judge is elected as a partisan with very little if any regard to his fitness for the position. Who would be willing to travel if the engineer were elected by popular vote? We know well enough that in nine cases out of ten his qualifications would be those of the tricky politician and would have no connection with those of a competent engineer. The president or the governor who makes an appointment, if he is a conscientious man, feels the responsibility of his action, and will try to appoint the most competent man. If he is not conscientious, he will, at least, have this restraint which a thousand impersonal voters have not, the knowledge that people in general and especially his friends of the opposite party will have no difficulty in locating the responsibility of the appointment. But even more than the officers have fallen into disrepute. People very generally feel that the law itself is a most uncertain thing, that one can never be sure that any obligation, however carefully guarded, may not be abrogated and that no mortal man can determine how a court may interpret the most seemingly clear statement of law.

As to the question itself, Sunday closers do not need to feel that they have been defeated. The gates may remain open but so large a share of the exhibits are covered that we have practically a closed Fair. For this and other reasons, as the refusal of the railroads to run the expected Sunday excursions, Jackson Park is an ideal place for one who wishes solitude on the Sabbath, and the Fair is run every Sunday at great financial loss. The directors who were ready by fair means or foul to open the Fair on Sunday have learned by bitter experience that in so doing they arrayed themselves in direct hostility to an "imperious public opinion" which has proved itself, in this particular, at least, to be overwhelmingly Christian. We believe that they and all this nation have learned a lesson they will not soon forget. We veniture to predict that when another enterprise of this kind is undertaken, Sunday closing will be a foregone conclusion.

A VANISHING IDEA.

The latest revelation of "man's illimitable mind" anent woman and her "sphere" comes to us in an article by no less a personage than the poet, Coventry Patmore. He discourses on this wise: "To maintain that man and woman are equals in intelligent action is just as absurd as it would be to maintain that the hand that throws a ball and the wall that casts it back are equal. The woman has an exquisite perception and power of admiring all the man can be or do. She is the 'glory' of his prowess and nobility in war, statesmanship, arts, invention, and manners; and she is able to fulfill this, her necessary and delightful function, just because she is herself nothing in battle, policy, poetry, discovery or original intellectual or moral force of any kind.

"Most of the failures in marriage come of the man's not having manhood enough to assert the prerogatives which it is the woman's more or less secret delight to acknowledge. She knows her place, but does not know how to keep it unless he knows it also; and many an otherwise amiable woman grows restless and irritable under the insupportable doubt as to whether she has got her master. In order to put the question to the test, she does things she knows he is bound to resist or resent, in the hope of being put down with a high hand, and perhaps a bad word or two—since even the mildest corporal chastisement has gone out with the heroic days of such lovers as Siegfried and Kriemhild.

"Friendship and love differ mainly in this—that, whereas the felicity of friendship consists in a mutual interchange of benefits, intellectual and otherwise, that of love is in giving on one part and receiving on the other, with a reciprocal perception of how sweet it is to the endower to endow and the receiver to receive. This relation involves, as ancient philosophers and theologians have observed, a certain opulence on the one side and a corresponding destitution on the other—a destitution which, however, is the greatest opulence in the eyes of the former as being the necessary condition of his proper delight, which is to endow. The myth of King Cophetua and the Beggar-Maid is representative of the most perfect nuptial relationship."

It is interesting to trace the history of this idea of mastership. At first it was the strong tribe that took the weaker tribe in custody, from motives of pure generosity, of course, as its natural protector, indeed, its only defence from absolute destruction. Next it was the mighty empire that annexed smaller states from similar considerations of helpfulness and shelter.

Next came the feudal system under which the lord of the castle was "master" of his clan, while hind and henchman and retainer rejoiced to do his bidding that they might claim his powerful aid.

Still later, under the régime of owner and slave it was claimed that the very color of a man's skin determined whether he was to rule or be ruled, and the declaration passed into a proverb that "the slaves did not desire freedom,—they knew when they were well off."

To-day the mastership of kings over "subjects" has virtually ceased, and that of the landlord over tenant and capitalist over laborer hastens to be gone, while the mastership of man over woman (which reaches its climax in the rule of husband over wife), is slowly dying out, as bats flee before dawn. In each instance we have cited the same reason for mastership is given, because the subject class loves to be subject, the slave knows that he is not adapted to freedom, the woman hugs her chains, the wife desires to own the headship of her husband.

But times have changed. The delights of dominance are giving way to the duty of development. Darwin set the race on a new track. Each individual is now bidden to come to his (and her) utmost, in the interest of all. Each man is before all things else, a son of God and of humanity; each woman, a daughter of humanity and God. The subjection by man of his nearest and dearest friend, his equal mate and complementary comrade is an idea that, in the growing light of development, individuality and justice, has become no less hateful to women who think than it is to man who loves.

We can forgive Coventry Patmore for he belongs to a bygone age, but surely his "Angel in the House" would be to modern women but a skeleton in the closet after this amazing valedictory utterance. We are glad to notice that no journalist has echoed his failing voice, but all the younger literary men, so far as heard from, have taken up the cudgel in our behalf.

THE Chicago Woman's Educational Union has an attractive booth in the Manufactures Building of the World's Fair, the central object of interest being an autograph petition for the reading of the Bible in the public schools. Already many thousands of names are signed to it and white-ribboners, particularly, are requested to call and attach their signatures. Miss Mary Allen West was the first president of this society and in a public lecture three years ago, she truly said: "The school is the institution of the state, created by enactments in the fundamental law of the state, supported by state funds for the sake of furnishing to the state its life-blood, good citizens. This is the mission of public schools. For no other reason have they a right to be. The acknowledgment of God is the first requisite in training for citizenship. That government which by its laws forbids this acknowledgment in its public schools cuts from under its feet the very foundation upon which its own authority rests." This union makes the very simple request that only certain selections from the Old Testament teaching the existence of the Deity, be read. These need not in any way conflict with the religious views of either Catholic or Jew. We doubt if one teacher out of ten would not replace the Bible in the public schools if he had the power, because every earnest teacher desires to teach morality to his pupils and the foundation of all morality, the only infallible rule of faith and practice, is the Bible. Stop at the Bible Union booth and register your name to this important petition.

Our white-ribboner, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, writes as follows to a friend: "Two lines I came across once seemed to me to contain the whole philosophy of rest:

"'Careless and confident and single-hearted,
He trusted in God, and turned himself to sleep.'"

Lady Henry Somerset has organized a white-ribbon publishing company in connection with the national temperance society of which she is president, in England. She will bring out as her first book, "Nineteen Beautiful Years," the first book written by Miss Willard, with an introduction by John Greenleaf Whittier. It was through reading this little volume that the two temperance leaders, who are now so closely associated in Christian work, became acquainted.

A lady, who is the wife of a rector in England, asked permission to speak on the temperance question in the church, but the authorities replied that they would be very glad to have her do so, but the place was consecrated!!!

This incident, told by Miss Soonderbai Powar, who has returned to Poona, India, to assist in Pundita Ramabai's school, speaks strongly for the religious influence of the institution: "A few weeks ago, Ramabai wanted a quiet day with the girls to learn the Bible, so she called them all to her and told them she was going to give a grand picnic; but she said she was going to have a spiritual festival as well, and if any one wished to join that they could remain at home. Next day all the girls got ready and all but twenty-five started for the picnic! We had meetings all day at home, and nineteen girls prayed, seventeen testifying that they believed in Jesus and knew their sins were forgiven."

A true tobacco story comes from the World's Fair. A fond mother left her beautiful baby for two hours at the crêche in the Children's Building. Upon returning she found the baby very sick and the faithful nurses trying in vain to relieve its distress. It was in an alarming comatose state, and the poor mother was inclined to blame the nurses for administering too powerful an antidote. A physician was summoned who located the disturbance in the stomach and was about to give an emetic when nature volunteered and the baby vomited a nauseous cigar stump! It was then recalled that during luncheon in one of the large restaurants, the child was placed upon the floor for a few minutes and doubtless found and swallowed the filthy poison. The physician affirmed that if relief had not speedily come the child would have died of narcotic poisoning. What a rebuke to the men who persist in carelessly throwing so poisonous and disgusting a commodity on the floor of an eating room!

This extract from a letter of one of our leaders in Colorado shows what a National W. C. T. U. convention can do for all good causes:

"What the convention was to us, living in the Rocky Mountains, I cannot tell you. It came and went just as planets must pass each other and we caught the inspiration, the glow, the strong, white purpose of it. The community cannot get over the astonishment of it yet—it was such a surprise to the men and women of Denver. I think the foul wrong to which we stand antagonistic, and all the wrongs against which our declaration is set, realize that they are not in immediate danger of annihilation, but their future is uncertain. Even the liquor traffic does not like to be constantly watched. And then the influence of that great Convention upon the suffrage cause in this state, upon which we have entered, has been decidedly marked. Our legislature in the winter enacted a law submitting the question to popular vote the coming autumn and we are planning for the campaign. It also made easier our work electing Mrs. Hanna a member of the school board a few weeks ago, for Miss Willard and all the other grand women taught the people that it was high time for us to come into our kingdom. You see by this that you helped the whole state along in countless ways even while you popularized the W. C. T. U., which until then was not so popular as it should have been. In fact, after the great Conclave of the Knights Templar and of the Charity convention preceding it, the truth remains that the National W. C. T. U. is even quoted by church and political authorities as the Convention 'par excellence' and the model for all future gatherings to which Denver aspires."

ON DUTY.

Canadian News.

WHITE-RIBBON DAY AT THE CANADIAN CHAUTAUQUA.

August 10 was a W. C. T. U. day at Grimsby Park, sometimes called the Canadian Chautauqua. The ladies of the Grimsby local union entered with spirit into the idea and made the platform of the temple beautiful with flowers and ferns for the occasion. The Ontario Provincial union took charge of the morning function, which, under the bright and capable superintendency of the Dominion president, Mrs. C. T. Williams, of Montreal, took the form of a school of methods, followed by a parliamentary drill. No one who has not taken part, or at least been present, on such an occasion can have any idea how amusing and instructive it may be made under good leadership.

Excellent papers by Mrs. Carson and Miss Ella Cosford, of London, Ont., on the respective duties of corresponding and recording secretaries provoked a lively discussion, as also did the next subject introduced,—the relative merits of literature and public meetings as helps in W. C. T. U. work.

In the afternoon a bright and humorous lecture was given by the Rev. Ward Pickard, of Buffalo, N. Y., on "The Beast and Our Boys." Mr. Pickard used a large colored cartoon, representing the liquor traffic as a roaring lion, with one foot on the open Bible and the other on three or four boys who were prostrate on the ground. At one side a man and woman, representing public sentiment, were endeavoring to fire at the lion, who, however, was protected by a shield labeled "Law," which was held before his face by some one invisible. The contrast between the support which might be, and which is, extended by governments to help in the fight against that foe which slays its victims as surely, if more slowly, than cholera, was earnestly alluded to, and a few stirring words of encouragement to further effort wound up an interesting lecture. At its close the ladies held a conference on the best methods of dealing with the tobacco problem, and the work for the plebiscite in Ontario.

The platform meeting in the evening consisted of a lecture by Miss Lilian M. Phelps, and short addresses by Mrs. Williams, the Rev. Mr. Pickard and Dr. Morris. As it is against the rules of the park to take up a collection, it was announced that any who wished to make a free-will offering could bring it to the platform. A stream of people set in in that direction and seventy dollars was the result. Little children trotted up evidently much pleased to hand in their five cent pieces.

At intervals during the day, the two Whyte brothers kindly assisted by giving some of their well-known songs.

It was stated that all of the first edition of Mrs. Youmans' book, "Campaign Echoes," is sold, and a second edition is being prepared. It may not be amiss to remind the public that (apart from its own value) the sale of this book is for the benefit of one who is in distressed circumstances through ill-health and other causes, and who has labored long and faithfully for the temperance cause.

NOTES.

The official announcement of the eleventh annual convention of the Maritime Women's Christian Temperance Union has been made. It will be held in Truro, Nova Scotia, from September 15 to 19, inclusive.

The plebiscite campaign for prohibition in Ontario is drawing near, and already some braves are on the warpath. It is recommended that plans of organization be as simple as possible, utilizing those temperance societies in existence now, rather than that new ones be formed. It does not follow, even should the vote be decided in our favor, that a prohibitory law will be passed, but a large majority could not be altogether disregarded by the government.

Toronto is much excited at present over the question of running the street railway on Sundays. The city charter with the company only covers six days of the week, and keen indignation is felt at the means employed by the company to render this clause void. The citizens' vote, proposed to be taken on August 26, looks impartial on the face of it, but many reasons are advanced to show that it is not so. So many of the more thoughtful class are out of town at present that it is claimed a fairer expression of opinion would be obtained if the day for voting should be changed to January 1. Also, the railway company propose bearing the expense of the present vote. This should certainly be done by the city to insure impartiality and prevent undue influence being used. Meetings for organization take place daily. The churches, Salvation Army, W. C. T. U., Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and other societies are doing what they can to postpone the question, or if it must be faced now, to defeat the railway company. MARGARET G. URE,

THE Young Woman's Branch of the Canadian W. C. T. U. under the leadership of Dominion superintendent, Mrs. Sarah E. Allen (president, London, Ontario Y), is making good progress. Five provinces have superintendents: Ontario, Quebec, the Maritime Provinces, Manitoba and British Columbia, ranking in the order named in numbers and good works. Five thousand children have been led to sign the triple pledge by the Hamilton Y which also conducts sewing schools and newsboys' clubs. A Young Woman's Christian Association, with a paid secretary, is in charge of the London Y. This union issues dainty and attractive annual reports of its work which include the departments of kitchen-garden, scientific and juvenile temperance, evangelistic, delicacy and fruit mission, the pledge, tobacco and narcotics, news from the field and the press, besides its Y. W. C. A. of 200 working girls. This union owns a "Summer Home" which is self-sustaining; it has also a fine library of 300 volumes, a handsome piano and kitchen-garden outfit. It published a daily paper during the "Western Fair," called London Fair News, and has given a course of cooking lectures for which Mrs. Emma Ewing was engaged, netting $420 above expenses.

ARKANSAS.

A CHEERING MESSAGE FROM THE NEW PRESIDENT.

"What has become of the Arkansas W. C. T. U.?" I seem to hear THE UNION SIGNAL readers inquire. "Can it be those women have gone into 'summer quarters,' and are spending these days of glorious opportunity idly swinging in their hammocks, while their comrades in other states are keeping step so grandly with the onward march of the great white-ribbon host?"

No; our women have not gone into "summer quarters." Indeed, they know nothing of either summer or winter quarters, but like the early Methodists, they are "at it," fighting the rum fiend, and so engaged are they that they noted not how the days were slipping by, and that THE UNION SIGNAL had not been informed for months of their "goings on."

The reason of this seeming neglect is this: Mrs. Ervie Ethridge, our state reporter, is under the shadow of her first great grief. An angel came into her home one day and carried away to the skies baby George Demorest, and the poor mother-heart is so filled with grief and her eyes so blinded with tears, she has not been able to take up her pen since to chronicle our work. Another reporter was appointed, but she, soon after, unexpectedly left the state. Now, however, we are so fortunate as to secure the services of Mrs. H. P. Edmonson, of Little Rock, and you will be informed regularly of our progress hereafter.

If this news is not too stale, I want to refer to our annual meeting held in Little Rock last spring. Miss Frances E. Griffin, our silver-tongued orator of the South, was with us the entire time, and incited us to renewed action by her words of eloquence. Mrs. T. A. Dunlap who served lovingly and faithfully as state president for two years without salary, asked to be released, as her family needed her care. Mrs. F. L. Sutton, corresponding secretary, was also obliged to retire from the work for a while because of failing health. The convention elected in their stead: President, Mrs. Sara K. Hart; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary E. Taylor, both of Little Rock. The other officers are Mrs. Julia A. Clark, Beebe, recording secretary, and Miss A. G. Farr, treasurer, Little Rock.

A resolution expressive of loyalty to our National W. C. T. U., our chieftain, Miss Frances E. Willard, and the builder of our Temperance Temple, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, was adopted with a rising vote, and much enthusiasm, each member pledging herself to give material aid as well as sympathy and prayers.

Realizing as never before the need of money to carry on the work God has committed to our hands, our women have determined to raise two thousand dollars this year if possible, and have set themselves to work to interest the public in the methods of the W. C. T. U., believing when they are known and understood the money will be forthcoming, and God is blessing their efforts. Already one local union has raised two hundred dollars, and expects to increase it to four hundred by the end of the year, April 1, 1894. Please listen for good news from Arkansas.

SARA K. HART,
President, Little Rock.

NORTH CAROLINA.

STATE CONVENTION.

The North Carolina state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Waynesville the latter part of July, and proved an interesting and profitable occasion.

Addresses of welcome were given by Mr. Howell in behalf of the town, by the Baptist minister in behalf of the churches, by Mrs. Braner in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Waynesville. There could not be a doubt in the mind of any one in attendance of our cordial welcome. The response was given by Mrs. Sue V. Tomlinson.

The address of the state president, Mrs. Woody, was conceded to be the best ever given by her, and was listened to with close attention as she reviewed the situation in North Carolina, exposing the injurious revenue act, passed by our recent legislature, as it provides for the liquor traffic, and urging our women to stand courageously, unflinchingly, for the protection of the home, stating if these laws are permitted to stand as they now are North Carolina will become one of the greatest liquor states in the Union.

Gratifying reports were received from different departments of work; especial advancement was noticed in the use of unfermented wine at the sacrament, scientific temperance instruction, and Sunday-school work.

The Y evening was decidedly successful. Tney have done much in their lines of work during the past year, under the leadership of their consecrated president, Miss White. We believe much more will be done in the future. It was decided to put an organizer in the field who will devote her entire time to the work during the coming year.

Mrs. Harley R. Walter reported for the Southern assembly for North Carolina. How I wish every southern W. C. T. U. woman could have heard her appeal for our completion of the building begun for the school of methods at Waynesville. A more beautiful location could not be selected and the citizens of Waynesville are ready to join heartily in the work whenever we are ready to complete it, which we trust all the Southern states will decide in their conventions as we did in ours, should not be long.

The noontide hour of prayer was sacredly observed. We do know that the dear Lord was with us, in that He has owned and blessed our work.

After a four days' session we all returned to our homes more determined than ever before that whatever the difficulties in the way, in the strength of our Lord we would overcome them. MRS. S. V. TOMLINSON,

State Reporter, Greensboro.

DOINGS AND PREPARATIONS.

Our fiscal year closes August 31, and superintendents of departments, local, county, district and state, have gathered up reports of work accomplished to present to our annual meeting. This will be held at Oskaloosa, October 3, 4 and 5. We know that a rich feast will be prepared for this ingathering, but the bill of fare has not yet been published. We have learned, however, that our intrepid, young, round-the-world missionary, Miss Jessie Ackermann, will speak on the evening of October 5, and that there will be a gold medal contest on another evening. Our state president has been prevented by illness from carrying out all her carefully prepared plans.

Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, the beloved evangelist, is in the midst of the battle in this state, and the dear Lord helps her wonderfully, the way opening in a surprising manner wherever she goes. She has recently organized unions in Pella, Mitchellville and other points. A union with seventeen members has been organized in Cresco.

Creston union has shown strong vitality by going to two places near and forming unions. If every union would follow this excellent way the National society would soon have a membership of a million.

The annual convention of Fayette county was held at Fayette, August 23 and 24. Although disappointed in not having the inspiring help of Mrs. Palmer, as was expected, the district president, Mrs. Clara P. White, was present, and lent a hand. The old officers were reëlected.

A resolution to use prayers and influence for the election to office of only such men as are pledged to stand for the retention and enforcement of our prohibitory law, was unanimously adopted. Miss Cecilia Probert, our state superintendent of school savings banks department, is soon to remove to Wyoming, and our state superintendent of L. T. L. work, Mrs. C. L. McCracken, has found a new home in North Carolina. While regretting our loss, we commend these devoted workers to the white-ribboners in the states mentioned.

Mrs. M. J. O. Whiting, of Belmond, state superintendent of medal contest work, reports 661 silver medals in Iowa, 54 gold and one grand gold medal.

The resignation of President Aylesworth, of Drake University of Des Moines, of the nomination for governor was given and received with sorrowful regret, but owing to the death of Chancellor Carpenter, and the serious illness of the dean of the Bible college he felt in honor bound to give his best strength to the university in her affliction. He is a pure patriot and will do all in his power for our suffering cause.

A cyclone of righteous wrath is sweeping over Iowa on account of the so-called "prohibition" resolution adopted at the Republican state convention. Boldly proclaiming that prohibition is no test of republicanism the traitorous party leaders have daringly forced upon the people the unconstitutional policy of local option. Hundreds of indignant Republicans are declaring that this work of lawless conspirators is worse than that wrought by Benedict Arnold, and that they will vote for no man nominated on that platform.

It is suggested that a mass convention of citizens be called at Des Moines, September 7. Before this meets the eye of your readers this convention will doubtless have been held, and we shall soon know who stands for God and the commonwealth, and who for the old party Baals.

SUMMER MEETINGS.

July 28th was the day of the Ohio union on the program of the Lakeside Assembly. The day was very fine as was also the program that had been under great difficulties so carefully arranged by our beloved state president, who was able to preside although not fully recovered from her recent illness. The morning meeting was called to order by the president, announcing a violin solo by Miss Marion Harter, of Delaware; Mrs. E. J. Gray, of Medina, led the devotional exercises; Miss Florence Savage offered prayer. We were then favored with a quartette by the Orion club of the Ohio Wesleyan University.

Mrs. R. J. Trego, National evangelist, gave the address of the morning, her subject, "The Morals and Dangers of the Liquor Traffic." She was at her best and the repeated applause from the large audience showed their appreciation. Mrs. Trego uttered no uncertain sound in regard to the liquor question and at the close many strangers sought opportunity to thank her and congratulate her. Her address was closed with the noontide prayer.

The afternoon meeting opened with singing and prayer. Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman, of New York, who gave us one of the finest, if not the finest address of the season, was the speaker of the hour. She is a most interesting talker and her topic, "Sovereign and Subject," was presented so happily as to charm every one and win many friends for the cause. A parliamentary drill was then given by Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel, of Columbus. After this drill many requested other drills to be given which was done at our W. C. T. U. home.

Miss R. Anna Morris, state superintendent of physical culture for the Iowa union, who has been director of this department at Lakeside this summer, gave an interesting and practical talk on physical education.

One of the most interesting features of the program was the entertainment given by the Loyal Temperance Legion under the direction of their teachers, Misses Mattie and Anna Collom, of Berea, who have charge of the juvenile work at the W. C. T. U. Home.

The audiences on our day were the best that have been present in the auditorium this season and there were no other meetings where the people were so held.

LANCASTER CAMP-MEETING.

The morning of August 11 dawned clear and bright. A five o'clock prayer-meeting ushered in the day. At eight o'clock a conference meeting was held, at nine o'clock a pentecostal service, and at ten o'clock the president of the Ohio union, Mrs. Monroe, took charge of the services. On the platform were Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indianapolis, Gov. John P. St. John, Rev. G. P. Macklin, Prohibition candidate for governor of Ohio, the state recording secretary, Miss Pollock, the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Clevenger, and a large company of white-ribbon women. A fine audience of thinking people who had come for information crowded the auditorium. The choir sang several gospel hymns, the Moonlight quartette, of Roseville, sang two or three stirring, appropriate songs, which prepared the hearts of the hearers for the message to follow. Rev. Macklin offered a powerful prayer, and Mrs. Monroe in the choicest words, happily introduced the speaker of the morning, Gov. John P. St. John, the hero of so many battles for freedom.

For an hour and a half the audience listened to one of the clearest and most forcible appeals for a party of reform. As always, his logic was most convincing. The present financial depression was clearly explained, especially the condition of the farmers. An eloquent plea was made for the ballot for woman, and that all would do their duty toward hastening the triumph of Prohibition. The faces of the audience were a study. Deep interest was written on almost every one, and satisfaction that perplexing questions were answered so plainly. The hold upon his hearers never relaxed. The people were lifted to a high point of enthusiasm. The appreciation of friends was intense, enemies were very angry, but the address was the sole topic of discussion all over the grounds, and it developed everywhere that a great many votes were made and sentiment in favor of the Prohibition party created.

At two o'clock the audience once more assembled. Scarcely a vacant seat could be found at the opening hour. A quartette of young ladies and gentlemen sang three beautiful selections from the Y song book, the Moonlight quartette sang a selection, and Rev. Gallic, of Zanesville, offered an excellent Prohibition prayer. The president then introduced Mrs. Nichols, the speaker of the afternoon, who dwelt principally on the social phases of the reform. Her address was a very able one, stating the truth boldly and with burning eloquence. She commanded the interest and admiration of her hearers. Though she withheld no part of the remedy that seemed to her necessary, she gave no offense. Her audience was greatly delighted. Even the conservative element so stirred by the speech of the morning hastened to congratulate Mrs. Nichols and express their appreciation.

The result of the day's effort for the cause can scarcely be estimated. Much good was done and the truth was spread abroad, and we believe that God will make even the wrath of men to praise Him. A gentleman on the grounds, who had every opportunity of mingling with the people, has written to our state president since, "You are to be very earnestly congratulated on the glorious outcome of your arrangements."

THE W. C. T. U. HOME.

The W. C. T. U. Home and Chapel given to the state union by the white-ribbon women of the state, and especially by those of northern Ohio, was opened June 27. It is located at the beautiful summer resort, Lakeside, a locatio nnoted for its health, spiritual atmosphere, and its closed gates on Sabbath. This Home is in every sense a home. Flowers bloom in the yard, vines climb upon the porch, all is clean and neat within. Here W. C. T. U. women and other guests have experienced days of rest and quiet, have attended the summer schools, lectures and concerts of the Association, and felt an uplift that will help them in the work of the coming year. A school of methods has been conducted in our own chapel. Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, though here under the auspices of the Lakeside Association, gave us delightful talks, full of information, in an ethical course for women.

Our state superintendents, Mrs. Sarah M. Perkins, on infirmary work, and Mrs. Dora Webb on social purity, reached all hearts and sent them home determined to do more to lift up all men and women to a purer life. Mrs. R. J. Trego, of evangelistic work, gave us helpful talks on how to tell the lost of Christ, that can never be forgotten by her hearers. Mrs. Shrader pleaded for the school ballot for woman; Mrs. Irons, of the mercy department, that we be merciful to all God's creatures; Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel ended the school by a series of helpful parliamentary drills. The Loyal Temperance Legion, under direction of Misses Mattie and Anna Collom, held a meeting every day and their work was made more impressive by the beautiful blackboard lessons drawn by Miss Julia Savage. Mrs. E. J. Gray, superintendent of literature, made her presence felt among us as she stood daily at her post with literature on all the important lines of W. C. T. U. work.

OTHER NEWS.

A franchise prize contest was held recently at the Stark county W. C. T. U. convention in Alliance. Each local union of the county was invited to send one competitor, but only five responded. Each contestant gave in a five minute speech the most convincing arguments that occurred to her in favor of woman's suffrage. The first prize awarded was Mrs. Geo. Spangler's book, "Domestic Economy," the second, Miss Willard's "Women in the Pulpit," the third and fourth the Ohio Messenger for a year, the fifth the Woman's Column. This contest was a fine success, and the idea is worthy of adoption for other conventions.

The sixth district convention held at Savannah was an excellent one; the interest in W. C. T. U. work hopeful for future results. Pastors of the various churches were constant in attendance and helpful. Two dollars each was allowed the superintendents for postage, and five dollars was given to the Lakeside Home fund.

The annual convention of the fifteenth district held at Defiance was a notable one, continuing three evenings and parts of three days. Such an array of talent in the way of speakers is seldom enjoyed by any community at one time. The state president, Mrs. Monroe, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Rollo Kirk Bryan, the chalk talker, and Miss Frances H. Ensign, state superintendent of our Y Branch, formed this galaxy. The day meetings were of a high order; papers, practical and ably written, the reports from the county unions, showed a large amount of the best work done. Their efficient district president for six years past, to whose efforts the district is indebted for much of its advance in the great work, felt that the time had come to surrender her office, and Miss Hughes, of West Unity, was elected to take up the thread where Mrs. Mason had seen best to lay it down.

The Ripley union is thoroughly organized for work in the departments of franchise, scientific instruction, literature, flower mission and juvenile work, having an efficient superintendent for each. Twelve members of the union and L. T. L. made the annual visit to the county jail, infirmary and Children's Home, and, in connection with other unions of the county, held services in each of these places, giving each inmate a bouquet with text card. These visits are a blessing to all who engage in them. One young lady present said she "would not have missed the experience of that day for twenty-five dollars." At Christmas each year a box of fruit, books and toys is sent to the Children's Home by the L. T. L., whose members are especially devoted to this work. Many of these presents are given by the children themselves. Last May this Legion celebrated its tenth anniversary, and on that occasion the enthusiastic superintendent presented each member a potted chrysanthemum, with instruction how to cultivate it. In the fall a flower sale will be held, and the proceeds used in the prosecution of their work. In the literature department two spelling bees were held, the prizes in one being a year's subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and Woman's Column, and in the other a five dollar gold piece. This union is now making a handsome soldiers' memorial quilt, the names placed on the quilt bringing into the treasury ten cents each. After being exhibited at the county fair it will be sold for the benefit of the union. Suffrage meetings are held often, are exceedingly interesting, and some of the papers read would honor any convention.

Mrs. R. J. Trego, Delaware, Ohio, National evangelist, has been laboring in Tennessee during August. She spoke at a district convention held at Harriman, August 2, delighting her audience.

The Medina county W. C. T. U. held its annual meeting in the Congregational church in Medina on Wednesday, August 9, 1893. The roll-call of officers and superintendents of departments found all in their places except two, one of those having been called up higher during the year. The annual address of the president, Mrs. E. J. Gray, was full of suggestions in regard to the work and called for earnest consecration to God and the cause and intelligent advance all along the line.

Excellent papers were read on scientific temperance instruction by Mrs. Bissell, social purity by Mrs. Hawley, and "We Desire the Ballot, Why?" by Rev. Cornelia Andrews. Also an encouraging talk on "The Outlook," by Miss Jane Weeden, who is spending some time in the county.

The treasurer reported all expenses paid and eighteen dollars in the treasury, also about fifteen dollars raised toward our second one hundred for the Temple. The devotional hour from eleven to twelve o'clock was most helpful and earnest. The superintendent of Sabbath observance reported about five thousand three hundred pages of literature distributed and eleven sermons preached. A collection of four dollars was taken for the Temple.

MARYLAND.

HELPFUL GATHERINGS.

Annual conventions of county unions are the order of the day. Two have been held and reported and others are expected shortly.

The Kent County convention, held at Chestertown, was as usual a marked success. The various reports of the work were mainly gratifying and encouraging, and the organization of two Y's was among the valuable doings noted. Recitations and songs by the large and enthusiastic Loyal Temperance Legion of Kennedyville, addresses of welcome from representatives of "the Christians of the county," from the press and from the unions of the town, responses, readings, music, stirring addresses and two minute speeches from the local presidents, were among the interesting features of the excellent program which was enjoyed by a large and responsive audience.

The Anne Arundel county convention was held at Annapolis, the capital of the state. This county union is earnestly engaged in preparations for the annual state meeting which will be held in Annapolis, September 26-28. Much interest in this event has been aroused by the members of the union, under the leadership of that veteran in the work, Miss Gantt, of Annapolis, and splendid results are anticipated. Through the courtesy of the governor of the state, one of the large halls of the capitol will be used for the night meetings. Mrs. Mary Lathrap and Miss Parrish, National organizer of work among young women, are expected to help with the meetings.

The annual convention of the Prohibition party of Maryland was held at the Prohibition camp, at Glyndon, August 7. The Prohibition Advocate says of this, among other things, that "Veteran politicians assert that it was the largest convention ever held in Maryland by any political party," and that "not only in numbers, but in other important respects, it gave evidence of progress."

The resolutions adopted in addition to those directly connected with the liquor traffic opposed the appropriation of public money for sectarian schools; demanded the restriction of child-labor; advocated a direct popular vote for United States senators; favored laws for compulsory voting, the education of the American Indian and urged the justice of equal suffrage. "Mental and moral qualifications for the exercise of an intelligent ballot," are altruistic ideas, well worthy the widest possible diffusion.

Ex-Gov. John P. St. John, Col. Geo. W. Bain, Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, of Ohio, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, of Boston, Rev. John Hector, Mr. A. W. Hawks, and Rev. H. H. Emmett, the Indian orator, were among the noted National speakers and workers who attended the meetings at this camp. Interest in the wrong perpetrated in denying to the Indians the right of citizenship, was aroused by the speeches and representations of the last named speaker and culminated in the resolution given above. The children's services and exercises were in charge of Mrs. Rice, well and popularly known at Glyndon through her labors of other years with the little folk there.

W. C. T. U. Day at the camp was of much interest, though a rainy morning, one of the few of the summer, interfered with the attendance. Three of the state officers, the state organizer, and a number of others represented the state union. Mrs. Rice, of Boston, gave a bright and helpful talk; Rev. Hiram Vrooman, of Baltimore, gave an address on prohibition, and Rev. Alfred Smith, of Delaware, who is always and everywhere, on occasion, the earnest advocate of this cause, spoke briefly and effectively.

The Bible reading by Mrs. Green, superintendent of the purity department, was on the 121st Psalm: "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills, from whence cometh my help," and the subject of systematic giving was clearly and forcibly treated by Miss Small, recording secretary of the state union.

The address at night was by Miss Henrietta G. Moore, who advocated prohibition and the franchise for woman, earnestly and ably. The meetings at this camp are growing in interest and importance yearly, and are great forces in the battle for prohibition.

Temperance Day at Carsin's Run camp, Harford county, was well observed by the members of the county union, almost every local union being represented there. A Demorest medal contest in this county must also be noted. Fine singing and music characterized the occasion, and the whole affair was admirably managed by the county president, Mrs. H. T. Woodrow.

The president of Worcester county, Mrs. Strickland, reports excellent work there, parlor meetings, public meetings, work of Loyal Temperance Legions, work among young women and among colored people. The county convention in September will be entertained by the union of Girdletree, a little union that has gradually grown strong enough and "brave enough to assume this responsibility, M. A. L.

WORK AMONG RAILWAY EMPLOYES.

To State and Territorial Superintendents:

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—Your reports this month due at department headquarters, Seward, Neb., should cover the following points:

1. Roads upon which work has been done.
2. Literature distributed.
3. Number of temperance bonds signed; number white buttons distributed and worn.
4. Shop meetings held, number, time and place, conversions of railway men.
5. Railroad temperance associations organized and by whom.
6. Way cars, engines and depots equipped with literature, racks, Bibles and Gospel hymns.
7. Sermons preached to railway men.
8. Special services for railway men at Chautauquas, camp-meetings, fairs, conventions, conferences, or other representative gatherings.
9. Note favorable attitude of corporations to work by official endorsement or otherwise.
10. Report work among firemen, policemen and commercial travelers.
11. Restaurants and reading rooms operated for benefit of railway men or firemen.
12. Flower mission service rendered in sickness and at funerals of railway employés, firemen, police and commercial travelers.

The National evangelist, Miss Jennie Smith, made a tour to the Pacific Coast during last winter. Superintendents of states visited will please report faithfully, and in detail her work.

"Plan of Work Number Two," will be prepared and published before National Convention, and methods in "Work Among Railway Employés," will be discussed at meetings of workers held during National Convention. We earnestly desire the presence at Chicago, during Convention, of every state or territorial superintendent, also of district, county and local superintendents, and all railway workers. States not having adopted the department will please send some interested delegate as a representative to these meetings. Yours for increased zeal and knowledge in railway work. CAROLINE M. WOODWARD, Supt.

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

Dear Superintendents—state, district, county and local:

Will you please send me a brief, concise report of all work done in this department since our last National Convention? It was my purpose to publish early in the year some "helps" to steady, intelligent progressive work, but the sickness, first of our son, followed during his convalescence by the still more serious illness of his father, required all my time and thought and effort.

This, too, must be my apology for many unanswered letters. Hundreds of replies have been written in the sick room, some of them in the small hours of the night but many are still labeled—"unanswered." A few of general interest I reply to here.

Has a member the right to offer a resolution and then herself move that it be adopted?

Certainly. She may not only move its adoption, but at the same time can also move the "previous question" though this should rarely be done.

Should a series of resolutions be adopted one by one and then adopted as a whole?

Never. The motion should be to consider or discuss seriatim, and then adopt as a whole. This gives opportunity to amend—or table—until the resolutions are just to the mind of the assembly; then by a single vote adopt, after which adopt the preamble (if there is a preamble).

If a member moves to amend a resolution and the amendment is "tabled" must the resolution go to the table also?

It certainly must.

Can a member who has the floor be interrupted by another member to move the "previous question"?

She cannot.

Is it correct to say: "Are there any objections to the minutes?"

It is not. If the minutes are correct no one has the right to object to them. The chair should say: "Are there any corrections to the minutes?" If so they are made and the chair then says: "The minutes as corrected stand approved." No—no vote is necessary. A. S. BENJAMIN, Natl. Supt.

TEMPERANCE LESSON RETAINED.

ACTION OF THE FIRST INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION AT ST. LOUIS.

On Friday, September 1, Rev. Dr. Warren Randolph, secretary of the international lesson committee presented an elaborate written report and defence of its work. His reference to the temperance lesson was as follows:

"We have found it specially difficult to give satisfaction in the special lessons which you have required us to provide. Our own plan, as frequently announced, was to select lessons on particular topics only as such lessons are found in our regular progression through the word. But three years ago the convention directed us to depart from this course and select a temperance lesson for each quarter. What we have always maintained others have felt compelled to join us in saying. One of the most competent of biblical scholars, who is a warm friend of the temperance cause as well, has lately said: 'No lesson committee can find in the Bible four lessons a year, for five or seven years, that squarely teach total abstinence. The attempt at anything of this sort tends to bring total abstinence into disrepute by its misdirected endeavor. On the contrary, a good teacher can find the duty of total abstinence implied in a dozen lessons every year, coming in the ordinary course of study of the Bible according to the international system.' Compelled by your action at Pittsburg, yet limited by the poverty of Scriptures on the subject we have been forced to select some lessons, which, for Sunday-school use, our judgment did not approve, and other lessons we have had to repeat so often that they have become monotonous."

After the report had been read opportunity was given for discussion. The interest was almost wholly concentrated on the question whether the lesson system itself should be maintained, although it very soon appeared that only a few in the convention, only one of the speakers, were not the friends of the present plan. Even the speaker who criticised the plan, Dr. C. R. Blackall, the Baptist lesson writer, announced that all he would ask the convention to do was to cancel all the instructions by which the committee was restricted in its work. Mr. M. C. Hazard, one of the Congregational lesson writers, offered a resolution that all instructions be canceled. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts began the defence of the temperance lessons, the Pittsburg action which would have been canceled by adopting the Blackall-Hazard proposal, by offering this amendment, "Except that the number of temperance lessons shall not be reduced." He argued against any action that would even seem to be a lowering of the temperance flag by the Sabbath schools and churches, since the church of God should be the chief reform organization.

On Saturday morning when the convention heard the report of the committee on resolutions, composed of one delegate of prominence from each state, it was found they had compromised between the Blackall-Hazard proposal to cancel all restrictions and the amendment of Mr. Crafts to continue the instructions as to temperance lessons so far, at least, as to maintain the present number of four per year.

The resolution of the committee on temperance lessons was as follows: "Resolved, That this convention releases the International Lessons Committee from the instruction hitherto given, and only suggest that it shall furnish the best course of lessons possible for the remainder of its existence, trusting to the wise judgment of the committee to give a full quota of temperance and missionary lessons."

All other resolutions were passed without debate, and then the above resolution was taken up for discussion which Mr. Crafts introduced by presenting an amendment to make the above resolution read as follows: "Resolved, That this convention releases the International Lesson Committee from the instructions hitherto given, except that the unanimous action of the Pittsburg convention on temperance lessons, based on the unanimous recommendation of the executive committee, shall remain in force." The earnest and prolonged debates in state and international conventions by which the W. C. T. U. had secured unanimous action on the subject was recalled, and it was urged that to cancel such action so soon, especially to do so in the absences of the representatives of the W. C. T. U. would be every way unfortunate for the lessons and for the cause of temperance and the good name of the Christian church. The amendment was supported by J. J. McLaren, Q. C. of Toronto, in a thrilling appeal, by Rev. Dr. Milner, of the Kansas Temperance Alliance, by Rev. Dr. John Potts and Mr. B. F. Jacobs, of the lesson committee. It was opposed by Mr. William Randolph, brother of Rev. Dr. Warren Randolph, and Rev. Dr. Brown. The amendment was then carried with only three dissenting votes.

As the lesson committee was to hold a meeting on the day following the convention and as the secretary had intimated difficulty in selecting temperance lessons, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Mr. J. J. McLaren and the undersigned submitted to their consideration the following hastily selected list of thirty-six lessons, twelve more than are called for in the present six years' course at four per year;

Exod. 21 : 28-36; Lev. 10 : 1-11; Num. 6: 1-6; Deut. 26 : 1-9; 32: 29-36; Judg. 16: 25-30; 1 Sam. 25 : 25-38; 1 Kings 16: 8-10; 20: 12-21; Esther 1 : 7-19; 3 : 8-15; Psa. 10 : 94; Prov. 24: 1-13; 23: 20-25, 29-35; Isa. 5: 11-25; 10: 1-3; 28: 1-7, 13-22; Jer. 35; Dan. 1: 8 20; 5: 1-8, 17 : 25-30; Joel 1 : 1-7; Hab. 2 : 8-15; Matt. 24 : 37-51; John 8 : 31-47; Acts 19 : 23-34; 24 : 22-27; Rom. 14 : 11-23; 1 Cor. 6: 9-12, 19, 20; 8: 8-13; 9: 25-27; 10 : 1-13; Gal. 5: 1, 13-24; Eph. 5 : 8-18; Titus 1 : 1-9; 2 : 1-7; 2 Pet. 1 : 19.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, That we recognize the liquor traffic as a foe to civil and religious progress, the destroyer of homes, the open enemy of the Sunday-school purpose to save children, the most problematical curse of our land, and call for its utter overthrow."

The great Sunday-school picnic on Saturday was attended by thousands of big folks, as well as little folks. The building of the tabernacle of witness by the children was a grand sight; they marched through our streets on foot and in carriages, forming an immense parade. The Messiah Mission Zouaves and Vivandieres were the most handsomely uniformed children on the grounds, and created a furore as they marched down the broad avenue. The boys were dressed in bright blue jackets, glazed boots, red Zouave pants and red fez, with a blue tassel.

The girls, called vivandieres, were uniformed similarly to the boys, with the substitution of the skirt with trousers. These were the poor little mission children, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram D. Moone, who have given twenty-five years to temperance work for the children. Across the wagon carrying these little ones and their teachers were the words, Unitarian Mission.

The W. C. T. U. gave a reception to the Sunday-school delegates Tuesday afternoon, which was very successful in every way. The parlor, beautifully decorated and draped with our banners and the American flag, was thronged, and lemonade was served. We fully realize there is no dividing line between the Sunday-school and the W. C. T. U. MRS. E. B. INGALLS.

W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION.

Will every reader of this article, who is interested in coffee houses, please send to me at once the address and facts concerning any coffee house in the United States of which he or she may know? I refer to those which have been instituted wholly or in part by the W. C. T. U. Travelers are asking for a directory and it is very desirable to prepare such a help to be placed in every coffee house in the land. If the necessary information is sent to me very soon we may hope to issue such a directory before the October Convention.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

COUNTY literature superintendents in Pennsylvania are urgently requested by the state superintendent, Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, Second St., Sharon, Pa., to secure reports of work done by local unions in that department, and send them to her immediately.

MRS. CAROLINE M. WOODWARD, superintendent of the railroad department, will bring an excursion of western delegates to Chicago for the World's and National Conventions. The excursion will leave Nebraska points, October 13, reaching Chicago on the morning of the 14th, in time to settle well on Saturday and have the Sabbath for church attendance and rest. Mrs. Woodward was in the city last week securing accommodations for her party, which is expected to number at least thirty-five. Delegates desiring to join this excursion should write Mrs. Woodward at Seward, Neb.

MAJOR AND MRS. E. T. SCOTT'S return from the Pacific coast has been signaled by a course of seven lectures at Amherstburg, Ontario. Each service drew a large audience, so much so that the aisles were occupied. Many accessions to the W. C. T. U. were made, the work broadened and a deeper interest created. Mrs. D. A. Maxwell, the president, is a host in herself, whether as president, leader of singing, at the organ, or as general manager. Prof. Maxwell, Ph. D., one of Canada's best educators, presided at several meetings, and the mayor, J. A. Auld, was also the chairman one evening. Mr. Auld is editor of the Echo. He gave a splendid report of the work in its columns. T. B. White, Esq., president of the Catholic Men's Temperance Association, presided at the farewell meeting.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

Patrons and lecturers are invited to visit the headquarters of the Woman's Lecture Bureau in the organization room of the Woman's Building at Jackson Park. We will be pleased to see you and talk over the work for the winter for which we are now arranging. It is necessary to urge upon all the necessity of coöperation in this line of the work and we trust that each union will do all that is possible to place the lecture work upon the footing it deserves.

Owing to the difficulty of unions in assuming the responsibility of raising money to compensate speakers for their lectures, Mrs. Marion B. Baxter has decided to devote a portion of her time each year to a special plan of work, particulars of which may be obtained by applying to the Bureau.

We wish to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available for woman's clubs in the East until February, and in the West for the remainder of the winter.

The following lecturers are under the management of the Bureau and will be available during the fall and winter.

Frances E. Willard.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw,* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall, and New Jersey in November.

Mary T. Lathrap, Illinois and Missouri after the 25th of September.

Helen M. Gougar,* Pennsylvania and Western New York after the 22d of September.

Miss Anna Gordon, the World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of temperance work among children.

Carrie Lane Chapman, Ohio in November.

Clara C. Hoffman, Wisconsin in September and November.

Lillie Devereux Blake, calls in the vicinity of New York City.

Elizabeth U. Yates, Maryland first of October and Michigan the second week of October.

Mary Sparkes Wheeler, calls in Pennsylvania.

Rev. Eugenia St. John.

Rev. C. H. St. John.

Lou J. Beauchamp, calls for lecture courses.

Mary Seymour Howell, September and October in New York.

Messrs. Wolfenbarger and Huckins.

Eva M. Shontz, elocutionist, Michigan from October 25 to November 25.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens.*

M. Naomi Trimmer.* Vocalist.

Josephine R. Nichols, Maine in September and Canada in December.

Prof. Rena Michaels Atkinson, calls for Indiana and Illinois.

Caroline B. Buell, Illinois and adjoining states.

Fanny Zampini Salazar, for woman's clubs during the fall and winter.

Marion B. Baxter, Pennsylvania and Maryland in September and New Jersey in October.

BUREAU NOTES.

To the Unions in Illinois:

Can you not arrange a meeting for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap for the last week in September or the first of October? She will be available in your state at that time. Arrangements for dates may be made with the Woman's Lecture Bureau by sending applications at once.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman will be available in Wisconsin during the last week of September. Arrangements for dates must be made immediately.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau wishes to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available in this country during the fall and winter. She will lecture on the arts, habits and literature of her own country. Any organization wishing to make arrangements for dates can obtain information through the Bureau.

Mrs. Marion B. Baxter has decided to give a portion of her time each year to the working out of a special plan which will enable any organization to have her for a number of meetings. The Woman's Lecture Bureau will be pleased to write particulars of this plan on application.

For terms and dates, please address,

INDIANA W. C. T. U. HADLEY INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL COOK BOOK is the somewhat lengthy name of a book containing a goodly number of reliable recipes. It is a Benefit Cook Book, published, and sold for the benefit of the Hadley Industrial School for Girls which the state W. C. T. U. of Indiana is engaged in establishing. Needless to say it is temperance throughout and sensible.

LITTLE SAINT HILARY AND OTHER STORIES, by Barbara Yechton. These stories, written for and about "small boys" are as pure and strong as any one could wish them to be for the keen appetites and sharp criticisms of the young readers. The writer who can judiciously combine a story and a moral so that they are truly wedded and cannot part company as they reach the reader's mind, has a wide and noble field of labor. Barbara Yechton can most surely do this.

NOTED NEGRO WOMEN, THEIR TRIUMPHS AND ACTIVITIES, by M. A. Majors, M. D. This book covers a subject hitherto neglected, save in the form of fragmentary sketches. The author is a graduate of the Meharry Medical College, and was the first to advocate the organization of the Lone Star Medical Association, the first negro medical association ever organized in America. In the book in question brief sketches are given of over three hundred colored women, their occupations, covering a wide and varied field of ably discharged activities.

EL NUEVO MUNDO. A poem by Louis James Block. Dedicated to the women of America. Through four cantos of some length the author follows rather ponderously the course of Thought, or the Spirit of Progress from the Creation, when "God's thought rose clear before him, and he said:

'Lo! I will fashion for mine eyes to see
The mighty miracle of Liberty,'"

down to the present time, marking the great turning points of history which lead up to Freedom's truest home—the America of to-day. There are many beautiful sentiments in the poem, but one feels a certain weightiness in its perusal and an occasional lack of clearness in expression.

The September REVIEW OF REVIEWS brings to its large circle of readers the varied and valuable table of contents for which its fame is so well established. Three vigorous articles are presented, each of which is built upon a personality and the output from that personality. First is a character sketch of Lady Henry Somerset, by William T. Stead, whose pen knows so well how to give, in not too many strokes, clear and character-revealing outlines, and who has done justice to the rare life story of our English leader. At the close of his sketch Mr. Stead leaves the line of narrative and dips into prophecy, asking what of the future, and looking to Lady Henry Somerset to lead her forces on, even in the steps of Lord Shaftesbury. "The Miracle of the Maid of Orleans" is a stirring review by one who sat during its writing alone in the great old church of Jargean, near the window of Jeanne d'Arc: "She clasps her sword in her left hand, while in her right she holds the standard which she loved forty times more than her sword." Sweeping widely aside, in its character, from the foregoing articles, is that by Carl Snyder, entitled "Engineer Ferris and His Wheel." The reader looks in the pictured face of the young engineer, studies the relation of the great wheel to the forward march of mechanical science, and realizes that in George Washington Gale Ferris is no less a benefactor and a leader in the progress of the world than in those who are classed under the more thrilling names of "reformer" and "heroine," and that the gigantic toy which marks an "era of Brobdignagian brains," is but the initial of still more marked victories over the inertia of matter.

SEPTEMBER ADVANCE GUARD.

The Advance Guard for September has echoes from the Temperance Congresses to which every Senior of the L. T. L. should listen.

Reports from the Pennsylvania and Wisconsin L. T. L. conventions are of especial interest, followed by two messages from The Cottage, Reigate, Surrey, Eng. Miss Gordon's letter is accompanied by one from Miss Willard, and the L. T. L's will want to read every word from their "affectionate comrade and elder (ly) sister."

This number contains the third chapter of that delightful story, "The Tables Turned," a report from the World's Youth's Congress, held at the Art Institute, July 17.

Miss Guernsey's instructive articles upon the White City have a feature this month unique and valuable. A few weeks ago a postal card was addressed to many prominent men and women asking a reply to this question: "What are the most important lessons to be learned by the youth of America from the World's Columbian Exposition?" In the September Advance Guard you will find some of the many prompt and kindly replies which have been received by the editor.

Remember, The Advance Guard costs but 50 cents per annum. Can you not send us the name of one new subscriber?

SEPTEMBER 28.

Our L. T. L. workers will please not forget that one of the plans adopted by the National for the Harvest Home celebration is the giving of a card to each child as a souvenir of the day. Of these we make two special offers. Note.

1. Cards with an autograph message from Miss Willard. Per 10, 15 cents.

2. Souvenir cards that have been prepared expressly for this Columbian year. They are of a delicate blue—the L. T. L. color—and contain a beautifully embossed picture of the Willard Fountain, together with the pledge in gold letters. We think them the most beautiful pledge cards now in stock, and we place them on the market for the first time for the Harvest Home card. But the price is even lower than that of other pledge cards.

Per 100, 60 cents. Send a two-cent stamp for sample.

BOOKS.

Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer.

By REV. S. B. SHAW. Cloth, $1.

This book is neither doctrinal nor denominational, yet distinctly Christian. Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer.

The Well-Dressed Woman.

By HELEN GILBERT ECOB. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.

This is a work which appeals to every intelligent mother. It is valuable in its exposition both in text and illustrations, of the artistic ideal and rules of dress, and is full of the best of advice for school-girls, young women at college and young mothers. Miss Willard and the whole corps of earnest workers in the W. C. T. U. are very hearty in their indorsement of this book, and it should be in the hands of every sensible woman.

Bright-Eyes

Or, Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon. Arranged by ALICE M. GUERNSEY. Price, 50 cents.

This pretty little quarto is ingeniously devised, so as to suggest to children, by means of outline pictures, the work of searching the Scriptures in order to find the passages which the vignettes chime in with. It will be of service to many a mother, or older sister, or brother, on a Sunday afternoon, in the endeavor to teach or interest the little ones.—Central Christian Advocate.

A Young Woman Journalist.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD. Cloth, $1.

A book designed by the author to stimulate other young women to "be something," to make the most of their opportunities.

A Woman's Evangel.

By EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH. Price cloth, $1.25

"This book will interest and benefit many readers. It has some literary merit, but its special feature is the fact that it is written to explain and advocate the various kinds of effort in behalf of total abstinence which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is making. The many members of, or sympathizers with, that influential organization, will read it with approval, and so will others."—The Congregationalist.

Columbus, and What He Found.

By MRS. MARY H. HULL. Price $1.

This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. There is already a large demand for this unique child's history among parents and teachers who desire to answer authentically all questions and controversies which come to the ears of children. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home-nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm.

Child's Christ Tales.

By ANDREA HOFER. Price $1.

In teaching little folks the Christ example by story, no book will help so much as this. It is written from the kindergarten standpoint, and full of deep, sweet truths simply told.

Around the World With Jesus.

By CHARLES A. CRITTENTON. This charming booklet describes the Holy Land and contains a sketch of Florence Crittenton Missions by Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press of World's W. C. T. U. Price, 35 cents.

As is well known by white-ribboners, Mr. Crittenton, the famous evangelist, already largely supports eight Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls, and at the Denver convention pledged $5,000 to the W. C. T. U. for founding five more missions under their auspices. These are now being established, and every cent realized from the sale of "AROUND THE WORLD WITH JESUS" will be given to the Florence Crittenton Missions, and every one whose heart throbs for our erring girls may aid the grand work for their redemption by circulating this little souvenir. It contains beautiful pictures of Mr. Crittenton, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and Mother Prindle, Matron of New York Mission, all white-ribboners, and it cannot fail to interest all.

A Literary Guide for Home and School,

By MARY ALICE CALLER, teacher of English classics in Alabama Conference Female College. Price $1.

The Literary Guide is the outgrowth of a need wisely considered, and in the hands of parents, teachers and friends must prove a valuable aid in the guidance of literary tastes.

FROM THE QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON FOR SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

Prepared by Mrs. Helen G. Rice.

Lesson Text for the primary class, "We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

"What is his infirmity? How could the other boys help him to bear it?"

"How ought you to treat these creatures that God has made? . . . . They are weak and we are strong, so we ought to protect them."

"What other poison will harm ourselves and others? Why do men sell these poisons? . . . . Are they helping others?"

"You have all heard about the people in heathen lands. Some wicked people make money by sending poison drinks to these people. Is that right?"

WE'RE COMING.

[To be learned by the children.]

"O men, lead on! We're coming, too,
But for a guide must look to you.
Then make the path so pure and straight
That boys can't meet a drunkard's fate."

Simply—Soak, Boil and Rinse Then it's easy enough—and safe enough, too. Millions of women are washing in this way. Are you? Soak your clothes in Pearline and water (over night is best); boil them in Pearline and water twenty minutes; rinse them—and they will be clean.

When you think what you save by doing away with the rubbing, the saving of health, the saving of clothes, the saving of hard work, time and money—then isn't it time to think about washing with Pearline?

Persons visited the World's Fair for the week ending September 9. Have you? Perhaps you calculated to earlier in the season, but, for various reasons, have about given up coming. Change your mind again and come. Do not fail to see this marvelous exhibition. Chauncey M. Depew stated that every person ought to visit the Fair, if they had to go in debt for it. When you come, arrange to stop at the World's Fair Temperance Encampment, 57th Street and Indiana Avenue, accessible to the Fair, accommodations first-class, and very much more desirable than some of the temporary hotels. THE UNION SIGNAL has investigated this Encampment, and can safely recommend it to its friends who visit the Fair. Their terms are very reasonable. Large parties entertained at low rates.

How to Buy an Organ or Piano.

An organ or piano should form a part of every home, and there is no good reason why any home, no matter how humble, should be without one. This happy state of affairs is made possible by the efforts of the well-known Piano and Organ makers, Cornish & Co., of Washington, N. J. Twenty-seven years ago this firm branched out from the usual method of selling through dealers, and began to sell their instruments direct from the factory to the family at the actual wholesale price; thus saving the purchaser the enormous profit and commission demanded by dealers and agents. Another great feature of their business is selling on credit to those who are not prepared to pay all cash down. They arrange terms to suit the convenience of the purchaser, and impose none of the annoying conditions usually connected with this method of buying. Business enterprise and straightforward methods are always appreciated, and Cornish & Co. have been rewarded by a constantly increasing patronage, until to-day they do the largest direct organ and piano business in the world; in fact, it is said that there is a Cornish instrument in actual use in every county in the United States. They guarantee all their instruments for 10 years, and offer to ship either an organ or piano on 60 days' trial without cash payment, and pay freight both ways if it is not entirely satisfactory. Any one contemplating the purchase of either an organ or piano will do well to write to this firm for their handsome catalogue, which they send without charge.

Happiness at a cost of One Cent a Day.

Books are the greatest sources of happiness within universal reach. The AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY now makes the world's best literature all accessible to any one, in city or country, at a rate of cost of one cent a day for a dollar book; vast numbers of books cost only one-half to one-fourth of that price; all best cloth-bound large type editions, no paper covers or small type.

Loaned Any Book you want to read, loaned to you, anywhere in the United States, for long or short time, as you desire. You can order through your county Postmaster, Newsdealer, Bookseller, neighborhood Book Club, or direct from us. You can call for any book you want.

Sold Books Sold at the lowest prices ever known. Any book supplied. A catalogue of 160 pages of choice books sent on receipt of a 2-cent stamp. A book worth reading is worth owning, if you can afford it, but many cannot afford it; and it is worth something to be able to read a book enough to see if it is worth owning, before you buy it.

Ben Hur for only 8 cents. "The Prince of India," for only 14 cents, (a $2.50 book), "David Balfour," 8 cents, "Lorna Doone," 3 cents; all of Scott's, Eliot's, Dickens's, Thackeray's and other standard authors, each 3 cents, if you can read them in seven days; these are examples; all excellent editions, no paper covered trash in small type. All the new books, a special feature.

Little Women for 8 cts., "Tom Brown at Rugby," 3 cents, "Little Lord Fontleroy," 11 cents, are other examples. It is positively cruelty to children not to give them the benefit of these and other measureless sources of happiness and good, when they can be had at such trifling cost.

In fact books cost nothing, if they increase the income of the reader more than their cost. There is not a person alive, who labors with hand or brain, who earns even $2.00 a week, who will not, by the stimulus of good books be helped more than one cent a day in his earning power. Think of that, and test it, parents, employers and workers. It is your own fault if you don't get the best books, instead of trash.

Magazines, all of them, for one cent to three cents a day, or half that after the first month, or a quarter of it after two months. It is worth more than that just to look at the pictures. Think of it, all of them, for less than the cost of one heretofore: Harper, Scribner, Century, St. Nicholas, Forum, North American, Godey, and the rest, and all the books you can read, besides, cost a patron of the AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY less than the subscription price of one magazine.

Hungry Readers and students generally need no longer go without books, all of them they want, and the best books, since now the best cost less than half what trash has cost heretofore.

Clergymen with small incomes. "starving" heretofore for want of access to the world's current literature, now have it all open to them—and not for personal use only, but as a power for good; organize Reading Clubs among your people and guide them in their selections—infinite power here.

Teachers may also receive and confer inestimable pleasure and benefit upon themselves and pupils, by the means now offered. Increase your earning power by reading the best books.

Send 2 cents for 160-page Catalogue and full particulars. Please mention this paper when you write or call.

THE per cent of nutrition in lean beef is 26.83, in rice, 86.09, and in wheat, 82.54.

A NEW version for the old saying, "God helps him who helps himself," is, "God helps him who helps another."

NINE states have anti-cigarette bills pending, while in Washington and Arkansas the bills have passed both houses.

TWO generations of children have grown up in Maine and have never seen the open saloon defacing the streets of their towns.

WHEN all people are willing to become as good as they think their neighbors ought to be, the millennium will come.—Ram's Horn.

THE Grand Opera House in Paris has a large annual deficit, although it pays no rent. The loss on every Sunday performance is $1,500.

PHYSICIANS affirm that the cocaine habit, when once firmly settled, is one of the very worst to overcome, for it creates a desire for all kinds of stimulants.

THE late Earl of Shaftesbury predicted that the opium traffic would bring upon England a most terrible judgment some day, if it was not corrected.

THAT the hospitality of our country is greatly abused is shown by the figures in our last census. Almost fifty-seven per cent of the white persons in prisons and penitentiaries are foreign born.

HIGH license works so well (?) in Chicago that there is an increase of one thousand saloons over the number last year, thus giving one saloon to every 157 of its inhabitants, men, women and children.

THE eightieth birthday of Madame Collett, the well-known advocate of emancipation of women in Norway, was celebrated by a great festival in Christiania, which was attended by Ibsen and other writers.

MR. W. S. CAINE has a simple explanation of the scene in the House of Commons, which recently excited so much interest. "It was all the liquor," he says. "If it had been at five o'clock, there would have been no row at all. But a pint of wine makes a deal of noise."

A TEMPERANCE society, which is fruitful of much good, was organized less than a year ago at Miss Krikorian's Evangelistic Medical Mission, Aintab, Turkey, and now numbers one hundred and sixty-nine members, who meet twice a week for Biblereadings, prayer and singing.

IN the past ten or fifteen years there has been a prodigious increase in the number of girls and young women employed in retail houses, owing to their greater honesty largely. When petty thefts are discovered in any establishment they are usually chargeable to the men clerks.

THE liquor dealers of London are holding crowded meetings to protest against the Local Control Bill, asserting that the retail business of the metropolis will be ruined if the bill becomes a law. It would seem that such an opinion from such a source ought to spur the temperance workers on to greater efforts.

A MOTION for a permanent treaty of arbitration with the United States was made in Parliament in March. Sir John Lubbock, who seconded it, realizes the gravity of the situation, for he states that Europe now devotes £200,000,000 on her naval and military armaments. It is no wonder that there is a growth of socialist and anarchist feeling.

PHILLIPS BROOKS believed in "fanatics" and "cranks" as these words of his testify: "If ever a cause justified fanaticism the temperance cause does. To me there is nothing more disgusting or more disheartening to the cause of humanity than the selfish, easeloving, luxurious man, induiging in dissipation and denouncing temperance fanaticism."

THE state of Kentucky takes the unenviable lead in the production of tobacco in the United States, as it produces the largest quantity—nearly one half—although the perique of Louisiana excels in the average value per pound. The average yield per acre in the whole country is seven hundred and five pounds, although in some places it reaches one thousand four hundred and two pounds per acre.

Would you like an Organ?

or Piano? If you really would, write to us and you will find that getting one is far easier than you thought. Our method is to sell right "across lots," from the factory to the family. No big profit for the dealer. No commission for the music teacher. No tip for the friend who introduces you, etc. All these are useless—and expensive to the buyer. The mail will bring us your order, and the railroad deliver it. What more do you want? Our instruments are world-famous, and up to date. Our output is the largest known. Our offer is an absolutely free trial. Our terms can be made to suit anybody. Our Piano and Organ book will tell you more, and save you money. Free for the asking. Write to-day for latest issue.

IMMORAL PYRAMID

AN OBJECT LESSON.

The above illustration suggests three plain propositions, which cannot be controverted:

1st. The selling of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, is an immoral business.

2nd. Any law which legalizes the selling of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, is of necessity an mmoral law.

3rd. To vote for any party that upholds the legalization of the liquor drink traffic, either by tax or license, is an immoral act.

If the first proposition is correct, there can be no evading the other two. If the foundation, viz the tax and license votes, were withheld, then this whole system of legalized immorality would totter and fall. The liquor seller is not near as responsible for the perpetuation of this legalized, and immoral traffic, as is the tax and license voters; the saloon man is simply the agent to perform what the voter says he may do, by the payment of the price.

Dear Fellow Citizens, will you not hereafter withhold your ballot from all tax and license parties, and vote only for such political party as advocates the entire suppression of this immoral traffic, throughout the State and Nation.

The Prohibition Party is the only political party in the Nation committed to this great moral reform. Vote the Prohibition Ticket from top to bottom, and the powers of darkness will soon be shaken, and we as a people be free from this growing legalized immorality.

U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Read the announcement of DAILY UNION SIGNAL on page 14, cut out the coupon, fill out as directed and send the same with twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. Prompt attention to this will enable us to prepare the wrappers before the Convention and insure our subscribers the daily reception of this indispensable and accurate report of the two great meetings mentioned above.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The gubernatorial campaigns have opened in Ohio and Iowa.

The centena f the United States Capitol at Washington was celebrated Monday.

The Spanish caravels have been formally presented to the United States government.

Michigan, Ohio, Kansas, Texas and Florida have had their days at the World's Fair the past week.

Serious floods involving loss of life and destruction of property are reported from New Castile, Spain.

Women of the Christian Women's Board of Missions met in nineteenth annual convention at Chicago, Friday.

The twenty-fifth annual reunion of the Army of the Tennessee occurred at Jackson Park, Chicago, last week.

Northern Wisconsin has been fighting the fire fiend, which has caused incalculable damage and loss of life and property.

Two daring train robberies have taken place in Indiana and Michigan respectively, and the criminal perpetrators are still at large.

Another anti-monopoly victory is the final dissolution of the Standard Oil trust, a consolidation of nearly one hundred million dollars of capital.

The parliament of religions and denominational congresses are attracting large audiences to the Art Institute, Chicago. Many noted divines are in attendance.

Rio Janeiro has been bombarded by shells from the rebellious ships which fortunately have done but little damage. The bombardment has resulted in the capture of the city by the insurgents.

Armour Institute, the new, great Chicago technological school, Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, president, was opened for students, September 14, five hundred of the twelve hundred applicants being enrolled.

A circular against the House of Lords was issued in London last week by the National Liberal Federation. The circular prophesies the ultimate triumph of the Home Rule Bill and a new era of reform for Great Britain.

An agitation in favor of a home-rule measure in certain districts in Austria including Prague, has brought about a decree of the ministry suspending certain citizens' rights laws and trial by jury for a year and aroused considerable feeling among the people.

LOCAL unions are reminded that the first Sunday of October, which this year is the first day of the month, is the day of prayer for blessings on our work, and particularly for the National and World's Conventions, which meet in Chicago, October 16–23. Through friendly cooperations with the pastors, we are confident that this will be a day of great spiritual power to the church as well as to the temperance cause.

AMONG the many interesting foreigners who have called at the Temple recently is Mr. Johannes Chatschumian, from Armenia, who is attending the Religious Parliament. This gentleman is a total abstainer, and is much interested in the W. C. T. U. He says that the temperance cause will be prosecuted by the women of his country at no distant day, as women in Armenia are much freer socially than in other countries of Asia, and that as a class they never use liquors. The men use them sparingly and only the light wines.

A FEW necessary changes have been made in the program of World's W. C. T. U. convention. Lady Henry Somerset will preach the annual sermon October 22, in place of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, whose health is not sufficient to enable her to perform this responsible task. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt will respond to the address of welcome in place of Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, whose lecture engagements will not permit her to attend. Mrs. Alice J. Harris has accepted the charge of the music, and that of itself insures a successful convention. Sen Tsuda, the originator of the Japanese bronze bell made from relinquished tobacco pipes, will be present and it is hoped that our warm Japanese friend, Sho Nemoto, will also be in attendance. The two days' program of the World's convention alone will amply reward all who may come to Chicago, not to speak of the five days' session of the National, particulars of which we hope to give next week.

THAT "wrong is wrong" seems to be proven in the case of the five Chinamen of Los Angeles, who were taken to San Francisco for deportation by order of the district court and who have entered their appeal to the United States supreme court. The United States marshal, in whose custody they are, thus finds himself in the "horns of a dilemma." As they have committed no crime, he cannot legally imprison them; they cannot be sent back to China, on account of their appeal, but the appeal does not release them. The prisoners will bring suit against the marshal for false imprisonment. He can neither release nor hold them, for in the one case he would be held guilty of contempt by the northern circuit court, which refused them bail, and on the other hand he is liable for damages by the ruling of the southern district court, which declared them not criminals. It is a veritable Chinese puzzle, and one for which our government should hang its head in guilty shame.

Two weeks ago we gave a program for the observation of World's W. C. T. U. day, September 22. We thought at the time that the program was complete, but we must acknowledge that we omitted one indispensable item and that was the collection, or more appropriately, the thank-offering. The treasurer of the World's Union, Mrs. Williams, writes: "With one missionary in India whose salary is running behind and another under appointment to Japan, who is waiting for funds to meet her expenses, the officers of the World's W. C. T. U. are anxiously looking for help from the collections to be taken on September 22." We are glad that this omission was discovered in time, even at the last moment, for this lack of funds is paralyzing to our work. We want to remind our readers of the handsome sum, $3,724, realized on World's day two years ago, merely through collections, and earnestly urge every union to take a thankoffering and send to Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 26 Chomedy street, Montreal, Canada.

MISS ANNA GORDON returned home with Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, and is now at Rest Cottage aiding in the preparations for the World's and National Conventions and making arrangements for the formal presentation of Willard fountain to the city of Chicago. She reports Miss Willard's gain in health as very slow; the summer in Switzerland not having accomplished what was anticipated, she has returned to England. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell are rejoicing in the cablegram from London, stating the government committee appointed to inquire into the truth of their charges that an officially controlled system of vice existed in the military cantonments in India, fully bears out their allegations. Lord Roberts, commander-in-chief of the British army, who had indignantly denied their statements, has written a letter in which he offers an unreserved apology for his ignorance of the existing vice. These two ladies have performed a task for which they deserve to be canonized, did the protestant church have such a ceremony.

CAREFUL attention is called to the railroad and hotel rates for the October conventions to be found on page 13. It will be seen that the railroad rates are the same as offered to the World's Fair travelers and are sufficient to attract every hesitating visitor, being lower than our conventions have ever obtained before. The hotels give no special rates, but the ones quoted are not high for good hotels in a large city. In addition to those given in Miss Pugh's list, we would mention three on the South side, convenient to the Fair grounds. These are the Keene and the Boston and the Woman's Dormitory. The first two are under the same management, and are strictly temperance hotels. If enough white-ribboners apply, by letter or person five days before the convention, the proprietor will endeavor to turn the smaller hotel, containing two hundred rooms, into W. C. T. U. headquarters. Having personally examined these hotels, we recommend them to all delegates and visitors desiring a South Side location at a reasonable price with the understanding that they are nearly an hour's ride from the Art Palace where the convention is to be held. The Woman's Dormitory will sell stock to those applying in advance. Write directly to the proprietors; the Dormitory is situated at Ellis avenue and Fifty-second street, and the Keene and Boston at Ellis avenue and Fifty-fifth street.

ENERGETIC plans are being laid for aggressive gospel temperance work at the noon-day prayer-meetings in Willard Hall. Mr. Charles Sawyer, of Cooper Union, N. Y., a warm friend of the W. C. T. U., as all will testify who knew aught of the meetings held years ago in Farwell Hall, in which he took prominent part, is now holding a two weeks' campaign, and practical results are hoped and prayed for. The friends at Chicago headquarters are well aware that the white-ribbon hosts "around the world" are not forgetful of the noon-hour meetings in Willard Hall, and it is a strength and inspiration to know that the hands of the workers here are upheld by the availing prayers of widely scattered friends. It is requested that these two weeks may be remembered, and that as a result of these prayers the six hundred seats in the beautiful little prayer-room may be filled every day, many erring ones reclaimed to the ways of righteousness and the hearts of all reinforced for the mighty war that is "on." The noon meeting has been honored in the past week by two distinguished leaders—Rev. Harry Varley, of London, England, who is one of D. L. Moody's brilliant corp of workers who are so mightily moving the great audiences that gather to hear the gospel, and Charles N. Crittenton, the founder of the Florence Crittenton missions, which have been and are such a beacon light of hope to erring ones. The meetings are growing in numbers and interest, and during the past week several have joined the ranks of those who serve God.

HOW DO YOU KNOW?

BY REV. J. P. HUTCHINSON.

How do you know that she cannot hear,
That she cannot hear, as she lies so cold
And pale and fair, so far, so near,
The words of love that to her are told?
They who listen are ever still,
Each sweet and each tender word to gain;
Let these believe who can and who will
That we speak to the loving and loved in vain.

Who will say that she cannot see,
That she cannot see, as she calmly lies?
When once her spirit is fully free,
She need not look through the windowed eyes;
Closed are the lids in the sleep of night,
And yet what wondrous things we see,
That fill the soul with joy or fright,
With glimpses, sometimes, of what shall be.

Do not affirm that she cannot know,
That she cannot know, since she went away,
When her loved ones come, when her loved ones go,
What they may do or what they may say;
Better she knows than here she knew,
And here we know she read aright,
And clearer and wider far the view
Which spirits have in the land of light.

Do not say that her love was lost,
That her love was lost, as she crossed the sea,
And in the deeps of unconsciousness tossed,
We never again can united be:
Love is immortal, for God is love,
And love is the greatest thing we know,
And life is fuller in heaven above,
Than it ever could be on earth below.

THE SILENT WIRES.*

V.

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

An instant after Karl had gone Hattie Starkey stood bewildered, but a little smile crept into her eyes: "He will come back in a day or two. He always has, though we've never had quite such a spat as this." She went upstairs slowly, sore and angry, but confident of Karl's ultimate return, though she did go back to the office in the morning.

Winifred Hilton had gone to her bedroom and tried to shut out the sound of the lovers' voices, but the walls of her little flat were thin, and it was impossible to remain oblivious to the fact that a vigorous quarrel was in progress in the parlor. At last she heard Karl leave and Hattie ascend to her own room. Winifred listened to Karl's retreating footsteps down one flight and another, and her heart throbbed fast.

"He will go straight to some saloon," she whispered, "and if he gets to drinking now, he will ruin all of the Union's plans. Nothing will be too rash for him to advise or attempt. Oh! if I could speak to him, for his own sake and that of the cause!"

She ran to her bedroom window and leaned out. Karl Heiser was just passing beneath the window in the direction of the nearest saloon. A clock was striking midnight. Winifred pulled a lily from her basket and flung it out to him, then drawing back of the curtain watched the man as the snowy blossom fluttered to his feet. He gave a startled look upward. There was no one in sight, but he raised the lily from the pavement, knowing it had come in this moment of temptation as a "reminder" from the friendly hand and sympathetic heart of Winifred Hilton. He stood hesitating, with the lily in his hand. The flower conquered, and he turned from the flaunting lights of the saloon in the direction of his boarding place, which was on the same street, a few blocks away. Winifred watched him breathlessly as he crossed the street, in the full glare of the electric light, till he disappeared up the steps of his boarding house, and she knew for that night he was safe.

It was nearly a week before Winifred Hilton saw Karl Heiser again. Lulu was taken ill the next morning, and Winifred did not leave her bedside until she was convalescent. Karl did not come to the house, for Hattie had resumed work in the Great Consolidated office, hence knew nothing of Lulu's illness. He wondered somewhat at Miss Hilton's absence from the meetings, but his mind was occupied with other things.

The prospect for the strikers looked darker than ever; the company had developed an unexpected power of resistance; many of the men were asking to be reinstated in their positions, others were weakening, some were applying to the Union for aid; either the company or the brotherhood must yield before another week; the latter had played its trump card in the ordering out of the railroad operators; Karl had lost his hopefulness and had begun to apprehend failure after all.

His personal affairs, too, troubled him; he had not yet accustomed himself to his changed relations with Hattie Starkey. For several months he had regarded himself "as good as a married man"; he had been with Hattie every day, and had thought of her as one soon to be his wife. Now all was changed. He could not congratulate himself very heartily on escaping in time, for though he knew that Hattie Starkey would never make him transcendently happy as his wife, he missed the near and tender relationship of the past months; he could not forget her pretty ways, and merry, lovely face; and the sense of possession was still strong within him. He lashed himself into an unreasoning rage at the thought that another man might now win the girl, might kindle her rosiest blushes and kiss away the childish tears to which she was prone. He did not want her himself, at least, not as a life-long incumbrance, but, poor dog in the manger! was not willing she should be another's. It was only of late he had discovered that Hattie Starkey was not all to be desired in a wife, that he had been given a dim revelation of what a comrade-wife might do for a man, that he had come to believe that "a young man married was a young man marred." He had worn his chains lightly, and did not yet appreciate the glory of his freedom; but he had no regrets strong enough to carry him back to her. Rumors began to circulate in the Union of Miss Starkey's return to the office and of the consequent rupture of her engagement to Karl Heiser, but the man was non-committal.

One afternoon about a week after his final interview with Hattie he met Miss Hilton, who had escaped from Lulu's sick room long enough for a little walk. He was unfeignedly glad to see her and turning, walked by her side. They talked of Lulu's illness and of the probable outcome of the strike, till Karl asked, abruptly: "I suppose Hattie is still in the office?"

"Yes," Winifred admitted, reluctantly, "but you may be able to influence her yet, Mr. Heiser. I have not seen much of her, but I do not think she is happy without you. Why do you not try to win her back?"

"I have no wish to win her back," Karl replied, sternly. "A woman who would betray her lover when he needed all of his friends would never be true to her husband. Nor can I be sorry that the test came now. I have known for some time that Hattie Starkey was not a suitable wife for me, and though had she proved true, I would have married her and been faithful and kind, I cannot regret that our engagement was broken by her own act."

They had reached the corner nearest Winifred's home, and here Karl paused. He took her hand an instant as he added: "I shall not soon forget your thoughtful kindness, Miss Hilton, nor your words, 'A wife who is not a comrade is no wife.'"

The slow days dragged on until the eighteenth of August when the strike was terminated by the order from the master workman that the strikers were at liberty to return to work. Winifred Hilton and Karl Heiser met at a meeting of the Union on the evening of the eighteenth.

"Our strike has been a failure," lamented Karl.

"Not entirely a failure," protested the young woman cheerily. "We have, at least, done our share toward making history; we have shown the power of our organization; we have held out a whole month against a wealthy and powerful corporation. The strike has been a costly but useful experiment to capitalists and the public, as well as to the strikers. It has warned employers that the growing unrest and discontent of the workman under extortion and oppression will ultimately result in more practical and thorough organization, and, through these, in victory. It has called public attention to the evils of the present system and has roused an interest which cannot die, but which will lead to a more thorough understanding of economic problems; and while the strikers' lack of employment, though voluntary, has brought sickness and suffering, want and horrible temptations, yet all education is expensive, and I, for one, mean to utilize the knowledge gained in attaining further freedom. Our present failure may pave the way to future success."

Karl had listened to her speech in unusual silence. His measure of value was success. He had had little to say in private or public since it had become manifest that the strikers must yield. He answered Winifred now with a laugh. "I won't dispute your reasoning, Miss Hilton, but I, for one, will never strike again. The knowledge I have gained may be summed up in this—that a striker is like the Irishman hanging over a precipice who let go in order to get a better hold."

"But do you not believe," asked Winifred, "that every experience has its developing influence upon character? and have we not all gained a truer estimate of our own strength?"

"Yes, and of that of others," Karl assented, bitterly. "I do not regret the strike. Had it never been, I might soon be tied for life to a woman capable of betraying my dearest interests. Do you return to the company, Miss Hilton?"

"Yes," she answered, "and you?"

"I leave for Washington to-morrow," he replied. "I think I can get a position there. See here, Winifred," opening a note-book and showing her a lily pressed between the leaves, "I want to thank you and your lily for keeping me from making a fool of myself. If you hadn't 'reminded' me in your gentle way, I might have gone to drinking, but I looked at this every time I was tempted, and it kept me straight."

The tears sprang to her eyes as she answered: "I am so glad. I wish—Karl—you'd take the lily to Washington with you, and let it keep you 'straight' there."

"I will, Winifred," he replied with momentary earnestness.

INTEMPERANCE AND THE CHURCH.*

BY REV. JAMES M. CLEARY.

Every great and noble work in the history of human progress has suffered from the intemperate zeal of its friends and from the hypocrisy of its avowed advocates. But the temperance cause has suffered more from the apathy of timid friends than it has from either hypocrisy or fanaticism. It is a cause that in a special manner needs the support of honest, conservative and thoughtful men.

Intemperance is a crying sin of our land, and with marvelous ingenuity has kept pace in its onward march with our unrivaled prosperity and progress. Something over nine times as much intoxicating drink is consumed in the United States to-day as there was forty years ago, and we have only about three times as many people as we had then within our borders. No evil existing among us menaces so boldly the peace, prosperity, happiness and moral and religious welfare of our people. No other social evil disturbs the family relation and renders the domestic life of men, women and children so inhuman and hopeless, as the evil of excessive and habitual indulgence in strong drink. Society has but little to fear from the fanaticism of those who oppose intemperance and all that causes it, but there is good ground for apprehension when we remember the frenzied and fanatical hatred of certain classes against all kinds of temperance legislation and temperance work. The intemperate words of the total abstainers are harmless when compared with the fanatical hatred of the friends of the liquor traffic against total abstinence work and restrictive legislation.

During the past twenty-one years the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America has done noble and heroic work in the cause of sobriety and public decency. But with our ten millions of Catholics, this grand association should number instead of sixty thousand, six hundred thousand members. If our church councils are to be heeded, if the utterances of the sovereign pontiff are to be respected, if we will not turn a deaf ear to the repeated appeals of our best and wisest prelates, there must be a new awakening among our Catholic people against the withering curse of drink.

Our Catholic people expect too much from the church if they entertain the delusive notion that the church can save weak men from ruin while her own children, by their voices or their ballots, do not aid in diminishing or removing the occasions of sin. There is not much edifying consistency in applauding the decrees and admonitions of our church councils in theory, and in practical life withholding our support from the influences that make for the realization of what the church inculcates.

The church, by the united voice of our bishops assembled in the third plenary council of Baltimore, warns its members against the dangers of the drink habit and the temptations of the saloon. The same council warns our Catholic people against the business of saloon keeping as "an unbecoming way of making a living." A man cannot be a good Catholic, a loyal follower of the teachings of the church of this country, and be a good friend of the saloon. Much less can a Catholic be a saloon-keeper and a dutiful child of the church. We should at least have the courage to follow where our chief pastors lead, and our Catholic loyalty is not above suspicion if we are not as ready to condemn the drink evil as our bishops, who have been placed over us "to rule the church of God."

CATHOLICS AND PROHIBITION.

In dealing with the drink problem as it confronts us in our own country, it is not amiss to bear in mind that we are not to be controlled by the national customs of other lands. If in other lands much drinking of intoxicants does no injury to the people, that circumstance does not diminish intemperance here. If frequent and generous potations have contributed to the peace, prosperity, happiness and plenty of other nations, this circumstance is a poor consolation for us, who know that nine-tenths of our poverty and seven-tenths of our crime are traceable directly to the curse of excessive drinking. If the Temple of Bacchus is enshrined in the affections of the people of other countries, it is no gratification for us to be obliged to acknowledge the humiliating fact that in this, our country, "universal suffrage is a sham where rum rules our large cities."

A certain class of Catholics, imbued with erroneous ideas of Christian ethics, appears to assume that a man cannot be a good Catholic, free from the suspicion of heresy, and ally himself with the advocates of prohibition of the liquor traffic. It is not a part of my duty to advocate the cause of prohibitory legislation, and I make no plea on this occasion in behalf of prohibition. But to assert that a man cannot be a consistent Catholic and an earnest Prohibitionist is to misrepresent the claims of the Catholic faith on the loyalty of its adherents. It may or may not be good public policy to advocate prohibition of the liquor business. It may not be the best means of suppressing intemperance to prohibit the saloon, but it certainly is not contrary to Catholic teachings for an American citizen to cast his ballot and lift up his voice against the existence of such an "unbecoming business" anywhere in our midst. I think no honest man will assert that the Catholic who exerts his influence against what his church terms "a dangerous business" is not on the safer side for the public good than the man who votes and talks in favor of the "personal liberty" of endangering the public welfare by permitting the saloon power to rule over us. The saloon does not exist as a public necessity. Its prosperity is an evidence of the people's poverty and sin. It is the duty of good citizenship to remove temptation as far as we are able from the weak and the erring. We are not true to our duties as good Catholics if we, by our action or negligence, place pitfalls of sin in our fellow-men's pathway.

REMEDIES FOR INTEMPERANCE.

For the emancipation of the masses from the slavery of drink, we, Catholics, need only to apply the moral means at our disposal. The drink curse is intrenched in custom, hence we must follow it into society. At all social assemblages of Catholics let them deny themselves the indulgence in intoxicating liquors, and thus publicly proclaim their recognition of the principle of self-denial. At the reunions of friends and family connections, whether occasions of joy or of sorrow, let Catholics show their horror of drunkenness by denying themselves the use of strong drink. There is no gratification worthy of a Christian that cannot be enjoyed without the use of intoxicating liquors. As an act of reparation for what our religion has suffered from intemperance, let our Catholic people proscribe intoxicants at all their public gatherings. Let there be such an earnest and potent public sentiment among our Catholic people that no liquor saloon can crowd itself right up to the doors of our churches, and thus, by its foul presence, tempt weak and unwary men to wickedness under the very shadow of the cross. Let there be a sound, healthy, public conviction among our Catholic people that it is not much credit to them and will not advance their interests among right-thinking men to permit the saloon-keeper to be their representative, politically or socially. Our Catholic people should cast their ballots and exert their political privileges for the enforcement of just and wise laws against the abuses and dangers of the liquor business, and for the protection of the young and habitually intemperate.

SHIELDED BY FALSE THEORIES.

The drink curse shields itself behind false theories of science, and many have been deluded by the false notion that alcohol is beneficial to health. Thirty-six states of this union have by law made the teaching of true principles of temperance compulsory in our common schools. Too much importance cannot be attached to the practice of inculcating habits of total abstinence among children and our boys and girls during the dangerous and trying period of youth.

If our prelates, priests and people join hands together to work in harmony and strength for the realization of the admonitions of our plenary councils, the awful curse of intemperance can be almost entirely eradicated from among us. We must encourage, then, our total abstinence societies by every means at our command. We, priests, mindful of Pope Leo's words, must "shine as models of abstinence," and by exhortation and preaching avert the many calamities with which the vice threatens church and state.

[The following resolution was passed with great applause by the Catholic Congress: "We approve and most heartily commend the temperance and total abstinence societies already formed in many parishes, and we advise their multiplication and extension. We favor the enactment of appropriate legislation to restrict and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, and emphasizing the admonition of the last plenary council of Baltimore, we urge Catholics everywhere to get out and keep out of the saloon business."—EDS.]

ISOLATION OF FARM LIFE.*

BY E. V. SMALLEY.

In no civilized country have the cultivators of the soil adapted their home life so badly to the conditions of nature as have the people of our great northwestern prairies. The European farmer lives in a village, where considerable social enjoyment is possible. The women gossip at the village well, and visit frequently at one another's houses; the children find playmates close at hand; there is a school and church. The old men gather of summer evenings to smoke their pipes and talk of the crops; the young men pitch quoits and play ball on the village green. In a word, something takes place to break the monotony of daily life; there is a joyous side that lightens labor and privation. The dwellings, if small and meagerly furnished, have thick walls of brick or stone, that keep out the summer's heat and the winter's chill.

A poor settler on a homestead claim must live upon it for five years to perfect his title and get his patent, so that if there were not the universal American custom of isolated farm life to stand in the way, no farm villages would be possible in the first occupancy of a new region in the West without a change in our land laws. If the country were so thickly settled that every quarter section of land (one hundred and sixty acres) had a family upon it, each family would be half a mile from any neighbor, supposing the houses to stand in the center of the farms, and in any case the average distance between them could not be any less. But many settlers own three hundred and twenty acres, and a few have a square mile of land, six hundred and forty acres. Then there are school sections, belonging to the state, and not occupied at all, and everywhere vacant tracts, owned by Eastern speculators, or by mortgage companies, to which former settlers have abandoned their claims.

If there be any region in the world where the natural gregarious instinct of mankind should assert itself, that region is our northwestern prairies, where a short, hot summer is followed by a long, cold winter, and where there is little in the aspect of nature to furnish food for thought. On every hand the treeless plain stretches away to the horizon line. In summer it is checkered with grain fields or carpeted with grass and flowers, and it is inspiring in its color and vastness; but one mile of it is almost exactly like another, save where some water-course nurtures a fringe of willows and cottonwoods. When the snow covers the ground the prospect is bleak and dispiriting. No brooks babble under icy armor. There is no bird life after the wild geese and ducks have passed on their way south. The silence of death rests on the vast landscape, save when it is swept by cruel winds that search out every chink of the buildings and drive through each unguarded aperture the dry, powdery snow. In such a region you would expect the dwellings to be of substantial construction, but they are not. The new settler is too poor to build of brick or stone. Were it not for the invention of tarred building paper, the flimsy walls of his wood shanty would not keep out the wind and snow. Rarely are there any trees; there is a saying that you must first get the Indian out of the soil before a tree will grow at all; which means that some savage quality must be taken from the ground by cultivation.

In this cramped abode, from the windows of which there is nothing more cheerful in sight than the distant houses of other settlers, just as ugly and lonely, and stacks of straw and unthreshed grain, the farmer's family must live. In the summer there is a school for the children, one, two or three miles away; but in winter the distances across the snow-covered plains are too great for them to travel in severe weather; the school-house is closed, and each family must live mainly to itself. Life shut up in the little wooden farm-houses cannot well be very cheerful. No singing-schools, spelling-schools, debating clubs, or church gatherings enliven the monotony of the long winter evenings. Neighborly calls are infrequent, because of the long distances which separate the farm-houses, and because, too, of the lack of homogeneity of the people. They have no common past to talk about. They were strangers to one another when they arrived in this new land, and their work and ways have not thrown them much together. Often the strangeness is intensified by differences of national origin. There are Swedes, Norwegians, Germans, French Canadians, and perhaps even Finns and Icelanders among the settlers, and the Americans come from many different states. It is hard to establish any social bond in such a mixed population, yet one and all need social intercourse, as the thing most essential to pleasant living, after food, fuel, shelter and clothing.

An alarming amount of insanity occurs in the new prairie states among farmers and their wives. In proportion to their numbers, the Scandinavian settlers furnish the largest contingent to the asylums. The reason is not far to seek. These people came from cheery little farm villages. Life in the fatherland was hard and toilsome, but it was not lonesome.

There is but one remedy for the dreariness of farm life on the prairies; the isolated farm-house must be abandoned, and the people must draw together in villages. The peasants of the Russian steppes did this centuries ago, and so did the dwellers on the great Danubian plain. In the older parts of our prairie states, in western Minnesota, eastern Nebraska and Kansas, and the eastern parts of North and South Dakota, titles to homestead claims are now nearly all perfected by the required five years' occupancy of the land. Thus there is no longer a necessity that the farmers should live upon the particular tracts which they cultivate. They might go out with their teams to till the fields, and return at evening to their village homes. It would be entirely feasible to re-divide the land in regions where it is all of nearly uniform fertility and value. Let us suppose that the owners of sixteen quarter-section farms, lying in a body and forming four full sections, should agree to remove their homes to the center of that tract, and run new dividing lines radiating to the outer boundaries. Each settler would still have one hundred and sixty acres, and no one would live more than a mile from the remotest limit of his farm. The nearer fields could be used for stock, and the distant ones for grain. The homes of the sixteen families would surround a village green, where the school-house would stand. Such a nucleus of population would soon possess a church in common with other farmers in the neighborhood who might still cling to the old mode of isolated living, and there would probably be a store and a post-office. An active social life would soon be developed in such a community. The school would go on winters as well as summers. Friendly attachments would be formed, and mutual helpfulness in farm and household work would soon develop into a habit.

If the plains people were thus brought together into hamlets, some home industries might be established that would add to family incomes, or at least save outlay. The economic weakness of farming in the North is the enforced idleness of the farmer and his work animals during the long winter. Four or five months are unproductive, and all this time the people and the animals are consuming the fruits of the working season. Even the women are not fully occupied in the care of their little houses and the cooking of the simple meals, for the stockings are no longer knit at home; there is no hum of the spinning-wheel, and the clothing is bought ready made at the stores. If it were possible to restore to the farm some of the minor handicrafts that were carried on in the country thirty or forty years ago, there would be great gain in comfort, intelligence and contentment. Now and then, while traveling over the Dakota prairies, I hear of a family that sends to market some kind of delicate cheese, or makes sausages of superior quality that find ready sale in the neighboring towns, or preserves small fruits. These little industries might be much extended if the farmers lived in communities where extra labor could be had when needed, and where there would be mental attrition to wear off the rust of the winter's indolence and stimulate effort on new lines.

There is a crusty individuality about the American farmer, the inheritance of generations of isolated living, that does not take kindly to the familiarities of close association. It will take a long time to modify the settled American habit of isolated farmsteads. If it is ever changed, the new system will have to be introduced near the top of the rural social scale, and work down gradually to the masses. A group of farmers of superior intelligence and of rather more than average means must set an example and establish a modern farm village, or perhaps this could be done by the owner of one of the so-called bonanza farms, who might sub-divide four sections of his land, as I have described, and invite purchasers to build their homes around a central village green; or, still better, he might himself put up the farm-houses and barns, and then offer the farms for sale. The experiment would be widely discussed by the newspapers, and this extensive free advertising could hardly fail to attract as purchasers a class of people with faith in the idea, and possessed of such a sociable, neighborly disposition as would open the way to harmonious living and to considerable practical coöperation in the field work and the care of animals. One successful community would soon lead to the formation of others, and the new system would steadily spread.

A NEW GOSPEL OF TEMPERANCE.

BY IRA GALE TOMPKINS.

The temperance literature of our day is good, but how little is there of it that reaches the ones it is designed to benefit. As an educator of opinion, and especially among the young, it is excellent, but it does not—or only sparingly—reach the ones who are already suffering from the evils of the accursed drink traffic.

Why may not a handwriting be placed on the wall, like those famous letters of fire that so startled the guilty Belshazzer and his fellow bacchanalians?

We have our flaming theatrical, dance and concert-hall posters, and who does not employ—so to speak—the devil's own weapons to fight him with? Array the great battalions of temperance arguments, facts and figures in flaming letters and post them in conspicuous places where they will catch the eye of the wayfarer, so that he who runs may read, something after this style:

THERE ARE IN THIS COUNTRY

214,000 LICENSED SALOONS

Which Send 100,000 DRUNKARDS Annually

TO DRUNKARDS' GRAVES.

THE GLASS OF BEER FOR WHICH YOU PAY

5 CENTS

Costs Less Than 1-4 of a Cent to Make,

THEREFORE YOU PAY THE BREWER and SALOON-KEEPER

More than 2,000 per ct. Profit

For that which instead of a benefit

IS AN INJURY TO YOU.

THE SALOON-KEEPER

Lives on Your Wages

EATS UP YOUR SUBSTANCE.

Suppose that eight-armed devil, or hideous monster, the SALOON OCTOPUS, were thus depicted in flaming colors, and posted all over our large cities, would it not at least, as Miss Willard says, cause an arrest of thought? and in that arrest the downward steps of some who are already treading the path to destruction?

Shakespeare says the eyes of the ignorant are more learned than their ears, and an object lesson like the above might arrest attention and awaken reflection when mere words and arguments would not. In this manner we might help to make the drink traffic and the saloon not only "to stink in the face of the gods," but odious even in the eyes of their patrons.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

"I hope the women are satisfied with the show they're making of themselves here!" The ungracious words and tone proceeded from a package of humanity done up in pepper-and-salt wrappings of time-honored cut, and labeled all over, distinctively as if with red letters: "The old doctor." Plainly he belonged to the saddle-bag period of Hippocratic art, when dental forceps tasted of jalap, and women had "weaknesses." Small wonder that the belated old gentleman was put out to find right across his path, on the west side of Horticultural Building, a neat pavilion, swinging over its entrance a shingle bearing the golden legend,

ILLINOIS MEDICAL WOMEN'S HOSPITAL.

My fellow traveler passed on, but I turned in. I was met cordially by the physician in charge at the time, who first showed me the pharmacy where at the moment a red-lipped girl was "filling a prescription" for an Italian laborer, evidently employed on the grounds. He looked on reverently as if a being direct from Olympus had undertaken in his behalf. Later this bright young woman told me proudly that she is a graduate of the Philadelphia school of pharmacy, and that she has a hundred confrères among the women of the Keystone state; also, that over sixty women druggists are registered in Illinois. This finely caparisoned little pharmacy is the exhibit of their association, the fixtures being loaned by Boston and Philadelphia firms, and the drugs furnished by well-known firms of manufacturing chemists. Four members of the Women Druggists' Association of Illinois take turns in caring for the exhibit.

A stir in the operating room led me to turn that way just in time to see my guide in the embrace of a stalwart young man while his wife and baby waited their turn. His fond "Mother!" explained the whole situation—more, it accounted for the homey atmosphere of this most dread place, a hospital.

Girls, you see that and the men folks hospital the same day so as to make level comparison. The nurses are equally lovely and do their part with equal skill and faithfulness, but the mother touch left out of the general management makes a place that the sick are loath to enter. One of the best things this institution will do will be to break down prejudice against hospital life. Such of the general public as visit this exhibit, made by the women physicians and training schools for nurses in Illinois, will believe what physicians all know—that sickness can be managed better in hospitals than in homes. They will see too, that until the race has outgrown sickness, woman as physician or nurse is in the direct line of her capacity as ministering angel.

Three schools are working together here in perfect harmony, both on the medical committee and staff of resident physicians. The incoming patient is met at the door by a nurse who inquires his choice of school. In this way, the choice being made without seeing a physician, there is no chance for the fancy of the patient to fix upon any one on account of personal attractions. Allopathic and homeopathic schools are remarkably equal in popularity. The eclectic is less widely known. Patients treated average between twenty and thirty a day, and sometimes have numbered fifty. The proportion of men patients is about the same as in the other hospitals on the grounds. Exposition ambulances bring to it any one asking to come, but if no request is preferred the ambulance drives to the service hospital. My readers who will visit the Fair should remember this.

For beauty and cleanliness—both handmaidens of health—the tile walls of the operating room might well be imitated in homes and in the infirmaries of colleges. Nothing could be so desirable in the nursery and sleeping room as this cream-colored porcelain wall, which can be wiped free of dust and smoke at pleasure. It furnishes a perfect background for pictures, harmonizes with every shade of drapery, and fulfils every demand of art. The invariable single bed in the hospital should be duplicated in every home and college dormitory.

Space fails me to tell of the bathtub with false bottom which may be elevated by a crank to the top of the tub to facilitate the removal of a helpless patient; of the woven wire headrest, and of the table bookrest and writing-desk, which can be put on the bed astride the patient to assist him in using every device for making tolerable the weary hours of convalescence. And these are all designed by women of Illinois.

THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS

proves that no topic is so interesting as the topic of the ages, Religion. Two policemen could not repress the mass of humanity that forced its way through the narrow door of Columbus Hall at the opening session. Inside every seat was taken and a heavy fringe of standing listeners was on the outer edge of the audience. Never in the history of the world had men and angels beheld a scene like that upon the platform of Columbus Hall that momentous morning. Cardinal Gibbons, in scarlet cap and toga, was speaking as I entered. Every other phase of Christianity was represented by great men from Europe, Asia, Australia and America. The guests of Christendom were there in the gorgeous robes of their priesthood, and among them, accompanied by Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Henrotin, was a beautiful Indian woman, representing the Parsees of Bombay, her glowing scarlet gown, decorated with gold lace, a perfect setting for her rich brown face.

A great ovation was given to Hon. Pung Quang Yu, of China, who said, "The word reciprocity finds new meaning to-day." The audience arose and waved hats and handkerchiefs, as if Christian America would make amends for the non-fraternal action of political America. The eloquence of Archbishop of Zante, representing the Greek church, would stamp him a lineal descendant of Demosthenes. Bonneted and veiled in black, gowned to the floor in a triple robe of black, blue and crimson, and laden with gold chains and medallions, he was yet extremely graceful in gesture. His language was classic English, spoken with slight accent in tones that seemed modulated only to words of kindness. He said: "My heart is great toward you. We have a common Creator. I lift up my hands and bless, with a heart full of love, the great people of the United States." Buddhists from Japan were in European dress, as was Mozoomdar of India, whose "Oriental Christ" places him among the great thinkers and writers of this world. His dark face was aflame with love of native land as he told how India alone of the nations of the earth has maintained her national life for two thousand years. "Our prehistoric fathers worshipped one God on the ice-crowned peaks of the Himalayas. We worship the same living spirit to-day." He attributes to India's association with Christian nations the awakening of her ancient spirituality. He represents here the Brahmo Somaj, "whose only creed is the harmony of all religions, its only denomination the unity of all denominations." A most interesting figure is Dharmapala, of Ceylon, very dark in color, and clad wholly in white. He pronounced this parliament the crowning work of the nineteenth century. His English is good, but in his own tongue he must be an orator of great power.

Surely it is a wondrous time when the witnesses for God from every nation come together in a common court.

THE THREEFOLD CORD.

BY L. A. NASH.

"In union there is strength." "A threefold cord is not quickly broken." These axioms would once more prove themselves true, could the three principal reform forces of to-day but realize their significance. Each of these reforms is essential, but neither of the three is the only ladder of escape that the body politic needs from the wrongs bred within itself. Each one of these forces should be ready to yield somewhat of its own all-absorbing idiosyncracy, and become receptive enough to take into its own life the germ that animates and energizes the other two.

When Prohibitionists and Equal Suffragists, supposing that these are already united (as they doubtless shall shortly be), will have hearts at leisure to sympathize with the laborer, putting themselves in his niche, then will they exert head and hand to place him on a happier plane. It was this heart of sympathy that made the "Lady of the Bon Marché" (as Madame Boucicaut is called) light on the plan of giving all hers and her husband's employés a percentage on all profits. Her portrait was in the Paris World's Fair of 1889. If a universal following of her example could date from our World's Fair of 1893, what a much more equal surface society would present by the time of the next World's Fair. The valleys of the depression of poverty would be filled in, and the mountains of wealth—which are eating out the soul of the beholders with envy, and the owners with pride and vainglory—would be leveling themselves down into the happy content of sharing.

The labor societies admit women within their ranks, and if these women were as eager on the ballot question as they are on the financial one, the "white-winged messenger of protection" would be soon in their hands. Equal wages for woman's as for man's work would quickly follow; arbitrators would be called in to settle disputes, in equal numbers from capital and labor; laws to put down the hateful sweating system would be made, and it is quite probable that woman's ingenuity would devise some plan whereby the laws that she had had a hand in framing should be enforced.

Woman could do much even now to break the neck of the sweating system. If she loved her brothers better than her fancy for driving cheap bargains, she could, by a great and grand combine, refuse to buy all goods that were the product of this system. She would have the work done through the medium of her own agents, instead of accepting that which makes the master rich and keeps the toiler poor.

Switzerland, the little original republic of Europe, is now in advance of the world on the labor question. Arbitration settles all things, and labor has so gained the ear of government, that the state pays the salary of the secretary whom the workingman elects to look after his interest.

In order to gain the ear and wield the governing helm labor must be better instructed than it often appears to be in this country. Our labor friends are apt to take the "bit (their one idea) between their teeth, and bolt with it." They look upon unjust taxation or the existence of monopolies (except that of the liquor traffic) as the source of all their woes, and they consider that the single tax, or paper money, would be the sovereign remedy. Their scope of vision would be enlarged by the admission of other reformers into their ranks, and they themselves would be educating their own eyes to see that other reforms are needed besides that of the currency. Ideas are catching; while we try to aid others from their standpoint, they will soon be aiding us from ours. In so doing the advance of both will be greater than when the lines diverged, as though the goal for both was not the same—the betterment and consequent increase of happiness for man.

One financial help has often suggested itself with persistency. This is a system of international clearing-house certificates, which would obviate the necessity of the shipping of United States gold to pay debts across the water. Another is the starting of check-bank-checks, which in some sort would take the place of paper money without the danger of nothing to back them. This was tried as a private scheme in England, and has since been fostered by the government.

It is in the poor man's market that temperance advocates should seek to spread their prohibition and total abstinence wares. It is the poor man who is so grossly duped by liquor and its speciousness. To "go out into the highways and hedges and compel them" to hear our gospel, by joining the bands they form to help themselves and show them a better way from their standpoint is what we can do and yet stay in our own ranks. In this the far-seeing leader, Frances E. Willard, has set a noble example.

White-ribboners can wedge in their little corners in the labor papers. Side by side with a figuring that the Astor baby will be worth so many million dollars when he is twenty-one, being so many dollars out of each working man's pocket, some more valuable statistics should appear. For instance, from the Australian Review of Reviews, that the question of trade depression and drink is much the same as here—that New South Walesh as accomplished the astounding feat of pouring down its own throat during five years more than the sum total of all its loans, or the cost of all its railways. "All the gold and coal and iron which this rich colony produces in fifty years, it drinks in ten." The writer adds (let our Labor party friends heed) that "the financial difficulties are only skin deep. The sacrifice of every fourth glass of beer would bring them to an abrupt end." How would the pockets swell if every glass was given up. Sin is both costly and stupid on both sides of the world. "Learned things will be said on our commercial panics, but none so true as that to cease sinning would stop them." This reviewer continues: "If the golden law of love had sway, how would wrongs be righted, injustice cease and money troubles end? In view of this blessed consummation Edwin Arnold writes:

"'Old laws are spent! What need commandment more
With crash of Sinai's thunder, not to rob,
To murder, covet, bear false witness?
Those
Were chains for hatred—love is done with them!
Love standing with the children at His knee,
Spells the new lesson that the neighbor wronged,
The poor left comfortless, the foeman slain
Were kinsmen used unkindly, lovers lost,
Being one household, with one Father—God!'"

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The fourth Congres International contres l'abus des boissons alcooliques was held, as arranged, on August 16-18, at The Hague, Holland. I send you an account of the points that chiefly struck me.

The congress was well attended, closely devoted to the business in hand, and marked by much earnestness. Over three hundred delegates and members had been registered; probably about half that number were actually present. Among them were the official representatives of four governments, those of Belgium, France, Italy and Norway. A great variety of organizations was represented, and the delegates of these, together with the individual members, were drawn from Germany, England, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Finland, Norway, the Netherlands, Russia, Sweden and Switzerland. Thus the congress was widely international so far as Europe is concerned. There were also three members registered from America, but they did not attend, though two sent papers.

Both the British Women's Temperance Association and the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union were represented. Mrs. Fielden Thorpe, of York, spoke well for the former, and Mrs. Selmer, of Copenhagen, vice-president for Norway of the World's W. C. T. U., represented the latter. Two papers on women's work were read, and at the close of the second, the writer, Mrs. Selmer, gave a further address on the work of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Taking the five words of the title as so many heads, Mrs. Selmer gave an eloquent exposition of the aims and methods of the union. This was followed by a telling speech by Miss Friberg, of Finland, who said there were still in her country many women who sat with folded hands and wept over the drunken husbands, saying, "It is a punishment from God"; but this was being altered and there were 50,000 women now in Finland, who are total abstainers, out of a population of two millions.

As it is on the Continent with total abstinence, so it is with regard to the part of women in public work there. There are many who think, and say, the woman's place is at home. More than one man, however, spoke up for women. One, Dr. Belithan, from Belgium, eloquently supported women workers, and called forth rousing cheers by pointing out that England and Holland are governed by women, and still more in concluding his speech by exclaiming, "Vive la Femme!"

The program of the congress contained almost forty different papers. Nearly all of these were read in the course of the three days, and a number of them were discussed—occasionally at length. Among the more important topics were, the physiological effects of alcoholic drinks on the human organism; the corruption of heathen races by alcohol, the methods adopted by various societies to combat alcoholism; the coöperation of women in temperance work; temperance teaching in schools, and through Bands of Hope, the prohibition and local option laws of the United States, the Gothenburg and other monopoly systems; the treatment of habitual inebriates; the liquor laws of Holland and of other countries, and many others.

At the opening of the congress, Sir Dyce Duckworth read a paper on the consequences of the use and of the abuse of alcohol. The paper was a French version of one Dr. Duckworth read at the Hygienic Congress, in London, a couple of years or so ago. It advocated moderate drinking, and among other bold statements declared that alcohol could no more be got rid of than could bread. The general conclusion arrived at was that drink, when taken at night and with food, is not injurious in small quantities. The paper when read in London led to a good deal of discussion, but Dr. Duckworth has evidently not learned anything, or modified his views. These were, however, promptly repudiated by several English members, and the congress was made aware that Dr. Duckworth only represented himself, and not any society or body of English temperance reformers. One or two foreign doctors associated themselves with the writer of the paper, but a much larger number took the other side. This discussion was a spirited one and well sustained, total abstinence being vigorously defended and as vigorously applauded.

The congress clearly demonstrated the growth of real temperance sentiments among Continental peoples. That growth is slow, and total abstinence is still a very tender plant. But the growth is there. No sentiments met with such general applause and approval as did those that supported total abstinence. Speakers who took that line always had an approving hearing, while in many cases readers and speakers who urged the "moderation" view were heard in silence or met with expressions of dissent. Still, many who have not yet reached the plane of total abstinence showed themselves to be in earnest in desiring to combat the ravages of strong drink, and these could not fail to be helped towards right conclusions by the addresses of earnest men and women, and by the many private conversations at hotel tables and elsewhere. Thus such gatherings cannot fail to promote the advance of temperance thought and practice, and it is well that those who have the light should help, by taking part in the discussions, to spread it throughout the darker places.

The advocates of total abstinence were not alone found among the English members. Germany sent a teetotal doctor, but his mouth was closed, as he is secretary of a "moderation" society. At least one Belgian speaker was thorough. Denmark and Finland sent thorough-going teetotalers in Madame Selmer and Miss Friberg; Norway supplied one uncompromising abstaining speaker in Prof. Lars Jensen, of Christiania, and Switzerland a capital trio in Dr. Forel, of Zurich, and the brothers Rochat, both pastors, and leaders of the Blue Cross temperance societies. Among the Dutchmen were numerous abstainers, some of them, in principle, at least, prohibitionists, as one of their number said in his speech. This gentleman, Mr. A. J. Schrender, of Amsterdam, declared there was in Holland a body of teachers, over one hundred in number, who were total abstainers, and who would keep pegging away till they secure scientific temperance teaching in schools, and that in addition to teaching temperance in schools their cry was "prohibition." That is a long way off, as a consummation in Holland, but as an aim on the part of the new temperance reformers it is an evidence of progress of no mean order.

The congress was held under the patronage of the Queen Regent of Holland, who was specially represented at its sittings by her physician. The proceedings began and ended with the loyal cry of "Vive la Reine." Moreover, official recognition was given in the honorary presidency of the Prime Minister, Mr. Tak Van Poortvliet, Minister of the Interior, who delivered a courtly address of welcome, and by the presidency throughout the congress of an ex-premier and Minister of State, Mr. J. Heemskirk, a gentleman of over eighty, one of Holland's "grand old men," and as he stated in his opening presidential address, the sole survivor of the first temperance society formed in Holland, in 1842. Further official honor was done the congress by a reception accorded to the delegates by the Lord Mayor and aldermen of The Hague at the town hall, and at the close of this function the members were driven, in a number of carriages and pairs, to Scheveningen—the Brighton of Holland—where, by invitation of the directorate of the "Kurhous," they attended a grand concert. At the same place, later in the week, the congress dined with Ministers of State and other leading people, the building being specially decorated with the flags of all the countries represented. Afterward a grand display of fireworks ended with a set piece of much beauty, "Salut an 4me Congres."

London, England. HENRY J. OSBORN.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think he shall receive anything of the Lord.—James 1: 5-7.

We are about to close out the silver plated models of the Temple in the form of jewel boxes, ink-stands and banks left unsold. Some of them have slight imperfections hardly noticeable. We have been selling the models for $2.25 and $1.75 each. We now propose in order to dispose of them at once to sell them for $1 each at the office in Chicago or $1.25 by express prepaid to any part of the country. This will be the last opportunity to secure one of these beautiful silver models as we are not going to have more of them cast. This is a good time for white-ribboners who have been desirous of getting one of these lovely souvenirs of our "House Beautiful," but could not afford to pay two dollars and twenty-five cents for it, to purchase it now for less than half price. Below is given an extract from a letter written by Mrs. Carvosso, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Queensland. If white-ribboners on another continent so highly appreciate the model of the Temple, how much more should it be valued by our own white-ribboners. Mrs. Carvosso writes: "The beautiful Temple arrived safely and formed part of a silver wedding gift to our dear colonial president, Mrs. Brentnall. She was delighted with it and so are we all. After seeing the model we are very anxious to see the original; it must be a most wonderful building and one to be proud of."

The latest rumor which the enemies of the Temple are circulating is, that the rentals of the building are mortgaged for the next two years. To the kind and anxious friends of the cause who have written to know if these statements are true, I would say, the story is as false as all the other canards invented by the Tobiahs and Sanballats who oppose the Temple enterprise. What a comfort it is to turn from detractors to such noble souls as the one below described. Truly, "The last shall be first." A white-ribboner who does not desire her name mentioned, writes to the editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, stating that she is not able at present to pay for her loved paper, and begs that her name may not be dropped as she hopes soon to pay her back dues. The cause of her delinquency is the illness of her husband from cancer and his confinement in the hospital, the sickness of her boy and her own invalidism. She requests that $10 she gathered in a mite-box and sent to the Temple may be credited to her own local union, as they have pledged a hundred." The following is an extract from her letter giving a description of how she earned the $10. "I saved all my waste paper (as my husband is a truckman he got a great deal). I sold all the old shoes of the family, I sold rags and iron. I told the story of our Temple and visitors would drop money into my box. I got all the little boys and girls in my neighborhood (and they had to carry the beer pail, too) interested so that they would bring me their waste paper, and as we lived near a paper mill I sold it readily."

The work on the memorial tablets in Willard Hall is going on bravely. One hundred dollars has been sent by Mr. A. C. Wilcox, of Staten Island, N. Y., in memory of his beloved daughter, Annie Wilcox, whose beautifully ripened Christian character fitted her to be early transplanted to the paradise of God. The contents of a mite-box, $3.60, has been received from Gold Hill Union, Cal. "The first money placed in the box," writes Mrs. Sherburn, the president, "was left by two little children who have gone where their wants will all be met without money. Their mother felt she could not expend their little savings more suitably."

Mrs. J. R. Penn, treasurer of the W. C. T. U. of Venango county, Pa., sends $33.35, which completes the hundred dollar pledge made by this county. "Our union has taken great delight," writes Mrs. Penn, "in raising something toward the beautiful building, and will be very grateful to have its name on the tablet. The building, when paid for, will be an honor to woman." Twenty dollars comes from Milton, Wis., W. C. T. U., to apply on its pledge. The East End union of Pittsburgh, Pa., pledges $100 to the Temple, $25 of which has been paid, and by mistake was credited to Alleghany county union. Nantucket, Mass., W. C. T. U. send $11 on their pledge, making $75 now paid. Mrs. Valentine promises the balance soon. We shall be glad to receive it, for we long to place that old historic name on the tablets of Willard Hall. Below will be found the names of unions in Michigan, as carved on the state panel in the Willard corridors in the Temple:

State union; Fifth Congressional district; Allegan county union; Ionia county union; Kent county union; Ottawa county union; Adrian union, Adrian; Second Congressional district; Dowagiac union; Albion union; Greenville union; Third Congressional district; Ninth Congressional district; First district; Monroe county union.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

IF WOMEN SHOULD SMOKE.

BY JOHN PHILO TROWBRIDGE.

What would become of this world of ours
So sorely in need of our highest powers,
And waiting the stroke of millennial hours,
If women should smoke?

What could atone for the loss crept in
To the baby's kiss and the cradle hymn,
And the coarser life that would soon begin,
If women should smoke?

Where would the noblest sentiments hide,
Where would the purest of fancies abide,
For mother, and sister, and sweetheart and bride
If women should smoke?

Just as we find on a frost-bitten farm
Odorless flowers that have ceased to charm,
So would a blight fill the earth's best balm
If women should smoke.

THE SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS, OR WHY AUNT PATIENCE WENT HOME.

BY MRS. MCVEAN-ADAMS.

Her home was at John's, but she came out to Kansas early in September to spend the winter with us. Now John never took any periodicals, except his county newspaper, and Aunt Patience was a great reader—John's wife said she was "very littery in her tastes." Aunt Patience always took THE UNION SIGNAL,—"set great store by it," she said.

At our house Aunt Patience reveled in literature for the first few days. Then we noticed that she lost interest in the coming of the daily and laid the weekly papers aside after a brief scanning. One day she was strangely quiet and preoccupied.

"Homesick already, Aunt Patience?" said David.

"Why, yes, I guess I be, though I hadn't sensed it till you spoke. Maybe I had better be a-going back; more'n likely that's the best way out of it."

"Out of what? Aren't you comfortable here? Are the children too noisy, Aunt Patience?"

"The children, bless their hearts, no; I hate to leave them, but they make me feel it more. It's the slaughter of the innocents, David; it wears on me; every day and every day I read it in every paper."

Aunt Patience pointed to a paragraph in the yesterday's daily: "Michael Sweeny was to-night arrested for an assault upon his wife and daughter Jane, three weeks old. He came home intoxicated, and demanded money of his wife. The woman being sick had none to give him. In his anger, he caught the earthen teapot from the stove where it was boiling, and hurled it at the woman who sat nursing her infant. The teapot broke against the head of the babe and the breast of the mother, cutting and scalding both in the most frightful manner. The police found the brute calmly eating the supper his wife had kept hot for him, while his screaming victims, covered with blood, were writhing in agony upon the floor. The woman and child were removed to the city hospital, where the child died in a short time. The woman may recover."

"There, David, that is the sort of readin' I can't stand. Two or three on every page, either some child or woman, or an old soldier run over by the cars while drunk."

"Well, well, read the church papers," said David, and he handed her the Christian Advocate. Aunt Patience carefully cut the wrapper and unfolded the handsome sheet, but in a moment she handed it back with one trembling finger resting upon an item.

"Read that, and the second one below, David; read them out loud," she said.

David read:

Crazed by the excessive use of liquor, Douglas Curtis, a switch thrower in Chicago, Sunday morning murdered his seven-year-old daughter, desperately wounded his wife and then blew out his own whisky soaked brains. "A decent fellow when not drunk," the dispatch says.

The daily papers tell a revolting story of little Gustave Keane, five years old, whose parents live in Springwells. The parents had been in the habit of sending the boy to saloons after whisky. The boy had thus acquired a liking for the liquor. On Saturday last he was sent for whisky, but through some one's mistake got half a pint of alcohol and drank it all himself, and being sent again for whisky, drank some of that also. The child soon fell down in a drunken stupor, and died in a few hours.

"Well, I'd better go home," said Aunt Patience. "These things'll be a-goin' on just the same, but I shan't be a-readin' about it, and gettin' all wrought up. My way is to do something. I'll take my UNION SIGNAL and I'll get up a union at the Center. I'm known there and I can start one, I feel pretty certain. And the children—I teach the infant class at home—some of them are pretty old but they would stay. I'll tell them all about it. I can't sleep nights onless I can do something."

So Aunt Patience went home.

THE CHANGELESS LAW OF HABIT.

II.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

There is a resolution I would earnestly enforce on white-ribboners' attention. It was freshly brought to mind at a church union meeting of ladies in "my ain familiar town" during the week of prayer. Four churches were represented, and eleven ladies either spoke or prayed, of whom seven were Methodists. As I conducted the meeting, I can speak freely of but six among those Methodist ladies, and I will say that the six doctors of divinity, by whose presence our regular church prayer-meeting is enriched and blest, could not have spoken better. The manner of these ladies was thoroughly gentle and womanly, but as completely self-possessed as it would have been in their own parlors. The thoughts they presented were among the loftiest, tenderest and most strengthening I have ever heard, while the language was chaste, idiomatic and pictorial.

Why were they thus "at home" in the Lord's house? Because they were made to feel at home in girlhood; their pleasant voices had always been welcome in the circle of prayer; they had been coveted witnesses for Christ since the day they joined the church. The other ladies who sat by in silence were just as good women, and potentially just as gifted, but they lacked the sense of liberty and the sanctuary education. By the law of contrast their silence reminded me of the reply made by a gallant British officer to the question, "How is it that you can ride up to the cannon's mouth and never flinch?" He answered: "Sir, it is the courage of having done the thing!"

Here comes in that changeless law of habit, blest or blighting, according to our personal relation with it. Upon it let us base the resolution: I will religiously cultivate the power to speak and pray in the meetings of my church, God being my helper.

Happily now, the churches nearly all see their duty to the silent two-thirds so long uncomplainingly suppressed. Perhaps the law of self-preservation has also somewhat to do with this growing liberality of sentiment. I was very much amused by the remark of a young man at our church prayer-meeting a few evenings ago. When all were, by request, giving their special reasons for gratitude, he said: "Well, I thank God that I did not come on the scene of action until the days when women spoke in meeting." Now it is your good fortune to live, move and have your being at a time when the world is full of just such brotherly souls as this university student. The old difficulties about interpreting St. Paul have vanished.

I once heard a pastor say at the South, "I reckon I put my own narrow notions into the Bible and then proceeded to think they were inspired." In that pithy sentence is comprised, to my mind, every word of exegesis that has proclaimed the subjection of those who were last at Christ's cross, first at His sepulchre, and first to proclaim His resurrection. "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life." To be sure, Paul says in so many words, "It is not permitted unto them to speak." But all the same Miriam led the song of triumph, Deborah was raised up of God to be not only a judge but a prophetess, Huldah was a prophetess in Jerusalem, instructing Josiah the King, Anna when she entered the house of God, "gave thanks unto the Lord and spake of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem," thus, not only exhorting, but publicly praying in presence of the whole congregation and in the very Temple of God, and Priscilla "expounded the way of God more perfectly" to the eloquent preacher Apollos. Besides all this, St. Paul himself in that same portentous Epistle of Corinthians, explicitly prescribes the conditions under which woman shall both pray and prophesy, and yet he says, "it is not permitted unto them to speak," and "it is a shame for women to speak in the church," and "I suffer not a woman to teach." In view of the plain facts and undoubted precedents of the Bible for woman's doing all these things enforced by the august authority of Christ, who uttered no word against the sacred ministries of woman, what are we to conclude? It seems to me, and I know this but echoes the opinion of some of our best and wisest pastors, that Paul, who was "all things to all men that by all means he might save the most," deemed it expedient for the infant church among the many pitfalls in its way, to *con*form while it endeavored to *re*form, and that those fateful words, "it is not permitted," and the rest are simple statements of fact as to the customs of that day. He could not have meant that God's law did not permit, for no such utterance can be found between the two lids of the Bible, and the examples given are all the other way.

"Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head, for that is even all one as if she were shaven. Judge in yourselves, is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?" But in ten thousand school rooms and homes Christian women daily pray to God with "heads uncovered," and not even the most literal theologian considers that they have "dishonored their heads" whatever that may be. But if they really have not dishonored them then the whole system of literalism falls. If it be not a sin when we fail to wash each other's feet at the sacrament, although Christ said explicitly, "Ye ought to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you," then we have the highest sanction for exalting the spirit of the New Testament and ceasing to insist so much upon its letter.

SHAPING CAREERS.

BY A COUNTRY MINISTER'S WIFE.

There is much interest in the relation of capital to labor, and in the questions it involves. It is often true that men fail to attain the comforts and luxuries of life because of poor management, and not simply because they are downtrodden by capital.

I have in mind two brothers. One is a professional man, with an income of six hundred dollars a year. The other is a mechanic, and his income is larger. The first married with no capital, but with a determination to live within his income, be content with simple food and simple ways. His wife made a study of household economy, and, like himself, desired to be free from debt, even though she must wear calico while others wore silk. There were three children within six years. At the end of that time their rented house of nine rooms was prettily and tastefully furnished throughout. They were both healthy, with hearty, romping children; the husband's life was insured, and their home was cheerful with good books and pictures, as well as with the sunshine which comes with healthy lives and good consciences. They were free from debt, and were able to dress neatly and in good taste.

The other brother married. He wished to "live as well as his neighbors," and his wife wished the same. They bought handsome furniture with which to "set up housekeeping," and paid for it, or tried to, in installments. The wife strove beyond her strength in order to dress like her associates, and to keep her two children in dainty apparel. She bought food of the baker that she might have more time to sew, and the family meals were of rich, unwholesome food, owing partly to ignorance and as much to carelessness. The husband reasoned that with his small wages and large expenses he could never lay up money and must "enjoy life as he went along." When he wanted a good dinner or an expensive cigar he bought it. Each tried to spend all they could and felt sorely toward those who could spend all they wished.

At the end of six years the wife had sewed herself into the grave, and the husband was left with two sickly children, hundreds of dollars in debt, and fathoms deep in melancholy of mind and soul.

The trouble is we are not content to live simply, if need be; we are not intelligent enough, through our own negligence, to live wisely as we ought to live. We try to put a six thousand dollar career into a six hundred dollar salary, all of which is vanity, and worse than vanity.

At the same time there may be those who have lived as wisely as possible, and yet suffer. It is truly an honor to be singled out, like Job, to suffer not for our sin but for God's glory, being sure, however that it is not sin, ignorant or otherwise, that keeps us down.

If we have wealth it is our privilege to put added touches of brightness into the lives of those who are seeking to shape honest careers with small incomes,—though our wave-tossed brother may reach land without our help, should we refuse to aid him.

HOW TO FIND THE "BULL'S EYE."

At the recent shooting match of English expert soldiers, one of the London papers had an interview with the champion, from which we make the following extracts. The champion said, "It is not easy to hit the bull's eye at a distance of nine hundred yards, but I go in for long distance shooting and am glad to have succeeded."

"You seem to take matters easily enough," said the reporter, alluding to his style of shooting.

"Yes," replied the champion, "as soon as I find the bull's eye I am all right."

"To what do you owe your success?" asked the reporter, and the answer which all those who covet "nerves of steel" should heed, is this:

"To quiet, regular habits of living. I have been a teetotaler for twenty years; drinking breaks the nerves, and I keep clear of it."

PLAYING SALOON.

BY EVA JONES.

"That would be an awful mean, naughty play, wouldn't it, mamma," said little Ethel, youngest of the group of nine excited children who surrounded Mrs. Benton. Four of the children were Mrs. Benton's and five were the family of her brother, Uncle Eben Eastway, as the Benton children called him.

Uncle Eben every summer invited the four Benton children to come and all spend one week together at his large lovely farm-house, and Aunt Emily, as the Eastway children called Mrs. Benton, gathered them all at her city home a little later. Her spacious grounds gave them plenty of room for play, and although it had to be more "make-believe' than on the farm, Aunt Emily helped them with so many bright suggestions that the Eastways were always sure they had the best week of the two in town, while the Benton children thought nothing was ever so jolly as the "real fun" out at Uncle Eben's.

Now at Aunt Emily's they had been playing teach school keep store, and railroad, having, for the last, all the dining-room chairs out in the back yard for a train, distinguished rather for its many officers and signals than for great speed. Their dinner one day had been a Fourth of July picnic; they had played camp-meeting, and emigrant moving, and blacksmithing—all the little boys in the last case playing they were little horses, going on all fours and led by halters to be shod.

But this afternoon a passing beer wagon had caught Rob's eye, and he had proposed they get some bottles and things he knew of and play saloon. But this raised a storm of indignation, and after some hot argument they had come to Aunt Emily with the case.

"You say Rob proposed it," said Mrs. Benton. "How would you play it, my son?"

"Why, auntie," interrupted Jennie, "he was going to have the jugs from the pantry that hold your syrup and vinegar, and get some bottles that are up garret and some kegs and barrels from the shed, and have colored water, and then I suppose have us all be old drunkards and just drink like anything."

" Was that it, Rob? What was your plan, my boy?"

"Why, mother, I hadn't got it thought out before they all began to storm. But it's like we played shipwreck and jail yesterday, you know, after you read us those sad stories. And there is so much to some saloons, you know, music, and lunches, and games, and mirrors, and pictures and shiny things. But I don't care about it. You can tell us something else to play."

"I think you can play it, children," said Mrs. Benton. "You know how you played kidnappers one day. Annie was a gypsy woman, dressed up like an old hag, and she coaxed Ethel away, and John and Jennie played be father and mother, and cried and hunted for Ethel; and the rest were neighbors, and how you found Ethel at last, and tried and condemned and punished the gypsy. Don't you remember? Well, now, play the saloon as it is, and do with it as you think ought to be done. I will play it with you, too. I'll be the mother of some nice boy that the saloon is tempting to enter and drink. You can tell me how you think I should do, and fix up the whole play yourselves, only do with the saloon at last as you think ought to be done with it. Is the saloon that leads thousands to ruin all the time any better than a kidnapper that steals only one?"

"Well, I guess not. Hurrah for you, ma. We'll soon fix up the business as it deserves," said Rob, capering out at the door. "Come on, everybody. Let's plan it out, and divide up for our parts."

Then such a chattering as went on out at the playhouse. But all was soon agreed upon and two of them came back to tell Aunt Emily. "You see we are going to have Rob be saloon-keeper. None of us wanted to be anything so mean. John and Tom are going to be men who go there and spend their money, and Tom is going to stagger and fall and hurt himself dreadfully, like so many do, and Jennie is going to be his wife who cries over him and tries to take care of him. And John is going to do something that he won't tell beforehand, but he says it will be a good, sensible thing for a drinker to do. Then Arthur, you know because he is your youngest boy, is going to happen along and be coaxed into the saloon. And then you are to come and say just what you have a mind to to Rob; and Phil and Frank, because they are the oldest, are to come in after you and just wind the play up in whatever way they think it ought to be."

"All right," said Aunt Emily, "only let Rob come here a minute first. I must tell him some things about a saloon, or he won't be able to play his part true."

Rob came and listened carefully. "I'll stand to it if I can, mother, like a real saloon-keeper," he promised, "but oh, I never would have thought that they have all the law and the power on their side, and mothers and boys have no chance against them at all."

I wish you could have had a peep at them half an hour later. Rob among his bottles and glasses was trying to look very brave, but Jennie said she was sure that the screen that partly concealed his bar was the only piece of furniture he had that he was not ashamed of. Annie, with little Ethel, played live in a little house near by and watch for papa, which meant the independent John. All he would tell them was, "Oh, I'll be the right sort of a drunkard for you. You wait and see." Jennie came to visit Annie so as to be in sight and ready for the worst. Phil and Frank each had a corner to himself not far off, one writing in a big book and the other busy mending shoes.

Presently Tom and John met in front of the saloon, and, after various friendly remarks, squeezed in past the screen, and Rob served them with some jelly water out of a big, black bottle. John's next effort, trying to sing a song, was a dismal failure, "all on account," he said, "of Rob looking so horribly solemn." After some more drinking, Tom and John sank stupidly into chairs. Then Rob appeared at the edge of the screen and called Arthur, who was passing back and forth. "Here, little boy, maybe you like candy; and I can give you some lemonade if you would like to step in and get it." And Arthur's little curly head disappeared behind the screen, while the girls shook their fists angrily at Rob. Soon Tom lurched heavily out, tumbled over a flower urn of Aunt Emily's, and fell with a mighty thump that ought to have broken half-a-dozen bones. Jennie and Annie flew to help him, but directly they straightened themselves up and forgot all about their parts in watching Aunt Emily.

"She went right into that saloon, woman though she was," Frank Eastway was afterward telling his father, "tipping over the screen as she went in, but acting as if she rather meant to do it. And lifting Arthur in her arms she said, 'Mr. Saloon-keeper, do you want to rob me of my little boy and start him on the road to drink and death? Why don't you quit such a wicked business when you know it brings so much ruin and misery to everybody?'

"And Rob answered, 'Well, I'll tell you, ma'am. My business is owned by a big brewery in Milwaukee. They let me run it for them, that's all. And there is a special license to protect this business. The town allows me to run it if I give them a thousand dollars out of what I make. And the United States lets the brewery run, and has a big share of the money the brewery makes the same way. And I am in it and the brewery is in it because we can make so much money at it. And if men drink too much for their own good or the good of their homes and families, why that is their own lookout. As for you women, your place is at home. You don't run the laws, or have anything to do about our business, anyway. If you are afraid of your precious children coming to harm, keep them inside your own door-yard.'

"And yet Rob looked for all the world as if he was ready to cry," continued Frank, "but we boys were so mad, we were just ready to trounce him, when Aunt Emily turned to us and said, 'My fellow citizens, all this saloon-keeper has told us is true. We all know the ruin that comes from the making and selling of these poison drinks. But the business has the law, a wicked law, on its side. You men by your votes can make prohibition the law, and can enforce it. Will you not do it, and do it now, if you care for your mothers and wives and children?'

" 'My goodness,' Phil said, 'if we are decent men at all I should say we would, pretty sudden. Anyhow, girls, let's clear out this old beer shop first thing, for we just won't have it here, law or no law. Mr. Rob Saloon-keeper, you will find that we live in this town, too, and such a robbing, murdering business can't stay,' and the way they emptied out those bottles and things, and tore down his sign, was lively, I tell you. Then up came John, and said, "I believe, ma'am, that I can keep sober if that saloon does not run. But if the law is on its side, I am afraid some one will soon start it up again.'

" 'Suppose we see to that, my man,' said Aunt Emily. 'Let us call this game finished, and have another one to represent law-making.' So then she told us how, and we had an election-day game. And I tell you we boys all voted prohibition tickets, and we had the girls vote, too, and counted their votes the same as ours. Auntie said that would be all right if we meant to stick to it and do all we could as we got older to give women the right to vote. I don't see why in the world they don't have it now, for it is as much their country as anybody's. And I tell you I shall know what to do about saloons now all my days. I only wish I were old enough to vote right now."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A day of great interest to the children of the vast temperance family will occur next week. It is called the Children's Harvest Home and celebrates the birthday of a great and beloved temperance leader. Who is she? I wonder how many of our circle can answer that. You, Fletcher, in Illinois, or Addie, way off in California? Norma, in Texas, knows, I am sure, for she's an editor. I can almost hear Royal's voice from Indiana, as he shouts, "Why, Miss Willard, of course!" and the chorus of applause which follows.

Next week our page will have an account of Miss Willard and pictures, for it is to be the Harvest Home number of THE UNION SIGNAL. Look out for it. I hope that many of you will be fortunate enough to take part, or be present at a public Harvest Home celebration, September 28. At any rate you can have one "all your own selves," by singing some good temperance marching songs and reading about Miss Willard and her great work.

Ever affectionately,

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

I am very much interested in the Cozy Corner. Please may I become a member? Here are the answers to your questions:

May 24 is celebrated in England on account of its being the Queen's birthday.

July 4, in our country, is kept in memory of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

July 14 was the date upon which the French Revolution began in 1789.

Now comes the last question, though not the least. The white-ribboners of our land rejoice most on the 25th day of December. Though it is my opinion that the greatest day they will ever see is when King Alcohol is conquered.

Box 313, Princeton, Ill. MARY E. GORDON.

This is one of the best of the answers sent to the questions I asked some weeks ago. Crusade Day, December 23, is the most important anniversary of the W. C. T. U., for it is the birthday of the organization. We all thank you, Mary, for your letter.

In America we celebrate the Fourth of July, because on that date, in 1776, our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence. France celebrates July 14 because it is the anniversary of the storming of the Bastile. In England I think they celebrate the 24th of May because of the union with Scotland, by the accession of James I.

South Wabash, Ind. ROYAL J. DAVIS.

But, Royal, you didn't answer my last question, What is the most important day of the year to the white ribbon army?

I have never written to the Cozy Corner before, but I dearly love to read the Children's Page, and I would like to be admitted. My mamma is a white-ribboner and papa is a Prohibitionist. Your soon-to-be niece.

Lyons Farms, N. J. RUTH B. COLBORN.

A girl with such a papa and mamma does not knock in vain for admittance in our corner.

Help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on Thee, and in Thy name we go against this multitude.—II Chron. 14:11.

THE CONDITION OF THE TEMPERANCE FORCES.

A great deal is being said just at present about the disorganization of the temperance forces, the disastrous results, the causes and the remedy. A recent writer in a religious paper tells of the enthusiasm of the Crusade days and assures us that there has been a marked decline in temperance enthusiasm and temperance effort during the past few years.

Very much of this we consider to be an entirely mistaken view. That there is not the same emotional enthusiasm now that there was in the Crusade days, we admit. It is not to be expected, but there is something very much better, an immense amount more of steady, intelligent, persistent work. The early enthusiasm of the volunteers at the first breaking out of the war is inspiring, but the resolute, unflinching purpose of the disciplined veterans of later years is infinitely more effective. He who says that there has been a decline in temperance simply advertises his entire ignorance of the work being done by the W. C. T. U. alone, not to mention other temperance organizations which have been organized since the Crusade. The work accomplished every day by our great organization is not only very much greater than that done by the Crusaders but it is beyond measure more effective. The Crusaders aimed at the saloons alone and closed hundreds of them for a few months when, alas, the majority of them reopened and more than enough new ones came in to take the places of the few that failed to reopen. The greatest work that the Crusaders did was to prepare the way for the organization of the W. C. T. U.

The cause of the supposed disunion of the temperance forces, and the consequent relaxation of effort is attributed to the different methods advocated by temperance workers. This difference of course exists, and will continue to exist. Until the church of Christ can lay aside all disagreements arising from the difference of human view, it cannot be expected that temperance or any other class of reformers who form an army of any considerable magnitude, will perfectly agree concerning the best methods of attack. But there are certain accusations, either expressed or implied, in all such statements, which we resent. It is that the reformers who strenuously advocate the positive measures mentioned, the taking up of prohibition by a political party, woman's suffrage, etc., refuse to work with those who will not adopt their peculiar methods; that they condemn all methods but their own as "treason." This is utterly false; it is those who do not believe in these heroic methods who refuse to work with those who do. The W. C. T. U., for example, as a national organization, pledges its support to the one only party which declares unequivocally for prohibition, but so far from refusing to work with those who do not believe in this, it does not even ask its state auxiliaries to indorse this position, and numbers within its ranks hundreds of Democratic and Republican sisters. It was not the W. C. T. U. that turned out and refused to fellowship with the "non-partisan" sisters; it was they who went out from us. Thus, too, in states where the predominant party has stood for prohibition, the W. C. T. U., state and National, has given it its hearty support. We are ready cordially to coöperate with either Democrats or Republicans; it is they who refuse to coöperate with us.

So in the matter of woman's suffrage, we believe that it must come before prohibition can ever be an assured success. Nevertheless, we quarrel with none who think differently. Many of our state organizations do not adopt the suffrage plank and many of our members are opposed to suffrage. It is the opposite party that cannot let us hold our views on this matter in peace. It is a leading editor of a leading denomination who has nothing for us but persecution, simply because we advocate this as one of the measures by which to reach the destruction of the nation's curse. It is a college president of a prominent church, who calls upon his brother ministers to shut the doors of their churches against us and defeats a conference resolution expressing sympathy with us in our work. The attitude of the W. C. T. U. on these points is this: While we believe in all of these means, and at the proper time and place intend to advocate them, we are willing at any time to lay one and all of them aside when we do not thereby compromise conscience and join with those of different views in a battle against the liquor traffic.

A speaker at the temperance congress last June expressed with much warmth the view that if the temperance host could but lay aside its bickerings, a substantial victory might be won. He thought that if all would unite in the single effort to destroy the saloon, it could be done. But in that effort all must lay aside their peculiar dogmas, even the total abstainer must not insist upon his doctrine that drinking of alcohol is per se a sin. While we somewhat doubt that the destruction of the saloon without the destruction of the entire liquor traffic would be so great a victory or so easily achieved as the speaker thought, nevertheless, the W. C. T. U. is ready to join in such a crusade and during the campaign to hold in entire abeyance the questions of third-party, woman's suffrage, even total abstinence. But we should not be willing to pledge ourselves to keep them forever in abeyance, and that is after all what our friends really want, for they are satisfied with nothing else. We have constantly shown ourselves ready to do this, we have never refused to take part in any temperance battle simply because the other contestants did not believe in some of our doctrines unless indeed some one considers High License a temperance measure. While we do not question at all that there may still be honest temperance people who believe that High License is a step towards prohibition, and we have never abused such, so strong, however, are our own convictions, based upon experience and the overwhelming testimony of friends and foes alike, that High License is a plot of the evil one himself to fasten more securely the chains of the liquor traffic upon us, that we must decline even at the risk of being called dogmatic and of being taunted with having found the one "cure-all," of considering ourselves divinely appointed, etc., etc., to join any temperance (?) host in the effort to secure high license.

But in all real temperance efforts, the W. C. T. U., and we believe all other temperance workers of strong convictions, are ready to join with their temperance brothers and sisters of different view to gain a victory over the rum traffic. This is what our forty departments mean. We gladly welcome to our ranks every one who wishes to fight the liquor curse along whatever line, by whatever means, receive from her the strength and inspiration of her faith and courage and give her the advantage of our great organization through which to more effectively carry on her work.

We are urged to "put aside dissensions" with the promise that when we do we shall have sure and speedy triumph. The difficulty with persons who are so urgent in their appeals for union is that they are like the old lady who, when a union church was being organized in a little community made up of various sects, none of which was able to support a church by itself, asked, "Why can't they all give a little and be Methodists?" The people who so long for the union of the temperance forces are not satisfied merely to have the various wings of the army unite for any definite victory; they are determined that at all times and all places all soldiers for temperance shall use only the weapons which they select. As for us we say with Archbishop Ireland, "If I see that you are fighting pretty well, I shall not trouble myself as to the kind of weapon you are fighting with."

WHY SHOULD I WEAR THE WHITE RIBBON?

The time was when an intelligent Christian might have no convictions concerning liquor selling, or even liquor drinking. The evil, especially of the selling, had not assumed the proportions that it has at present. The public thought was engrossed with other things, and, moreover, civilization had not so far developed in its Christian growth that the wrong and injury of one member of society was felt, even as much as it is to-day, to be the concern of all. But that time is past. The drink curse has been such a prominent subject of discussion that none but the most densely ignorant can be unconscious of its importance; no one who does not deliberately stifle his conscience can be without convictions of personal duty concerning it. In whatever position of life one may move the woes of intemperance confront him. On every side are desolated homes, blighted hopes and ruined lives, while the cause of all this misery has grown into one of the great business interests of the world, flaunts in our faces the permit of the national government, controls political parties, legislatures and courts. In this age and this nation it is scarcely conceivable that any one of average intelligence can be out of the battle against the drink curse and be guiltless.

As Henry Ward Beecher said of another matter, "Every one is responsible for this sin until he has done all in his power to destroy it." This does not mean that every one is guilty who does not belong to some temperance organization. We could relate more than one instance which has come under our own observation where it was clearly the duty of some not to belong to any such organization. The work of some persons may call them so exclusively to other lines that the "all" that they can do for temperance is very little. Just what each one is to do must be settled between that soul and its Maker. What we urge is that each one should realize his responsibility in this matter. But there are many who can and should take an active part in this warfare, and we thoroughly believe that every woman who is so situated that she can, should be a member of the W. C. T. U. Chief of our reasons for this belief is that within this organization she can do more than she can alone. A hundred soldiers organized into one body and led by one commander are easily a match for five hundred fighting each one for himself, and the same holds true in the temperance battle.

Consider for a moment what the work of each woman is in our various departments and what it would be if done without any connection with the organization. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt will be, as she deserves to be, immortal. The work of the department which she founded and of which she is the head, is one of the most important of the lines of work of our W. C. T. U. But what is our great organization to the work of Mrs. Hunt? The W. C. T. U. found her at work getting temperance instruction into the public schools and it took her up, work and all. She might perhaps in a lifetime have perfected the temperance instruction in her own and possibly a few adjoining states. As superintendent of the educational department of the W. C. T. U. she was no longer a single-handed worker, but the skilled general in command of a disciplined army whose forces were planted in every state and territory and almost every city and village of the nation. As the result we have temperance instruction in the public schools of forty-four states and in all the territories of the United States including the District of Columbia and in all Indian and colored schools. But if the work of Mrs. Hunt has been multiplied by her connection with the W. C. T. U., what of that of her unknown co-laborers, the rank and file of the army? Suppose that the women who over all the nation have helped her in this great work had worked single-handed, would there be for the same amount of work such results? We doubt if there would be any results visible to the eye of sense. What is true of this department is true of all the others, and it follows that any temperance woman who wishes to make her efforts for temperance tell with greatest effect will be wise to become a white-ribboner.

But more than this, every woman owes it to herself to become identified with this great woman movement. It is an education to be a member of any great organization, but very few organizations have done for their members what the W. C. T. U. has done for women. Lack of space, not lack of material, makes it impossible to enter at length upon this branch of the subject. Among our leaders and among our rank and file are scores of women who have found and developed their powers through the work of the W. C. T. U. The future will have high praise for the temperance work of our Union, but it will also bear witness that this great organization of women was something very much more than a temperance organization; it will be recognized as a movement for the uplift of woman. No woman who stands in its shadow can afford to be left out of this woman's army, to share in its battles and to rejoice in its victories.

Having become a wearer of the white ribbon, wear it. Wear it for the encouragement of yourself and your sisters. Have you never experienced the cheer of seeing the white ribbon on the breast of an unknown lady? Have you never made a delightful and helpful acquaintance, your sole introduction the bow of white ribbon on the dress of each? We know of nothing more cheering than the little symbol which tells us that a sympathizing sister, a co-worker, is at our side even though a stranger. Wear it for the aid of those who may be tempted. Some most sorrowful stories have come to us of young men striving to break away from the drink habit tempted to their ruin by the wine-glass offered by a beautiful girl. Think you the result would have been the same had the young man been surrounded by women upon whose breasts glowed the badge of the W. C. T. U.? To the tempted, the tried, the disheartened, to the Elijahs who fancy that they alone of all Israel have not bowed to Baal, our white bow comes as a gleam of light in the darkness, a promise of hope and comfort; therefore, white-ribboners, one and all, always, everywhere, wear your white ribbon.

"TEMPERANCE IN ALL NATIONS."

The great "Thought Exposition"—for such may we not advisedly call the World's Auxiliary Congresses of this Columbian year?—will have been an immeasurably important factor in the advancement of all movements which tend to the betterment of the world. Greek has met Greek in a peaceful challenge of mind with mind, and the flashing swords of fact, logic and eloquence are keener and better tempered for the encounter. Great issues have been greatly considered and large plans made for coming concerted efforts. Reporters' pencils have been alert to catch the best utterances of nations upon this world-extensive theme; secular and religious press has promptly gathered these into permanent form to take their place among the histories of men and countries.

Prominent among the Congresses was the temperance rally in June. Its platform was as wide as the vast citizenship of the world, for it welcomed men and women and organizations whose enemy is intemperance—that foe which like Satan knows no nationality, no sex, no color, naught save the opportunity to blacken souls, dethrone minds and destroy bodies.

One of the first tangible results of this Congress is a work of two volumes, entitled, "Temperance in all Nations," edited by J. N. Stearns, the corresponding secretary of the National Temperance Society and Publication House. In this work the art of condensation has been beautifully wedded to comprehension, for though necessarily bulky, the reader is constantly forced to admire the ever-present qualities of terseness and conciseness.

Volume I is devoted to brief histories of the many temperance organizations throughout the world; sketches of the work as pursued in the various countries; statistical reports touching consumption, production, national drink bills, breweries, etc. For comparative study perhaps the most valuable part of Volume I is confined to those pages containing the reports of American consuls. These were obtained by the coöperation of the State department at Washington with the committee of the National Temperance Society on World's Temperance Congresses, and in thirty-seven responses the following points are covered: Statistics as to the quality and kind of intoxicating liquor produced in the countries where the United States is officially represented; government methods of dealing with the manufacture and sale of intoxicants; intemperance as related to poverty, immorality and crime; present efforts to discourage the use, manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

Volume II deals directly with the work of the Congress. In this great gathering, the first of its kind in the history of the cause, credentials were received from over seven hundred elected delegates, thirty international and eighty state organizations were represented, and nearly one hundred church organizations and societies. Addresses from over sixty prominent leaders are given, some thirty-five papers prepared in advance for presentation to the Congress, letters from distinguished friends unable to be present, and synopses of the Congresses held by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, "Non-Partisan" Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Independent Order of Good Templars, and the Royal Templars of Temperance.

There is absence of description of one large association which we are sure many readers besides ourselves will notice, and that is the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the largest temperance as well as woman's publishing society in the world. Convinced that this was an oversight only, we merely take this opportunity to suggest that in the next edition (and we trust it may reach many editions) the editor enrich his valuable volume with a chapter on woman's success in publishing temperance literature.

This is undoubtedly the most complete temperance encyclopedia ever published and will be given its due place of honor in the libraries of all who think, write and speak for the cause—aye, or against it, for the enemy will often reconnoitre the country of its opponent that it may the more intelligently pursue its warfare. They are welcome to long and frequent research here, for they will find mighty fortresses and well equipped armies whose "never-say-die" policy is not the least of all their magnificent ammunition.

PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

The magnificent opening of the Parliament of Religions, described in our last week's issue, has been fully sustained by the program of the week. Considered merely as an unique pageant, the Parliament is a marvelous success, but in the light of its deeper and truer meaning—the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—this great assemblage is a wonder and a blessing, the like of which has never been seen before and may not be seen soon again in such magnificent proportions. There have been as large audiences before, but none so representative and none so vital in import. Some are asking, "Will it do any good?" We answer, how could it do otherwise than good, when sympathy and tolerance as broad as man's mind and as deep as love eternal is shown by Jew and Gentile, Buddhist and Baptist, Moslem and Methodist, Parsee and Presbyterian. There is danger of Christians, even, growing narrow and bigoted, not because their religion makes them so, but because their human nature is apt to err. Up to the present writing, the Parliament has been in session five days, and not a jar has been heard. Creeds and dogmas without stint have been fearlessly presented, but quietly received. As some one said, "The parliament of the world's religions is a peaceful gathering of warring creeds."

The object of the great meeting is tersely and significantly told in the following paragraph, written by Dr. John Henry Barrows, the prime mover of the Religious Congress:

"To unite all Religion against all Irreligion; to make the Golden Rule the basis of this union; to present to the world in the Religious Congresses, to be held in connection with the Columbian Exposition of 1893, the substantial unity of many religions in the good deeds of the Religious Life; to provide for a World's Parliament of Religions, in which their common aims and common grounds of union may be set forth, and the marvelous Religious Progress of the Nineteenth Century be reviewed; and to facilitate separate and Independent Congresses of different Religious Denominations and Organizations, under their own officers, in which their business may be transacted, their achievements presented and their work for the future considered."

Among our own countrymen those who have enjoyed the heartiest welcome were Rev. Joseph Cook, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Rev. Edward Everett Hale and Dr. Barrows. Women are represented on the program as well as in the audiences. Rev. Augusta Chapin delivered one of the addresses of welcome, and Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Lydia H. Dickinson, Mrs. Eliza R. Sunderland and Miss Josephine Lazarus have spoken during the week. A fuller account will be given in our next issue.

At no time in the history of the world has there been such concerted and wide-spread activity in the moral, religious and philanthropic fields. The pilgrimage of the nations to Chicago, the city of the century, gives an opportunity for seed-sowing, never presented hitherto, and the wide-awake leaders of reform are quick to seize upon the favorable hour. In connection with the Parliament of Religions, an International Christian Conference is being held by the American Evangelical Alliance, under four general heads: Christian Liberty, The Religious Condition of Protestant Christendom, Christian Union and Coöperation, and the Church and Sociological Problems. Besides this General Conference there are a large number of section conferences which together constitute a "School of Applied Christianity," where work in seventy different departments of Christian effort will be discussed by experts. There will be opportunities for questions touching methods in their success and failure. Delegates from all ecclesiastical bodies, theological seminaries and religious associations are in attendance. It is not unreasonable to say that of all the congresses of the year, this one is among the most important, because of the practical results looked for in the efforts to wage war on all that tends to drag men down from their high estate which was designed to be only "a little lower than the angels."

On Duty is pleased to be informed by an Ohio correspondent that at Bishop Watterson's silver jubilee at Columbus, O., recently, no wine was furnished with the banquet. The Bishop wittily said in reference to it, "I know it is an unusual thing to put the guests at a banquet of this kind on a diet of 'dry toast,' but the toasts will have to go dry to-night."

Having spent several days and evenings at the Fair recently with delightful returns in the way of recreation and instruction, I desire to use my influence with the "half persuaded," to come to the most magnificent educational exhibit of all times. The wonders of the White City are not yet exhausted upon the citizens of Chicago; indeed, most of us are only awakening to the unequaled opportunity of seeing the WORLD within a nominal compass of seven hundred acres. Those who have traveled in foreign lands have often expended months in seeing what can be viewed in one corner of the Liberal Arts Building, for instance, or in a section of the Woman's Building. On Duty says, come to the Fair, and come in October, so as to "take in" the World's and National W. C. T. U. Conventions.

It is a significant commentary of the favorable public opinion entertained toward Miss Lizzie Borden, the much abused young woman whose sad history all know, that one hundred thousand votes should have been sent to a leading Boston paper in favor of her as the favorite candidate for a free trip to the Chicago Fair. Miss Borden greatly appreciated the token of good-will, but delicately declined the honor. I hear that she is soon going to Melrose as the guest of Mrs. Mary A. Livermore who so nobly stood by her during her difficult ordeal, as did Mrs. Fessenden, president of the W. C. T. U. of Massachusetts, and other good and great women.

At a meeting where the subject of orthodox fear of investigation and questioning was the topic, a Jewish Rabbi said that where people were afraid of questioning it always reminded him of a tradition in one of their old Jewish books, that whenever the Israelites came across a walled city in their travels they always said, "Oh, we are not afraid of this city because if the people were strong they would not need to live in a walled city to protect them; a weak tribe must surround itself with high walls, but a strong people can afford to live in the open." The same is true of sects.

It has become proverbial that Mr. Gladstone's great career has a physical basis not only in his natural endowment, but fully as much by reason of his wisdom in the handling of the forces of body as well as mind; he has taken as his major premise that a prodigious amount of work can be done without producing physical or mental fatigue, provided that work be constantly varied, and he has invariably so arranged his life as to allow the "natural man" a fair degree of fresh air and exercise. He does not follow any system of hygienics, and for the ordinary recreations of an English gentleman, such as riding, hunting, fishing or cricket he has never evinced any inclination; but his strong point has been that he has always avoided continuous intellectual labor on the same level; always at work, he constantly changes his angle of mental vision. This has made him an all-round character, greatly increasing the public interest in his personality, and marvelously prolonging the period of his activities. It is not "the pace" that kills, but it is the dead level of routine. Mr. Gladstone has said himself, recently, in explanation of his good health, mental and physical, "There was once a road leading out of London on which more horses died than on any other, and inquiry revealed the fact that it was perfectly level, consequently the animals in traveling over it used only one set of muscles."

ON DUTY.

ECHOES FROM KANSAS.

"Let us gather up the sunbeams, lying all around our path,
Let us keep the wheat and roses, casting out the thorns and chaff,
Let us find our sweetest comfort in the blessings of today,
With a patient hand removing all the briars from the way."

And this is what we are aiming to do, to "gather up the sunbeams" as we meet in social intercourse during convention seasons, when we can look into the eyes and grasp the warm hands of our sisters who are so near and dear to us from our associations in W. C. T. U. work. From several counties have come reports of their annual conventions, a sweet spirit pervading each.

LYON COUNTY held a "workers' conference" at Admire. The people of the place showed their appreciation by their presence in unusual numbers. When it was known that Mrs. E. F. St. John was present, men in their working clothes, with sleeves rolled up, came flocking in to hear her give them straight truths in regard to woman's legal, political and personal "rights." The morning session was devoted to the general W. C. T. U. work, its aims and policy. "Why every woman should be a white-ribboner," "Strong points in a successful union," "Cause of failure and lack of growth," etc., and a happy little symposium, "Why I am a white-ribboner," was bright and earnest and helpful to all, resulting in securing new members. Misses Jaquith and Hill, our evangelists, were present, giving aid and inspiration. Mrs. St. John lectured in the evening, and preached next morning. About twenty visiting delegates were present during convention. The eleven from Americus drove twenty miles to get there, which shows their "pluck and perseverance."

COWLEY COUNTY W. C. T. U. met by invitation at Gueda Springs, a noted health resort, where the mayor and all the council are women. They attended the convention and bade the delegates a hearty welcome. There are seven unions in the county, and all were represented. Rev. C. H. St. John spoke on Thursday at 10 o'clock, also in the evening, subject, heredity. "He is well fitted to lecture on this theme, and superintendents of this department would do well to secure his services, as he is thoroughly posted in materia medica, physiology and the W. C. T. U., and we are fortunate to have such a man at our command," so writes Mrs. Helen H. Ruby.

ALLEN COUNTY convened at Iola, holding school of methods conducted by Mrs. L. B. Smith, district president. Fourteen departments were discussed. A paper by Mrs. E. J. Thayer on "Franchise" was the beginning of a very interesting suffrage conference. This was followed by parliamentary drill. Dinner was served at the church, and the convention closed in the evening with a union prayer-meeting. Royal resolutions were adopted. As the result of the work of Mrs. H. H. Geyer, district organizer, two new unions had been organized.

Iola is a flourishing union of thirty members. They have held twenty-four regular, and three special meetings during the year; have raised $48.24; have had seven lectures; work in eighteen departments, and have secured a place on the programs of all future Sunday-school conventions for our department of Sunday-school work.

This union utters its protest against the removal of Miss Spencer from the industrial school, by our state officials. It has a girl in attendance there who has become very much changed for the better and writes them lovely letters full of praise for her school and teachers and she is now trying to live a Christian life. Miss Spencer is a white-ribboner and it is thought she was removed for "political reasons." She read a fine paper on industrial school work at our state school of methods this summer, and from its tone one would scarce believe her guilty of the charges made against her.

From Mrs. Jessie W. Morton, secretary of OTTAWA COUNTY, comes the following interesting letter: "Early in the summer we began to raise money to organize our county for 'Law and order' and with the assistance of two other towns, arranged for a series of lectures, beginning at our county seat—Minneapolis—and secured John A. Murray and Dr. Milner to give the lectures. Delphos has the honor of leading the county in size of her league and enthusiasm of its membership. It has over eighty members. Rev. Lucas, of the Presbyterian church, is its president. The best business men are members. I was told that all the houses where there was good reason to suspect the sale of liquor was carried on, and some that were not suspected, now have cards in their windows 'for sale' or 'to rent.' The league managed well, a committee went the rounds with a sheet of foolscap, divided in the middle by a line, on one side of which was written, 'I am in favor of the enforcement of the laws of our state, and in sympathy with the efforts of the Law and Order League,' opposite, 'I am against it.' They gave people no middle ground to stand upon. 'Shall we put your name for or against?' and all had to 'stand up and be counted.' The league at Minneapolis numbers fifty, has done good work and proposes to keep at work making it as uncomfortable for liquor sellers as the law will allow. Besides organizing the county we have had a number of temperance sermons preached by request, and one lecture by the Rev. Mr. Isham, a returned missionary from India, who gave such capital hits at intemperance that we kept him one night longer to deliver a temperance lecture, and the result justified us in doing so."

Mrs. Alice M. Henderson, state superintendent evangelistic department, writes concerning the work of her "Crusade Band": "This movement I believe was 'God inspired' as Miss Greenwood says of it, for it originated in prayer. While praying for God to bless the evangelistic department and open the way for us to supply those who needed help, this plan was presented to my mind, and in such a way that to doubt was impossible. 'I was therefore obedient to the Heavenly vision,' and set about at once to carry on God's plan. I wrote through the Messenger for those who felt called of God to preach the 'gospel of purity, temperance, and the love of Christ,' to write me. Very soon I received a letter from Miss E. May Jaquith offering herself. To her I made known my plans, also appointing her leader of 'Gospel Temperance Crusade Band No. 1.' I soon learned of Miss Edith Hill also, and fully equipped they started on their mission of peace and good-will. Their success has been wonderful, and has left no doubt that God himself is back of the work. Wherever they labor a wonderful impetus is given to our work. Many have come to look with favor upon the W. C. T. U. who before could only condemm our organization, and have since joined our ranks. In addition to added membership, many souls have been brought into the fold of Christ, through the earnest, pathetic appeals of these consecrated workers; and the question so long argued is settled, that the W. C. T. U. is a Christian organization, and that we have a right to be classed among soul-winners. Miss Hill is a very fine elocutionist, a graduate of Chicago School of Oratory, and her Bible recitations are really wonderful. This fact speaks for itself. When laboring in a town the people seem never willing to let them go, but beg them to return for a term of weeks. That this movement (only in its beginning) will spread over our fair land and perhaps over the world, will speed these fire-baptized Crusade Bands, to bless humanity with their benedictions of peace and good-will, seems very very sure, as our noble leaders have never been slow in embracing an opportunity of extending our usefulness. As fast as practicable we will send out other 'Bands' as already there are many more calls for the services of this first 'Band' than could be filled in two years, so we look forward hopefully, and pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth just the laborers He wants for His work."

NOTES.

I lately had the pleasure of a visit with Rev. G. B. Norton and wife, returned missionaries from our school in Tokio, Japan. They bore grateful testimony to the work of our Mary Allen West while with them in Japan, but thought she might have lived to labor longer had she not worked so unceasingly in a new climate. "The workmen are buried but God carries on His work."

At the late annual school-meeting in my home district in the country there were present thirty-six voters, eighteen men and eighteen women. Query: "Do women want to vote?"

Three liquor sellers were convicted at a recent term of court in Coffey county, and soon after the W. C. T. U. of Burlington sent by express to the judge and prosecuting attorney a basket of beautiful flowers, each tied with a yard of white satin ribbon, and accompanied by a "card of appreciation," and at the next meeting of the union the sheriff brought the confiscated liquors (which had been the property of the convicted sellers) and broke the bottles and jugs, and emptied the casks into the gutter in front of the room where the union was in session. The white-ribboners assembled looked on with joy in their hearts and gave them a Chautauqua salute.

Mrs. Minnie Evans, county superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, has been laboring faithfully in the interest of her work with a county board who was selecting uniform text-books. She did not succeed, but the county union has since been invited by the superintendent of public instruction to assist in securing the rejection of the books which the board accepted.

MAINE.

WHITE RIBBON WORKERS.

White ribbon ideas and methods have gone vacationing quite extensively during the past month. The Maine W. C. T. U. occupied a successful day at the Fryeburg Chautauqua Assembly, Mrs. Stevens speaking in the morning on the Woman's Congress and Mrs. Gleason in the afternoon. The union also enjoyed a day at China Lake campground and another at Ocean Park. At the latter resort representatives from several states were present. Miss Kimball delivered her lecture, "Homes, the Nation's Need."

The school of methods at Old Orchard was' like those of the two preceding years, a success. Among those who took part in the general discussions was Mrs. Sanderson, president of the Quebec Provincial Union. Mrs. Burpee represented the Maritime union. Mrs. Dogal, of Montreal, Mrs. C. R. Wendell, president of the New Hampshire union, and Mrs. Lee, of Massachusetts, were present, while nearly every county in our own state was represented by efficient workers. As usual we were favored with the presence of many clergymen of different denominations. The leading speakers were Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Madam Layal Barakat, Miss L. E. F. Kimball and Mrs. L. C. Partington.

Mrs. H. J. Bailey sends the following note concerning the visit of an Ohio worker in Maine: "We have lately had a rich treat, and had some grand work done and lectures given in Maine along temperance lines by Rev. Wm. G. Hubbard, of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Hubbard is a very logical, impressive, interesting and effective speaker, and his tour in Maine resulted in arousing latent energies and creating public sentiment along the lines of temperance, peace, purity, and every good element that comes into home life. He is out and out for home protection against all the evils and vices which invade homes, including impure literature, which is one of Satan's effective methods to ensnare our young men and women, and even children, and to poison their minds, destroying all good home influences. Mr. Hubbard is secretary and superintendent of the American Railway Literary Union, and through his influence vile books have been expunged from the railway trains and news offices in Maine, as also in some other parts of our country.

"'Elements that Win, or How to Make a Success of Life,' is a very profitable and entertaining lecture, especially adapted to young people. If those who hear it also heed it, their lives cannot be failures. Our Y's would all do well to secure this lecture for every locality where they are organized. 'The American Saloon and the Attitude of Christians Toward It,' is one of Mr. Hubbard's most thrilling and convincing lectures. 'The Higher Life for Nations' is another that I wish might be given in every locality in our land."

During his stay in Maine Mr. Hubbard investigated the working of the prohibitory law, especially in Portland, where the "pocket peddler" is now the leading violator. He interviewed Gen. Neal Dow, the chief of police and the county sheriff, and from a letter published in The New Era, seems to grasp the situation. He says: "Portland is the great seaport of Maine, and has a population of forty-five thousand. It is, therefore, the most difficult place in the state to enforce prohibition. Hence, if prohibition can be enforced there, it can be in every other town in the state. . . . . We have not seen an open saloon in the state. In some of the manufacturing towns they violate the law in connection with restaurants, simply because the officers neglect their sworn duty, but there is no open saloon to tempt the boys as in Ohio, and moreover the state of Maine has to fight all the rest of the world in order to maintain her own law. The United States government is in the liquor business, and most of the states are in the liquor business, and from all these states commercial travelers are bringing in liquors in their trunks and satchels, helping to break the law. The brewers and distillers are continually sending their agents into Maine to help the worst elements violate the law. And yet in spite of all these powers of darkness, of hell and earth combined, the prohibitory law of Maine is better enforced than the license law of Ohio. In Ohio there are 10,150 places that violate the law every day in the year by selling to minors and to drunkards. In Maine there is not one twenty-fifth as much violation of their law."

LOCAL UNIONS.

The Auburn union having enlarged and improved their hall, celebrated the event with an opening which was attended by many of their friends. Music, recitations and refreshments were the order of the evening. The society has been very fortunate in securing a most devoted and hard working superintendent for the department of social purity, Mrs. Maria M. Swett. Though Mrs. Swett has held the office but a short time, the work is not new to her, for as opportunity presented, she has been engaged in it for many years. She has already caused one objectionable man to leave the city and has aided several needy girls. Going one day to the Grand Trunk railway station, she found there a girl of fourteen years waiting to take a train which was not due for several hours. The only other person about the station was the baggage master. Mrs. Swett learned that she had come from an up-country place, took her to her own home and after lunch put her on board the cars. Not long afterward on answering her bell one stormy day, she found the girl standing forlornly on the steps. Inquiry and correspondence brought out the fact that the girl's mother and stepfather were trying to get rid of her, sending her to different people who they thought might keep her for her work. The poor girl had been made to take the place of a hired man on a farm and was in a most pitable condition with swelling rheumatism and serious nervous derangement. At last Mrs. Swett has found a good home for her with a large-hearted New Hampshire woman. Letters have been received both from the girl and her benefactress telling of the improvement which rest, good food and kindness have already made.

The press superintendent of the Greene union reports a gospel temperance meeting of special interest and expresses gratitude that her town is favored with pastors who are not afraid to speak their views on the temperance question. Though most of the members live at a distance from each other on the neat farms, this enterprising society holds two meetings each month in which the children participate, beside a monthly parlor meeting.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

It was decided at the last meeting of the state executive committee to secure Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, as speaker for the state convention at Jefferson September 27, 28 and 29. The corresponding secretary was authorized to have five thousand copies of the law prohibiting the sale of tobacco in New Hampshire printed, ready for circulation. The debt for the land around the Mercy Home still remaining unpaid it was thought best by the trustees to take two thousand five hundred dollars (as a loan) from the permanent fund, and pay for the land, the deficit on the running expenses, and for renting the laundry. It is the understanding that this is to be replaced as soon as possible and when any of the land is sold the money paid shall be replaced, at least a part of it. It was voted to extend the laundry and purchase the needed machinery. It is from this source that the Home must look for its support in the future—therefore this expenditure of money seems necessary. Miss Wendell reported the financial result of Mrs. Gleason's lecture trip by collection and donations, $132.18, which will be used for the H me.

The Manchester union has been allowed the stand to sell literature at the coming state convention.

Badges are to be provided for the use of delegates to the convention.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The sixth annual convention of the Coos County W. C. T. U. held its last meeting in the M. E. Church of Gorham. The first session was held Wednesday evening. Rev. D. C. Babcock, of Whitefield, delivered an able address on "Our issue and how to meet it." The following day the meeting was opened at ten a. m. by Mrs. T. P. Brown, the county president. After reading the report of Mrs. Loyne, Mrs. Brown urged the need of every one remembering the Mercy Home and sending all such gifts as would be of service in any home. Mrs. Austin, of Littleton, told of the work done in New Hampshire in Demorest contests. Mrs. A. C. Trafton read an essay "From contest to conquest," which was well received by the audience. Mrs. Emily Emerson, of Gorham, gave a thoughtful address on the drink cure during the afternoon.

The election of officers resulted in the election of Mrs. F. P. Brown, president; Mrs. W. A. Folsom, of Lancaster, recording secretary; Mrs. C. A. Colby, of Colebrook, treasurer. The president was left in power to elect the corresponding secretary.

The address of welcome and the response were by Mrs. Blanch E. Libby and Mrs. E. O. Colby. Three pastors of Gorham were introduced and gave the ladies words of cheer. Mrs. B. Libby sang a solo. The Sabbath observance pledge was adopted after striking out the clause relating to calling for mail.

In the evening the house was filled to listen to a contest by six young ladies. Miss Zoe Marcella Evans was awarded the prize. Quite an honor has been conferred upon these young ladies; they have been invited to attend the state convention at Jefferson and have another gold medal contest.

"At the close of a beautiful day we found ourselves among New Hampshire hills where a cordial welcome from pastor and people of Bethlehem awaited us. Surely the men called to stand upon the walls of Zion there gave forth no uncertain sound and in them the cause of temperance has a good support," thus saith the reporter from the Grafton county convention which met some time since at Bethlehem. The unions were very well reported and the following subjects were discussed by different ladies: Scientific temperance instruction, work among lumbermen, putting homeless children into homes, drinking fountains and the need of them throughout our country towns and contest work. Mrs. Austin, of Littleton, gave the history of a homeless child who had found shelter and a home. She pleaded that more of the children might be provided for in homes where little feet had ceased to patter. She felt sure the hearts would grow warm as these older people watch the child develop under their loving care. In the evening Mrs. Hoffman, of Peterboro, superintendent of narcotics, read a paper upon the moral and physical effects of cigarette smoking. The address was by the Rev. E. C. Langford, of Haverhill, N. H.

FLOWER MISSION WORK.

"God might have made the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak tree and the cedar tree
Without a flower at all."

He did not. He knew these tender messengers were friends in disguise, and that the heart of many a wretched sinner would be touched and perhaps led up to better things through them. Sixteen friends in Hillsborough county visited the county farm at Wilton on Flower Mission Day laden with these precious offerings. They found box after box awaiting them as they alighted at the station, the express company having given them free transportation. To the three hundred inmates they gave each a bouquet, a banana, a card, some confectionery, and, best of all, a kind word and a hand pressure.

Mr. and Mrs. Libby, the new keepers, did their part toward making the day pleasant; they were courteous and kind to all. Dinner was served at noon, after which all assembled in the chapel for a meeting of praise and prayer. Friendship was the subject, and these unfortunate people were made to feel that there were friends all about them; but over and above all earthly friends was their Heavenly Friend, whose tender arm was ever about them, and would remain so to the end. Mrs. Emily K. Jewett and Rev. D. W. Goodale spoke to them. The children sang to entertain the guests in a very pleasant manner. Mrs. L. W. Goodale, superintendent of this department, speaks of the day as one full of pleasure, as every kindness they tried to show these less fortunate brothers and sisters was truly appreciated.

NEWS.

The Salem W. C. T. U. are rejoicing at the return to health from the gates of death of their dear sister and secretary. She is of great value to the work, and could ill be spared. They thank God that the sister is permitted to continue the good work. There is an increased interest in the temperance work in that town. Encouraged by the white-ribbon women, who ever advocate social purity, the selectmen have closed several houses of ill repute. This union has recently received a new member over eighty years of age. She is not able to attend, but wishes to show her colors on the right side.

We are always glad to report a flourishing L. T. L., for with the children our greatest work must be done, and such a tale is wafted upon the breeze from Salem. It would aid our cause if all the good work in the local unions could be reported in these letters.

A silver medal contest was held in Candia, at which time Carrie Evans won the medal.

In a little country town among the hills. seven miles from Concord, our capitol, nestles a wide-spread cottage under five mammoth maples. A large canopy at one side of the house shelters the occupants from the summer's heat as they rest in the old-fashioned high-backed chairs, or swing in the hammock. In the front hall stands a flax wheel and in either front room may be found open fireplaces with brass andirons. Here you have a picture of the home in which on August 25, a temperance entertainment was held. All the children in the neighborhood took part and there a fine program of dialogues, singing, speaking, etc., was carried out. The grounds were illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and many people came to listen and express their approbation. A fire danced in the fireplace for those unused to the night air. The moon looked down benignly upon our little band of temperance workers, and many wished us Godspeed.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

Everything in nature is at the zenith of its glory, and surely the north and the west of this magnificent state are aglow with the educational blessing of the summer assemblies. Hackley Park, right on the shore of Lake Michigan, might be called new, as regards time, but nature and art seemed wonderfully finished and beautiful to those whose eyes greeted it this summer. Our Mary T. Lathrap Hall, one of the three state buildings contemplated, was furnished, ready at the hour of opening. A goodly number of our brainiest women were present, and this home-school, beautiful in flowers, pictures, furnishings and location was formally dedicated to the work of the W. C. T. U. and given to the state.

At Hackley Park is one of the finest auditoriums in the country; in this building the address was given by Prof. Samuel Dickie; Mrs. Bolton Gordon, of Chicago, sang the solo, "Jerusalem the City Beautiful"; Mrs. Maybee recited with effectiveness, "How they Built the Church at Kahorn." Then repairing to Mary T. Lathrap Hall, brief dedicatory services were held. Rev. Mr. Cogshall said: "Whatever calls down the displeasure of the Christian womanhood of this country is doomed." Mrs. Lathrap closed the services with these words: "We dedicate this Hall to God, and Home and Native Land." Her closing and dedicatory prayer was strong, earnest and uplifting, and we felt at its close that our temple beautiful is on the ground as another agency for waging warfare. Among the flowers sent was a large bunch of water lilies from a white-ribboner in Ohio.

The program as planned was carried out. The subject of the opening symposium was "A school in methods, and a school of methods." Mrs. Benjamin gave each day a parliamentary drill. Mrs. Voorhies says, "Everything in and about the building is lovely; even the crooked tree which overshadows the upper veranda is so crooked and ugly as to be considered handsome. A lady artist from Iowa came one morning and begged the privilege of making a sketch of it."

Our editor, Mrs. Parish, says of Hackley Park assembly program that it furnished first-class talent for its opening season. The first Sunday sermon was preached by Bishop Ninde. Among the lecturers and preachers were Drs. J. C. Floyd, R. S. Martin, Bolton, Cogshall, Peiffer and Driver.

Mrs. B. H. Badley, late of India, spoke on missionary day. At the dedication of the I. O. G. T. Hall, Rev. Beauchamp delivered an eloquent address. There were about four thousand people on the grounds on this day. One who planned much for this result, Rev. Reid, had been called of God, but words of praise seem due to the untiring efforts of Rev. Cogshall, Mr. Hackley and the brave planners who have made possible this summer "meeting place."

Our vacation is about over, and we, of Michigan, are "going to school" in earnest this winter, reading law, having parliamentary drills and studying the constitution for an intelligent use of municipal suffrage that has come to us. Our state superintendent of franchise says for a course of reading take "The Citizen and the Neighbor," "Our Government, How it grew, What it does and How it does it," "Our Country."

At a meeting at Rose City the Hon. A. I. Rose was invited in and presented with a bouquet in recognition of his services in behalf of the woman suffrage bill of the state of Michigan.

Our editor of state paper has instituted a monthly catechism, This is one question and answer: "When is a city or village under municipal law? When the legislature of the state grants it a charter, which contains certain powers, and so it will be our own fault if we do not go to the ballot-box next spring and vote intelligently for the best ruling."

From the second district, Adrian, comes an account of a band of eighteen young men named Adrian W. C. T. U. and so advertised on the head of their big drum. The writer of this item adds, "I wonder if there is another union in the state, or even nation, which is so honored." After the band tournament recently held at Hudson, they went to the home of Mrs. Bradley, our superintendent of narcotics, and serenaded her.

We are especially fortunate in our superintendent of literature, Mrs. Humphrey, who also lives here. On her recent visit to Chicago on the Midway Plaisance she was able to converse with the natives of seven different countries so fluently that one of them asked her, "Can you read English?"

From the first district comes the news that the white-ribboners of Plymouth were the guests of the Canton W. C. T. U. The occasion was a farewell to Mrs. Voorhies, who this fall moves to Ann Arbor. It was a pleasant gathering and an uncommon feature was the presence of two members seated side by side, aged respectively eighty-four and ninety-two years.

From Lansing in the sixth district we hear that the W. C. T. U. joins with the Voters' Union for the study of the woman's suffrage bill and the new city charter, aiming to be intelligent voters.

The calls for the following district conventions are out: First, seventh and tenth and twelfth, all meeting before National.

A well reported account of a county convention comes from the recording secretary of Ottawa County. It was held at Lamont. All the officers and thirty delegates were present; reports were encouraging and abounded with new ideas helpful to local unions. Two new unions; added membership, thirty-four; fifteen departments duplicated; seven medal contests held during the year, were some of the items. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin was present, gave the evening address and presented the medal at the contest, won by Miss Aleta Pinther. The faithful county president, Mrs. U. E. T. Rork, was reëlected.

The ninth district convention was held at Big Rapids, the home of the retiring president whose wise ruling had so endeared her to all that they speak of her administration as the reign of good "Queen Lucy." The convention was welcomed in behalf of W's and Y's. Fifty-five voting delegates were in attendance. They have eleven new unions this year and two new L. T. L's. All the reports were encouraging, even the treasurer's! Dr. Anna Shaw was present at all sessions; she gave two talks each day and an evening address upon "The Needs of the Hour." On the second evening Marion B. Baxter gave the address, subject, "Bird's eye View of the Situation." Mrs. Morehouse, the president, gave a résumé of the work for the past seventeen years, ten of which she has been president. She was presented as a token of love and respect by the district with a case of ten souvenir spoons, upon each the name of a county, two with the dates 1883—1893. It was also stated that the room of the ninth district, at Mary T. Lathrap Hall, is to be called the Morehouse room. The convention closed with a grand gold medal contest, by a class of ten.

The twelfth district, living as they do in the mining districts under the wave of depression, are yet the banner district in fulfilled pledges to our "summer home."

Since my last writing Michigan has held an L. T. L. convention. If you knew our superintendent you would not be surprised. It was held at Wyandotte—one hundred and fifty went from Detroit—were met at the depot by district superintendent, Mrs. Rowley, and her able corp of assistants from Company W. Sixteen Legions were represented. The decorations were telling, one motto being, "The Gin-mills Grind the Boys." At dinner each plate had a bouquet tied with white ribbon, pansies being the flower.

Before the afternoon session there was a parade through the town by which its twenty-two saloons and two breweries must know their time is short. Two prizes had been offered for the best essays on the "Effects of Tobacco on Mankind." The first prize, a solid silver W. C. T. U. spoon was given Miss Wheeler, of Detroit. The second, the book, "Dr. Martha Scarborough," went to Miss Adair, of Wyandotte.

In our September issue of Michigan Union we have a president's column. Mrs. Lathrap says: "At the first preaching service in our new state building four rose for prayer and said they made choice of Christ as a personal Saviour. God keep them to the end." The closing thought is:

Heart to heart quickly, the battle is long.
Hand to hand closely, the contest grows strong;
On and on bravely, for night cometh down,
Only the faithful at last wear the crown.

MARYLAND.

Noon-day religious services at headquarters, Baltimore, have been held daily throughout the summer, and other work has been quietly carried on there as usual at this season.

An effort in Baltimore for more effective work by the various moral and reform agencies of the city was inaugurated there some time since. Representatives from thirty-three of these agencies, the W. C. T. U. included, met in conference and subsequently organized "The Union for Public Good." The purposes of the union as stated, are "to oppose immorality as it exists; to present reforms that will give better moral conditions, and to assist the already organized societies and institutions that are conducting work of this kind along special lines. Members must represent some body of men or women who are working toward a higher moral life." The movement, it is said, grew out of a suggestion to open a headquarters for the workingmen of the city, where they could seek employment and have the use of a reading room and other advantages. Considerable interest has been awakened in the movement and much good is expected to result from this union of forces. Various Protestant religious denominations, two Hebrew congregations, the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland, the Charity Organization Society, the Knights of Labor, the Federation of Labor, the Sunday School Union and the Maryland Tract Society were among the bodies represented at the conference which resulted in the organization. This gathering, it is stated, was one of the most representative ever held in Baltimore.

According to the Rev. Dr. Weld, a prominent worker in Baltimore, and one of the originators of the movement, the association should make a most careful study of the problems of life which are presented in our great cities, gathering from every source and every point of view careful and intelligent data regarding these problems, and then present these facts to the public with suggestions as to the method of treating the evils specified. "This association will be of immense use," says Dr. Weld, "if it acts as an organized, intelligent inspiration. If it should mistake itself in imagining it to be the public conscience, the police or the law, it will be a failure, but if it clings to its purpose of inspiring men to intelligent action in regard to the problems of an everyday life it will be a lasting benefit to the community. It should be as broad as truth and as wide as humanity."

Based upon this foundation, with the fullest and strongest emphasis upon the power of God in His own universe, in and with His own creations, success must result.

As the Salvation Army, it is reported, is discussing the introduction of "slumming" and rescue work, and a food and shelter department for the aid of the poor of Baltimore, the prospects are bright for more than the usual amount of philanthropic work in this city of monuments the coming winter.

A grand temperance demonstration and basket picnic at the fair grounds of Frederick, August 31, is the last effort in this line of work of which we have news.

M. A. L.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A CHRISTIAN woman is wanted to do pastoral and general Christian work. Address Box 93, Englewood, Ill.

SUPERINTENDENTS of the work for soldiers and sailors in Florida, or any persons who know of work done in that department, are earnestly requested to send such information to the state superintendent, Anna B. Rainey, St. Augustine, Fla., in order that the state may send a complete report to the National.

MRS. JULIA B. COLE, of Walla Walla, was made president of East Washington W. C. T. U. at the state convention recently. Mrs. Nellie Cort, of Cortland, was elected to the position of corresponding secretary; Mrs. Jennie L. Green, Medical Lake, recording secretary, and Mrs. Lucy A. Berry, of Walla Walla, treasurer.

MICHIGAN has just held its first L. T. L. district convention, and the state superintendent writes: "A brighter, better convention I never attended among the W's. Our graduates are beginning to be enthused over the work. They decided to study for the seal of the League of True Legioners, and to try for a state organization."

ONE of the principal addresses on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the Christian church in Augusta, Kan., was made by Mrs. Sophia F. Grubb, state president of Kansas, who was invited to do so by the pastor in charge, Rev. Lemon. That she was a member of another denomination also illustrated the dawning of the kingdom when there will be peace on earth and good-will toward men.

THE eighth Demorest silver medal contest was held under the auspices of the Rounds W. C. T. U. at Oconee, Ill., August 22, in the Methodist church. Five members of the class were young ladies, to one of whom, Miss Della Jacobs, the medal was awarded. The audience, as usual, was large. Miss Mary Mahon met with the union August 18, and addressed a large audience at the church in the evening.

MRS. SOPHIA F. GRUBB, National superintendent of work among foreigners, and president of Kansas W. C. T. U., will return to her former home near St. Louis, to live, as soon as the state convention is over. This is greatly to the regret of the Kansas women who are devoted to her. Mrs. Grubb regrets giving up the presidency of the state as this action will compel her to do, but the family afflictions in the loss of their son and daughter in the past year have made herself and husband look with longing eyes to the home of their youth where their relatives live and where their dead lie buried. Mrs. Grubb's address will be Kirkwood, Mo., after October 1.

MRS. G. C. SMITH, of Springfield, Ill., is well known to white-ribboners the world over as the author of "Woman in Sacred Song." Mrs. Smith, who is so admirably prepared to treat this subject, was invited by Mrs. Governor Eagle, who represents Arkansas on the board of managers, to lecture on her favorite subject, sacred music, in the assembly hall of the Woman's Building, Columbian Exposition on August 16.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN desires to express her grateful appreciation for the great number of letters, tender and sympathetic, that have come to her from every part of the country during the last month. In the whirl of conventions, traveling every day and speaking every night, it is impossible for her to reply to each personally, and her friends are requested to accept in this way an acknowledgment for their kind messages.

THE Thayer county convention was held in Belvidere, Neb., August 24 and 25. Mrs. C. E. Howe, of St. Joseph, Mo., president of the sixth W. C. T. U. district of Missouri, was in attendance and rendered valuable assistance throughout the entire convention. The evening of the 25th she addressed an appreciative audience on a theme of a character that ought to give an "arrest of thought" to the voters of our commonwealth.

MRS. PUTNAM, who is seventy-one years old, just held a very successful county convention in Thayer county, Nebraska. Mother Putnam, as she is familiarly called by all Nebraska white-ribboners, is president of the fifth district, also president of two counties, and notwithstanding her age she travels all over her territory. She is always ready to hold semi-annual conventions as well as to attend nearly all other conventions held in her district, lecturing as she goes.

MRS. JOSEPHINE R. NICHOLS, who is devoting herself to platform work, has filled a large number of engagements at Chautauqua assemblies during July and August. Beginning at Chautauqua, N. Y., she has given from one to four lectures at Bay View, Mich., Lakeside, O., Indiana State Chautauqua, Eagle Lake, Ind., the Western Chautauqua, Island Park, Ind., and camp-meetings in Ohio and Indiana. The ethical course of lectures given to women has proved to be quite as popular as the regular platform lectures.

THE Young People's Christian Union is another attempt to solve a problem of city life by the substitution of a home for boarding houses, with their proverbial lack of cheer. In this city a fine residence, with parlors, reading room, lawn, shade trees, etc., has been secured, and the opportunity is offered for subscriptions and memberships to help in the starting of what bids fair to be a self-supporting enterprise very early in its history. "Ladies and gentlemen will enjoy equal privileges," the management says, with emphasis. In other respects it is modeled after the plans of the Y. M. C. A. All who are interested in this line of work are invited to correspond with the special membership secretary, Mr. E. W. Dunn, 500 La Salle Ave., Chicago. Mr. Dunn will gladly aid in the starting of similar work in other cities.

AN interested Illinois district superintendent of narcotics writes as follows: "Your item on Narcotics in THE UNION SIGNAL of August 31 is timely. More than three years' study of the subject and clippings collected meantime from current newspapers convinces me we have an insidious, powerful foe to combat. I divide the subject into five heads—narcotic beverages, narcotic medicines, anæsthetics, opium and tobacco, and have prepared charts to illustrate it. The W. C. T. U. is not exactly asleep concerning narcotics, but the unions should be pledged against the use of them, and the excuse—medicine—must be removed if we would make proper headway against intemperance. Miss Willard is far in advance of most of her constituents in that she recommended adding opium to the pledge in 1887. In reality, several of the narcotics should be added to it, but so long as the white ribbon army clings to them for medicines there is no hope of doing this."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE IOWA UNIONS.

The words in our constitution regarding representation at state convention, that each union is entitled to a delegate for "every twenty members, or fraction thereof," means this: That every union having paid state dues for twenty members, or any number under twenty, if three or more, is entitled to one delegate; dues paid for any number over twenty, up to forty, entitles it to two delegates, and so on; also every L. T. L. having paid state dues is entitled to a delegate, who must, however, be a W. C. T. U. woman.

RAILROAD RATES.

To White-Ribboners of the United States:

Your secretary of railroad rates for the approaching National Convention to be held in Chicago, October 18 to 21, has been investigating the matter of reduced rates for those who wish to attend that and the World's Convention.

The World's Fair excursion rates are the only rates, and the best, also, that can be obtained—are better than in previous years. These are:

On all western roads, one fare for the round trip, plus $2. This rate is good on all days and all trains and until November 15.

All eastern roads give a one fare rate, tickets good for ten days. This fare is only given on certain days. The dates are different on different roads, and must be ascertained from your local agents, as it is impossible to announce them all through THE UNION SIGNAL.

As it is desirable and more pleasant for delegates from the same state to come over the same road, you are requested to write the presidents of your respective states for information concerning the route selected for your state delegation.

MARY G. HAY,
Secretary R. R. Rates.

W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION.

Will every reader of this article, who is interested in coffee houses, please send to me at once the address and facts concerning any coffee house in the United States of which he or she may know? I refer to those which have been instituted wholly or in part by the W. C. T. U. Travelers are asking for a directory and it is very desirable to prepare such a help to be placed in every coffee house in the land. If the necessary information is sent to me very soon we may hope to issue such a directory before the October Convention.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM. A popular exposition of the Gospel according to Matthew, by C. H. Spurgeon. Introduction by Arthur T. Pierson.

This is the last work from the pen of the great man whose simple, yet powerful exposition of the Gospels has been so gladly heard and read. In the above volume every paragraph is bright with the author's individuality, but brighter still because of the permeating thoughts of Christ, whose life covered and inspired that of His disciple. The book will be welcome as Spurgeon's latest and best work on earth.

The Baker & Taylor Co., Publishers, 740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

THE FIRST MILLENNIAL FAITH, by the author of NOT ON CALVARY, published by Saalfield & Fitch, 12 Bible House, New York City. Part I of this book is a very interesting account of the successive popes of the Romish church from Pope John XIII to Urban II, who instituted the first Crusade. Part II is a compilation of the opinions of the early apostolic fathers of the church used by the author to overthrow the "satisfaction" theory of the atonement originated by the monk Anselm at the close of the first century of the church, and to establish the writer's theory of the life-long sacrifice of the Son of God as the means of our redemption; a declaration of unqualified love of God for His creatures, attributing sin, suffering and death to the malicious workings of the devil. Here and there the author lays himself open to the charge of being unorthodox, but otherwise the book contains many good things.

Part Two of THE BOOK OF THE FAIR, published by the Bancroft Company, is as rich in material and illustration as its predecessor. Containing the history of the growth of the World's Columbian Exposition, it carries the reader through chapters three, four and part of five, the latter containing matter on the "Exposition Management, Congress Auxiliary and Finances." Aside from the valuable information this work contains the illustrations are unsurpassed as artistic triumphs. They comprise views of the buildings, glimpses of interiors, realistic photographs of foreigners in native dress and engaged in native occupations, together with portraits of the leaders of this world-wide enterprise, averaging three illustrations to the page. The separate numbers of THE BOOK OF THE FAIR so are arranged that the twenty-five parts of forty pages each may be bound in one complete volume. It is a rare book of historic and artistic value.

The Bancroft Company, Auditorium building, Chicago.

SEAWARD. An elegy on the death of Thomas Williams Parsons, the translator of Dante's "Divine Comedy." This beautiful poem, whose spirit is as rare as a breath from the sea, "beyond the dunes where blue cloud-shadows run," is by Richard Hovey. Parsons was a friend of Longfellow, and Richard Hovey himself was the poet of Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn." The poem begins with a view of the marshes of Nova Scotia, seeing which the poet seems to be looking upon the coast of Marshfield and Scituate near which Parsons had his summer home:

"The tide is in the marshes, Kingscroft fades;
It is not Minas there across the lea;
But I am standing under pilgrim shades
Far off where Scituate lapses to the sea.
And he, my elder brother in the muse,
The poet of the Charles and Italy,
Stands by my side, Song's gentle, shy recluse."

Others are remembered in the exquisite requiem—if such it may be called; relating to Whittier, who died but a few days after Parsons, he says:

"Two rooms are vacant in the House of Speech."

In referring to Oliver Wendell Holmes, "One whose smile is gentler for its memories"; Joaquin Miller is called, "The lone voice of Arizonian song"; James Whitcomb Riley, "Far stretching Indiana's melodist," and Longfellow, "The mild historian of the Sudbury Inn." The poem is noble in conception and stately in measure, and is one to be remembered. Who can resist the spirit of these lines:

"Sea of the lapsing wail of waves! O left
Of many lovers! Lone, lamenting sea!
Desolate, prone, disheveled, lost, sublime!
Unquelled and reckless! mad, despairing sea!
Wail, for I wait—wail, ancient dirge of Time!"

SEPTEMBER ADVANCE GUARD.

The Advance Guard for September has echoes from the Temperance Congresses to which every Senior of the L. T. L. should listen.

Reports from the Pennsylvania and Wisconsin L. T. L. conventions are of especial interest, followed by two messages from The Cottage, Reigate, Surrey, Eng. Miss Gordon's letter is accompanied by one from Miss Willard, and the L. T. L's will want to read every word from their "affectionate comrade and elder (ly) sister."

This number contains the third chapter of that delightful story, "The Tables Turned," a report from the World's Youth's Congress, held at the Art Institute, July 17.

Miss Guernsey's instructive articles upon the White City have a feature this month unique and valuable. A few weeks ago a postal card was addressed to many prominent men and women asking a reply to this question: "What are the most important lessons to be learned by the youth of America from the World's Columbian Exposition?" In the September Advance Guard you will find some of the many prompt and kindly replies which have been received by the editor.

Remember, The Advance Guard costs but 50 cents per annum. Can you not send us the name of one new subscriber?

SEPTEMBER 28.

Our L. T. L. workers will please not forget that one of the plans adopted by the National for the Harvest Home celebration is the giving of a card to each child as a souvenir of the day. Of these we make two special offers. Note.

1. Cards with an autograph message from Miss Willard. Per 10, 15 cents.

2. Souvenir cards that have been prepared expressly for this Columbian year. They are of a delicate blue—the L. T. L. color—and contain a beautifully embossed picture of the Willard Fountain, together with the pledge in gold letters. We think them the most beautiful pledge cards now in stock, and we place them on the market for the first time for the Harvest Home card. But the price is even lower than that of other pledge cards.

Per 100, 60 cents. Send a two-cent stamp for sample.

BOOKS.

Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer.

By REV. S. B. SHAW. Cloth, $1.

This book is neither doctrinal nor denominational, yet distinctly Christian. Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer.

The Well-Dressed Woman.

By HELEN GILBERT ECOB. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.

This is a work which appeals to every intelligent mother. It is valuable in its exposition both in text and illustrations, of the artistic ideal and rules of dress, and is full of the best of advice for school-girls, young women at college and young mothers. Miss Willard and the whole corps of earnest workers in the W. C. T. U. are very hearty in their indorsement of this book, and it should be in the hands of every sensible woman.

Bright-Eyes

Or, Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon. Arranged by ALICE M. GUERNSEY. Price, 50 cents.

This pretty little quarto is ingeniously devised, so as to suggest to children, by means of outline pictures, the work of searching the Scriptures in order to find the passages which the vignettes chime in with. It will be of service to many a mother, or older sister, or brother, on a Sunday afternoon, in the endeavor to teach or interest the little ones.—Central Christian Advocate.

A Young Woman Journalist.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD. Cloth, $1.

A book designed by the author to stimulate other young women to "be something," to make the most of their opportunities.

A Woman's Evangel.

By EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH. Price cloth, $1.25

"This book will interest and benefit many readers. It has some literary merit, but its special feature is the fact that it is written to explain and advocate the various kinds of effort in behalf of total abstinence which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is making. The many members of, or sympathizers with, that influential organization, will read it with approval, and so will others."—The Congregationalist.

Columbus, and What He Found.

By MRS. MARY H. HULL. Price $1.

This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. There is already a large demand for this unique child's history among parents and teachers who desire to answer authentically all questions and controversies which come to the ears of children. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home-nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm.

Child's Christ Tales.

By ANDREA HOFER. Price $1.

In teaching little folks the Christ example by story, no book will help so much as this. It is written from the kindergarten standpoint, and full of deep, sweet truths simply told.

Around the World With Jesus.

By CHARLES A. CRITTENTON. This charming booklet describes the Holy Land and contains a sketch of Florence Crittenton Missions by Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press of World's W. C. T. U. Price, 35 cents.

As is well known by white-ribboners, Mr. Crittenton, the famous evangelist, already largely supports eight Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls, and at the Denver convention pledged $5,000 to the W. C. T. U. for founding five more missions under their auspices. These are now being established, and every cent realized from the sale of "AROUND THE WORLD WITH JESUS" will be given to the Florence Crittenton Missions, and every one whose heart throbs for our erring girls may aid the grand work for their redemption by circulating this little souvenir. It contains beautiful pictures of Mr. Crittenton, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, and Mother Prindle, Matron of New York Mission, all white-ribboners, and it cannot fail to interest all.

A Literary Guide for Home and School,

By MARY ALICE CALLER, teacher of English classics in Alabama Conference Female College. Price $1.

The Literary Guide is the outgrowth of a need wisely considered, and in the hands of parents, teachers and friends must prove a valuable aid in the guidance of literary tastes.

"LIKE A LETTER FROM HOME."

Among the innumerable newspapers sent to Miss Willard by friends from all parts of the world, those who are with her say that she constantly recurs to the request, "Give me our dear old 'SIG'! It is like a letter from home—the great white-ribbon home."

NOTICE!!!

Will subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL kindly notice date on the yellow label which indicates expiration of subscription?

See if the date is CORRECT, and if INCORRECT notify us at once, as all bills are made to correspond with the date on the label.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight 'to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

FROM THE REST ISLANDER.

Mary Hull's "Columbus."

I think this the best book of its kind, and the best kind. Nobly conceived, faithfully wrought, germane to the noblest subject, and appertaining to the greatest, truest, wholesomest, hopefulest public children.

And so, appropriate to any mind from juvenile to senile of exquisite proportion. Milk of letters, perfect food, carbonates of history, to make fat and fuel, nitrates of science, to make muscle, phosphates of biography, to make bone, brain, nerve, purpose, endurance, patience, faith, manliness, womanliness, Divineness.

The 2d edition of Columbus ought to be revised, by striking out page 179, and introduced as the anniversary classic into every school in Columbia.

Signal Notes.

THE Indian government in Burmah has prohibited the possession or use of opium in Lower Burmah, thus depriving itself voluntarily of a large income. It has always been prohibited in Upper Burmah.

No hospital for the insane exists in China, although the number of these unfortunates is large, but the Chinese are in the habit of putting them in cages. An American medical missionary proposes starting a hospital where the poor can be treated free.

THE Atlantic Monthly, in an article on the saloon in politics, admits that although our American system of government and education is theoretically sound, our political schools are saloons; that a candidate to be successful must make himself solid with the saloon power.

UNTIL recently all marriages in England were celebrated before noon, the reason for which law was that the parties might be sober. It used to be the custom to dine at noon and, as it was the proper thing to drink the health of bride and groom, frequently all parties would appear at the altar intoxicated.

IT has been proved by tables showing relative space given by four leading New York papers in one day in 1881 and the corresponding day in 1893, that the quality of news in our papers is deteriorating. "Gossip" has grown from one-half column to sixteen and three quarters columns in one paper, and from one to twenty-three in another.

AN Englishman conceived the idea of bringing the caste feeling in India to bear on temperance work. He interested a Mahunt who is the official superior of many castes. He in turn interested the headsmen of the castes, and as a result it has been decided at several meetings to drink no bhang nor other intoxicant at any feast. The pledge is binding on men, women and children alike.

THE remark is sometimes ventured that foreign missionaries have an easy time, and no self-sacrifice is needed. Last year the missionaries in a certain field found that retrenchment in the Home Board was necessary, so they voluntarily gave up two months' salary, and, leaving their regular work during the week went out to work at whatever they could find to do, some going into the harvest field as laborers.

GENERAL BOOTH'S orders to his soldiers in view of the cholera scare deserves attention through that or any other visitation of plague. After giving orders about food, etc., he says: "As far as possible keep a restful mind and a conscience void of offence to God and man. Be ready at all hours of the day and night, as you have opportunity, to minister to the sick and dying. Prove yourselves to be that which you profess to be—the servants of Jesus Christ and of all men."

SWITZERLAND leads the world in the direction of internationalism. The Universal Postal union was founded by its statesmen, and many other institutions of a similar character have headquarters in the capital, such as International Telegraph Congress, Railway Union, etc. The latter seems likely to play an important rôle in keeping peace in Europe, for it has secured the right to take merchandise or produce of one land in the cars of that land to any other over the roads of intermediate lands. The political leaders are said to be more favorable to Christian faith than in any other European country, and a remarkable Christian spirit breathes in the last Swiss political annual.

A MISSIONARY enterprise in Cuba in which Mr. J. S. Paine, of the Baptist church, the well-known furniture dealer in Boston, is interested, has been reported recently as "prospering finely." A theater has been purchased for eighty thousand dollars, and is used as a church; and these good friends are trying to buy the opera house opposite, in which they will open a school. If any country in the world needs such ministrations it is surely Cuba. Mr. Paine is well known as a life-long Sunday-school worker of most ingenious and successful methods, and has now had in his Sunday morning and Sunday afternoon school with boys and girls and their parents what he calls a "Christian Band," a weekly attendance of from 1,000 to 15,000 persons.

CHEAP EXCURSIONS TO THE WEST.

An exceptionally favorable opportunity for visiting the richest and most productive sections of the west and northwest will be afforded by the series of low rate harvest excursions which have been arranged by the North-Western Line. Tickets for these excursions will be sold on August 22d, September 12th and October 10th, 1893, to points in Northwestern Iowa, Western Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Manitoba, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, and will be good for return passage within twenty days from date of sale. Stopover privileges will be allowed on going trip in territory to which the tickets are sold. For further information, call on or address Ticket Agents of connecting lines. Circulars giving rates and detailed information will be mailed, free, upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western Railway, Chicago.

Environment.

The influence in the home of happy, cheerful and healthful surroundings is scarcely to be over-estimated, as applying both to the young and growing members, as well as to those upon whom the strain and wear of life's burdens rest. With the rapid advance in sanitary skill, perhaps nothing is proving more conducive to this desirable attainment than the comfort and luxury afferded by the Mosely Self-Heating Folding Bath Tub, which is so rapidly finding a place in the homes of the land, which appreciate the force of this statement.

A substantial evidence of interest is found in the expressions coming from the many who constantly throng the exhibit of these goods at the World's Fair, in Section N, Block 4, Ground Floor, by The Mosely Folding Bath Tub Co., stating their satisfaction in finding the goods there displayed, and having opportunity afforded to confirm their favorable judgment by a personal examination of their merits. Probably none of the progressive ideas of this prolific age is proving a greater boon to humanity than this unique, attractive, and, at the same time, thoroughly practical invention. We learn from the manufacturers that their sales are fast increasing, and the goods giving the most gratifying satisfaction, receiving the indorsement of the most prominent sanitary supply houses, as well as the hearty praise of those who put them in their homes. Our readers, in visiting the World's Fair, will be well repaid for a call at this exhibit.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Read the announcement of DAILY UNION SIGNAL on page 14, cut out the coupon, fill out as directed and send the same with twenty-five cents to the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago. Prompt attention to this will enable us to prepare the wrappers before the Convention and insure our subscribers the daily reception of this indispensable and accurate report of the two great meetings mentioned above.

THE CALL TO PRAYER.

This is the last opportunity to call attention to the special prayer seasons for our coming conventions. As has been previously announced, Saturday, September 30, is the time set for the local union prayer-meetings, and Sunday, October 1, as the day for sermons and prayers for blessings on our work. The coöperation of pastors and Christian workers is a very important element in the success of our conventions.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Excursions are crowding into Chicago.

Reports from the Cherokee strip tell of great hardships endured by settlers.

A Buenos Ayres dispatch announces an alarming revolution in the Argentine Republic.

The coroner's jury on the Illinois railway accident hold the engineer and flagman responsible.

Honolulu dispatches tell of the unveiling of a statue to Father Damien, at the leper settlement.

No advance has been made by the United States Senate in its discussion of the silver repeal bill.

The latest advices from Rio Janeiro state that negotiations are pending between the rebel fleet and the city.

Director General Davis has tabooed lottery schemes in Jackson Park, because, he says, "they belittle the Fair."

Seven of the eleven persons arrested for complication in the Italian bank scandals have been committed for trial at Rome.

Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, reviewed the Dutch troops at The Hague Thursday, and presented them with new stands of colors.

An attempt was made on the life of General Martinez Campos, the Spanish commander at Barcelona, Sunday, by an anarchist bomb thrower.

The earl and countess of Aberdeen have sailed for Canada where the former will assume the office of governor-general to which he has been appointed by the Queen.

The maneuvers of the Austrian army concluded at Guens, Thursday, with a sham battle witnessed by Emperors William, of Germany, and Francis Joseph, of Austria, and their suites.

Another train wreck by collision, the result of a brakeman's carelessness in turning a switch on the Wabash road near Kingsbury, Ind., caused the death of eleven passengers and the injury of over fifty others.

A great mob at Roanoke, Va., Thursday, took a colored prisoner who was awaiting trial for assault upon a poor old white lady, and lynched him. The mayor called out the militia, and in the firing that ensued eight of the rioters were killed and twenty-seven wounded.

THE first evening of the National Convention, Wednesday, October 18, will be devoted to the addresses of welcome and response. The second evening will be occupied by two minute speeches from the vice-presidents. The committee of resolutions will report on Friday evening, and Saturday will be given, as usual, to the Y's.

MISS WILLARD wishes us to acknowledge the official resolutions received by her from state, county and local unions, and to say that she was especially touched by those forwarded from our white ribbon sisters of the Indian Territory, and by the children of the state Loyal Temperance Legion of her own dear "childhood's state", as she always calls it, Wisconsin.

IF any of the delegates or visitors to the National Convention who desire rooms reserved at Brunswick Hotel will communicate with Miss Pugh, giving exact dates and stating what kind of room, a considerable reduction in prices can be secured in case a large number apply. This house is directly opposite the Art Palace. The terms given on page 12 refer to rooms, i. e., two in room $2.50, means $1.25 each.

AMONG the speakers in the Willard Hall meetings of the past week was Miss Stephenson of the Wesleyan Deaconess Institute, London, better known as "Sister Dora." Her work is entirely among little children gathered from the slums and by-ways of the great city, and she won the hearts of a large audience by the simple eloquence with which she told "ower true" tales of the rescue of little ones from the mighty Niagara of vice into which the sins of fathers and mothers would plunge them.

FOR the first time in thirty years the tide of immigration is eastward instead of westward. An Atlantic steamship line, which carries a large number of steerage passengers, announces that it is taking at least two foreigners back to Europe for every one it is bringing here. These returning emigrants are chiefly Italians and Scandinavians who are affected by the hard times of this country and perceive that it would be much cheaper for them to live in Europe until prosperity returns to their adopted land.

THE Evangelical Alliance Congress mentioned in our last issue does not meet until October 8 and holds an entire week's session, adjourning just before our World's W. C. T. U. Convention. White ribbon women who can find it convenient will be amply repaid by coming to the city a few days in advance of their own Convention to attend this "school of applied Christianity," where the most practical possible religious questions will be discussed. Rev. Josiah Strong, our good temperance friend, is the secretary.

ON September 23, John G. Woolley was the speaker at Central Music Hall, in one of the great Moody meetings, which are as much a feature in the World's Fair program for Chicago as the Fair itself. Mr. Woolley's subject was "The Responsibility of the Government toward its Citizenship." The report that comes to this office is that this speech is the most thrilling presentation of the cruel liquor traffic that the present decade has heard; that the speaker "broke his record" on this special occasion; that the power of language to reveal, to probe, to enforce responsibility upon human will was a revelation even to platform hangers-on. The audience was wax under the sound of Mr. Woolley's voice, as almost with cheers it responded to his picture of the citizen-Christian and a Christian government. The state and the church that does not yield to the drawings of Christ so "lifted up" might almost fear the doom of Sodom. A hundred such fearless men to present the truth in the pulpit would make the ballot-box sacred as the altar, and God in government the motto of a living republic.

LEST a misapprehension may result from the mention of Mrs. Lathrap's health in our last issue we desire to state more explicitly that while our "white ribbon Daniel Webster" has not been doing quite as much platform work in the past year as usual, she is by no means an invalid, as will testify her seventeen strong addresses in the East during August and her constant application during the summer at Hackley Park, Mich., the headquarters of Michigan W. C. T. U. Mrs. Lathrap's health is much better than it was a year ago and she hopes for complete restoration in a short time. She will be in attendance upon the Missouri state convention next week.

"HARVEST HOME" has a ringing, pleasant sound, but its meaning is far more significant than its sound. Our temperance harvest home is a time of ingathering of members and it should be made a jubilee day in all local unions. Concerted action brings success. It is not always easy to ask for reinforcements to our work, but a special time of observation furnishes a special opportunity. At such a time we can approach a lady whom we have coveted for our work and say, "This is harvest home day for temperance. I have set out to secure three (or five) members to our W. C. T. U., and I want you for one. Will you not come in and be one of us on this jubilee day?"

"THE Licenses Insurance Corporation and Guarantee Fund, Limited" is the latest device of the licensed victuallers in England, whose business is threatened by the Direct Veto Bill, now pending in the English Parliament. Continuance of a license is insured "where it shall have been forfeited by arbitrary decision on public grounds, or through unavoidable disturbances, brawls or crimes on the part of the customers." Conceive of such an insurance company for any other business! Note the frank admission that "brawls and crimes" on the part of customers are part and parcel of the trade, and that the penalties thereof are to be insured against! No more thorough indictment of alcohol in commerce, customs, politics and law need be asked for by temperance advocates than is afforded in this miserable little insurance circular, which fifty years from now will be a curiosity in some museum, for our absent editor intends to send it to the Woman's Temple in Chicago, to be placed in its "collection."

AN excellent plan has been adopted by the National Prohibition press bureau, whose headquarters are at 10 East 14th Street, New York City, for introducing into the Demorest contest system medals for original compositions. Three classes of original productions are admitted as follows: First, For the words of a temperance or prohibition song, not to exceed four verses of eight lines, with chorus if desired. Second, For the best dramatic recitation on temperance or Prohibition, not to exceed one thousand words. Third, For the best short story of not more than fifteen hundred words on temperance or prohibition. For each of these a solid gold medal is given. This will not in any way interfere with Mr. Demorest's generous plan for recitation contests which will be carried on as usual. We quote from the circular: "It is intended to make this system self-sustaining and in this way spread before the masses the truths concerning the liquor traffic. It gives an opportunity to thousands of contestants who are debarred by the rules from competing again for a Demorest medal, and will arouse a new interest in the contest work. Temperance workers throughout the country should at once take a hold of this system and push it. Young men and women, high school and college students, will deem it an honor to win these medals. Any live person can get up a contest. Secure the contestants, the place of meeting, send for the medal and the advertising matter, prepare good music, have a business-like chairman, competent judges and a good program, then success is certain."

THE HARVEST HOME OF THE W. C. T. U.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Oh, ye children, great and small,
Glad ones, sad ones, each and all,
Children good and children bad
Blue-eyed girl or brown-eyed lad;
Wee ones with your shining eyes,
Shy ones in your swift surprise,
Brave ones with your courage bold,
True ones with your hearts of gold;
From all lands where you hold sway
In your witching, winsome way,
Lift to-day triumphant voice;
Shout aloud, be glad, rejoice.

Children, on this gladsome morn
Years ago a child was born;
Just a little girl like you,
Hair of gold and eyes of blue;
Full of fun, of romp and play,
Happy all the livelong day;
In a home where love bore rule,
In great nature's kindly school.
God's wise purpose placed her life
Far from city's maddening strife;
In the country's hush and rest,
There He wrought this age's best.

Children, to that prairie home
All good fairies used to come;
Gifts they brought of rarest worth,
Thoughts of truest, heavenly birth,
Purposes both deep and vast,
Hopes that must through ages last;
Glimpses all of things ideal,
Vision swift to know them real;
Strength to love, to do, to bear,
Courage brave and insight rare;
Faith in God and faith in man,
Head to toil and heart to plan.

Children, when this deed was wrought
In the depths of God's great thought;
When this child a woman grew
God gave her a gift to you;
Gave her mind with riches rife;
Gave her love and gave her life;
Heart and brain and hand and will,
All her powers are for you still;
Aye, a bulwark strong she stands
For all children in all lands.
Do you wonder that I say
"Shout aloud for joy to-day."

Children, do you ask me how
You your gratitude may show?
Listen, God would have each life
Like hers, lived above earth's strife;
He would have each home a place
Where may shine His radiant grace.
But grave wrongs are in each land;
Men are fettered brain and hand;
God calls you the wrong to right,
Darkness drear to turn to light;
Thus you best can use His gift
As with her the world you lift.

Children, hark, I hear glad feet
Marching down the ages fleet.
Look, I see a glorious band,
Boys and girls march hand in hand.
Brave they are and pure and true,
Pledged God's holy will to do.
Oh, the future grows all bright,
As they turn glad eyes alight
With the love that cannot fail
Upon all this sick earth's ail.
Children, do I need to tell
This band is our L. T. L.?

Oh, ye children great and small,
Glad ones, sad ones, each and all,
This brave band has need of you;
Will you join with purpose true?
Will you help us in the strife
'Gainst all wrongs which wreck man's life?
By God's gift of leader true,
By His Gift of gifts for you;
By your hopes for years to come,
By your love of friends and home;
As "Thy kingdom come" you pray
Join our ranks this "Harvest Day."

THE SILENT WIRES.*

VI.

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

It is ten years since the great telegraphers' strike of 1893, and never since then have the busy wires been so long silent through the land.

Winifred Hilton still toils on in the Great Consolidated office, a capable worker in a good position; a leader in the Working Woman's Club, the friend and helper of many girls. She has no time for pettiness; hers is a broad and brave life, which demands no recognition of its bravery; not a lonely life, for she gives others daily of herself and her fullness. It is true that the humblest woman, with husband and babies at her side, may bring and the old weary wonder why these were denied her; but while she is not always happy, she still thanks God that He gave her work to do and strength and resolution to do it well.

"Thoughts which do often lie too deep for tears,"

It is long since Hattie Starkey's plump fingers have been pressed upon the signal keys, for she married a dry-goods salesman two years after Karl Heiser left her. She is growing wonderfully like her mother, who succumbed to the effects of misery and medicine soon after her daughter's marriage. Hattie's pretty face might still be pretty, were it not sadly marred by the lines fretting and discontent have drawn; Hattie has grown careless, too, in her dress and person, and old before her time with the care of her three children and untidy little household. Karl Heiser would congratulate himself with renewed vigor upon his timely withdrawal, could he see her now.

But Karl is scarcely regretted, though Hattie's blue eyes were red with weeping for him many weeks after their separation. Her husband is good-natured, not a bit domineering, like Karl Heiser, and Hattie holds the domestic reins. She is not unhappy, though she is fond of telling her friends how "terribly cut up" Karl was when she broke their engagement, and how foolish she was to do it, for Karl has a fine position in Washington, and has made "loads of money." "If one could only look ahead!" she sighs, usually in her husband's hearing, for it is well to remind him often that she might have done far better than to have married him. Yet she is probably happier than she would have been as Karl Heiser's wife.

Karl Heiser has not married. The dash of cynicism in his character ten years ago has developed rapidly and the phrase oftenest on his lips is, "A young man married is a young man marred." He has won money and position in Washington; his speeches at the club, his articles on economic questions are widely quoted; his society is eagerly sought by men and women; he is a popular man. Karl Heiser, leaning back in a soft easy-chair in his luxurious apartments, often commends his wisdom in keeping clear of all entanglements of love or marriage. Should he yield to passion, he could never keep his thoughts clear and his brain steady as now; domestic responsibilities would necessarily engross much of his time and thought: wifely exactions would hamper the freedom of his movements; baby voices would break in upon his study hours; the expense of a home and family would necessitate the foregoing of many luxuries he now enjoys; his society would not be sought as now; he would not be appealed to so frequently, nor his bon mots so widely quoted; in a word, he would not be as popular married as single. He remembers the old days with a laugh at his folly, and perhaps takes a satisfied look in the mirror at Karl Heiser, young, well dressed, handsome, a little inclined to stoutness, perhaps, for the lily crumbled to dust in his note-book long ago, talented, popular, and successful, and smiles to himself as he thinks of the man he might have been, had he yielded to the enchantment of a girl's soft arms and red lips.

Then, side by side with his satisfied, successful self, there looks out from the mirror this phantom of the man he just escaped being, with Hattie Starkey for a wife. The figure has a general shabbiness and seediness, and there are lines of discontent and dissipation upon the handsome face, for Hattie has dragged him down to her level with her untidiness and inefficiency. A shabby flat takes the place of his elegant rooms, and Karl remembers Mrs. Starkey's bottles and books with a shudder. There are children, of course, sticky and boisterous, and the exacting struggle for bread and butter for them all absorbs Karl's energies so he has little time for fine speeches at the club and brilliant articles in the journals. He is a fair operator, and a leader in the Union yet, but he has sadly deteriorated; the uncongeniality of wife and home sends him oftener and oftener to the club and the society of men less well-balanced than himself; and the promise of his young manhood is unfulfilled. The real Karl Heiser smiles at this shrinking phantom with contemptuous pity. How many brilliant young men he has seen thus hampered by unfortunate homes and marred by early marriages! And again he hears Winifred Hilton's words: "A wife who is not a comrade is no wife."

Then, side by side with the man he is and the man he escaped being, shadowy, mocking, rises the man he might once have been. This man is not alone, but stands hand in hand with a woman whose face Karl never sees, but he knows by the pride and tenderness in the man's eyes, by the trust and certainty of sympathy and help in every look he turns upon her, that the hidden face is strong and sweet and womanly, that "the heart of her husband can safely trust in her," and that her children would "rise up and call her blessed." This man is keen-eyed, broad-thoughted, with a righteous disdain for weakness and subterfuge, with a divine hopefulness and faith in his brother-men—

"Men, his brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new;
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do.

. . . . . .

For he dipt into the future, far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be."

This man that Karl Heiser might have been turns ever and anon to his comrade-wife, his unfaltering helper, his chief inspiration and guide, his unfailing sympathizer and friend, but he looks down on the real Karl Heiser with a lofty scorn for his selfish ease and luxury, with a divine pity for his supreme self-satisfaction. Then Karl Heiser moves uneasily from the mirror and tries to turn away the reproachful eyes of this man he might have been with his favorite aphorism: "A young man married is a young man marred."

But at the club, in the street, at some grand dinner, in his business hours, this spectre of the man he might once have been suddenly confronts him, the brilliant repartee is stifled upon his handsome lips, and an unspoken cry rises in his heart for a comrade-wife, such a wife as Winifred Hilton once described to him.

The supreme opportunity which comes once to every human soul, when it is granted it to make of itself what it will, came to Karl Heiser ten years ago, but he was blinded with his self-importance and recognized it not. Yet, once this ghost of unfulfilled promise and undeveloped possibility might have become a living reality, for Winifred Hilton loved Karl Heiser.

THE FINANCIAL CRISIS.

BY B. R. RICHTER.

The editorial on "A Practical Phase of the Financial Crisis," in the issue of August 24, contains a sentiment that seems incompatible with the progressive, independent and fearless spirit generally expressed in THE UNION SIGNAL. It is admitted in the third paragraph that under different social conditions it is both possible and desirable to have a medium of exchange that would be pure and simple, a pledge of the government and good for its full face value; but because the industrial and commercial interest of the country are in private hands, it is reasoned the government proper has nothing of real value upon which to base such a medium of exchange, and for a government to give what does not really belong to it will amount to nothing.

This government is treated as if it were a foreign corporation, supposed to be conducting the affairs of this country. If this were correct then the prevalent idea would be true, indeed, that the real and only foundation for credit, and security for notes and bills of exchange which such a corporation might issue, would be the actual possession of gold and silver. But is not this a misconception of the real nature of our government?

I feel that when I became a citizen of this great republic and swore allegiance to its flag, I became a part and parcel of this government, and the officers which I with my ballot help to elect to administer the affairs for this people, have the power under certain circumstances not only to demand the surrender of all my property but even my life.

If this conception is correct then what I possess belongs to the government and the wealth of this people, as a whole, represents the wealth of the government. Our government viewed in this light is entitled to the utmost limit of our confidence, and a paper certificate issued by it backed by the entire wealth of its people is of surer value than gold and silver. Taking this view of the matter, it becomes evident that even though the commercial and industrial interests are all in the hands of private individuals they are, strictly speaking, the property of the government, just as the post-office while being in the hands of the government is, nevertheless, the property of the people.

When will we be able to see that the true cause of all these financial panics, which visit the people of this earth with such regularity and increasing frequency, are caused simply by the fact that we are using a medium of exchange that possesses an intrinsic value, enabling the greedy and unprincipled to get possession of it and manipulate it to the detriment and misery of the many. The real wealth of a nation is not its stock of gold or silver, but its labor and the products thereof. Gold and silver should be treated as any other commercial commodity, and the circulating medium or the medium of exchange should have a representative value only. Demonetize both gold and silver, abolish all national and state banks and let the government put its money into circulation through the only true channel, which is labor; establish postal savings banks and any one having more of this medium of exchange than he has use for, and not wishing to loan it to others that have use for more than they possess, may deposit it with the government and pay for its safe keeping.

It will be said this is not feasible under existing circumstances. Very true. Neither is it possible to control the rum power under existing circumstances; none of the great evils of the day can be gotten rid of so long as we permit the brewers, the distillers and the bankers to control the affairs of this country and use the savings of the people to forge chains to enslave them.

HARVEST HOME.

BY ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

It was such a wee little thought, and there were so many great thoughts in the world, how could it expect to live? But, someway or other, it did, and it grew and strengthened, and became very dear to the heart of its owner. And so, one day, she told some of her friends about it, and they said:

"Why, what a sweet, bright thought! Why did we never hear of it before, and why were we so dull as not to think it ourselves? You must tell the others about it." But she said:

"Perhaps the rest of our sisterhood will not receive it so kindly as you have done, and I would not like to have them laugh at my treasured thought."

"Nay, nay, they will not laugh. They will think as we do, and be only too glad that another happy thought has come to the world."

And so she told it, and all the sisterhood said: "We will help you to make the thought still stronger and better. It shall be ours as well as yours, ours to make of it a beautiful, strong fact."

And this was the way that the birthday of the loved and trusted leader of the sisterhood was linked with the child-life that she loves so well, and Sept. 28, Miss Willard's natal day, became our Harvest Home.

To what has the little thought attained? To know that you must know something of the seed-sowing of the years that are past, for the harvest comes only from the spring-time toil. The thought held within itself, like the enveloping pod of the milkweed, all gracious, tender influences, light as the milkweed down, but winged and bearing seeds. Some of them were seeds of careful watchcare and teaching in Loyal Temperance Legions and Bands of Hope. And the seeds were sown on good soil, and tendance was given them. And they grew and thrived, until they come back a thousandfold in the harvest of to-day, in manly wills and womanly courage, in true hearts and clean lives, a harvest over which the angels sing the songs of Harvest Home. Not only in busy city lives have the seeds been sown, but in quiet country homes; and the cider-press has disappeared, and the corn has been made into that which shall feed the nations in place of that which would poison and destroy. Oh, it is a glorious harvest that we celebrate to-day!

There have been seeds of forbearance, seeds of mutual understanding, seeds of brotherhood. And we reap, even as we toil, a wondrous harvest in this marvelous reaping-time; a harvest of care for the common weal as well as for the Commonwealth, of hand-clasping across continents and seas, in the knowledge of the one Fatherhood, and the love of man for his fellow man. Never as to-day was such a harvest known in all this world.

Send out the call for the reapers! We need them all, for the fields are white. Here a company of bright-faced, laughing children waits to be gathered in—they are the harvest flowers. And here a sheaf of ripened hearts and intelligent minds but waits the white ribbon which shall bind it into a cluster for the garner. The gleaners are needed as well as the reapers, and there is work for all. Who will rally to our aid in the happy gathering-in?

WOMAN AS PREACHER AND PASTOR.

BY LOUISE S. BAKER.
Pastor First Congregational Church.

The position of woman as preacher and pastor is no longer unique but becoming such a recognized fact as to call forth comparatively little comment. The setting of this position, may, it is true, be something local as yet, and more special than general, but like the horizon's widening with keener vision, so in time not very far distant, the world's limits alone will circumscribe this environment, and the woman preacher be nowhere a novelty.

To illustrate: A little girl, one of my own former congregation, was visiting in the west with her mother. They attended church and, on looking into the pulpit and not finding her own minister, the little one whispered to her mother like this: "Mamma, I don't see Miss Baker; where's Miss Baker?"

I only use this incident to demonstrate the force of precedent and the overwhelming argument of education as far as any prejudice may be concerned on this point.

The prophetic life of Deborah of old has fallen upon this century and the revelation of womanly power in the dual forces of humanitarian and religious effort is showing like an open book. "He who runs may read."

"But how," one asks, "does this departure from the long interregnum (when we heard of no women as preachers and pastors), how does this departure work, practically?"

Unhesitatingly let the answer come from the practical issues of such ministers and pastorates. As surely as the womanhood of the race is a wondrous power in the advancement of the world morally, and we add without pause intellectually, also, so positively is that influence undeniably potential in religion. And if for no other reason than that so large a proportion of our church membership is composed of women, the plea for a woman ministry is strong and conclusive.

In the pulpit the logic of a soul pressing eagerly toward God and His light, be that soul a man or a woman, is searching and convincing. The heart that has caught its pulse from the heart of the Infinite, pours out consolation be the speaker man or woman; the mind that has been nurtured and opened from the tuition of the divine spirit can but give in overflowing measure; and it is the claim of this brief paper that a cultured, intelligent, able woman in the pulpit sends the very arrows of truth into the lives of the congregation. The magnetic pathos of a womanly voice, speaking because it cannot be let nor hindered, far-reaching in its sweetness from its natural timbre and quality; the plea of a life consecrated, trained, endowed, who shall deny this power, who can hinder if God lets His lightning loose in denouncing sin! It is of no use to put up lightning-rods and say, "No woman's word can strike sin here." My friends, it can not be done,

And, if, moreover, there comes from this voice a message telling how the love of God wins the world, then this lightning, too, shall strike and cleave to the very roots of being and some who hear shall be entreated toward the heaven that begins on earth. And why not?

"Love divine! of such great loving,
Only mothers know the cost.
Cost of love, which all love passing
Gave a Son to save the lost."

Why not, again? Since in the heart of every true woman lies that yearning, protecting care for every little child in need, which enlarges to a desire to protect and to save all humanity that comes within the reach of her strong, pure hands. And so, the woman minister preaches God's love in the pulpit, and in every place where her duty calls her.

Therefore, as pastor, she is found in the homes of rich and poor; a lady, she goes, as the word formerly intimated, a bread-giver; and thus she carries the bread of life, giving, giving, always, yes, and receiving, too, since every true disciple of Jesus Christ learns that he receives more spiritual treasure than he gives.

The woman pastor is often chosen by those whom she has known from childhood, or for many years, as the one who shall solemnize for them the crowning joy of their lives in the holy marriage service. She receives into the sacred communion of the church those whose inner lives she has guarded with eager solicitude; she lays her hand in tender benediction upon the heads of little children in baptism, and administers this service to others. She distributes with comprehending and profound reverence the sacred emblems at the festival of the communion supper, to her thought a feast of loving memorial.

Nor is she wanting with consecrated presence at the bedside of the sick; she takes the hand of the weary pilgrim who is to depart on the untried journey, and with inspiring faith tells such of the fording stones in the stream called death, emphasizing the word that there is no real death, but that all who go out with God's staff find life forever.

And, too, she is found sympathetic, tender, yet brave and strong, at the services in so many households for the dear travelers to the heaven; found there to throw aside the veil of desolation and give the breath and fragrance and refreshment of the grapes of Eshcol to the worn, unnerved and sorrowing ones who stay behind.

You will find the woman pastor, too, guiding with frank but cheery counsel the young people, studying their characters and dispositions, pointing out the way of good, and teaching them to love it with all their hearts, if possible before they find evil.

Considerate of all, both old and young, tactful, sympathetic, bright, tender, compassionate and strong—from such a work what is to hinder the cultured, earnest, Christian woman?

My friends, the world is wide yet narrow; large yet small; human, yet with God's touch upon it. Tell me, tell me, with the pitiful need of extending that touch what matters whether the strength comes from man or woman, so His hands, His arms, shall hold the living fast and grasp the trembling, fearful ones who cross to Himself!

It does not matter, so that in this world, where men and women and little children are looking after the light of it what Christian leads them out of darkness, or mist, or bewilderment, into the light.

The face of the Divine is held toward the race and there are many women who, as preachers and pastors, shall show that face to those seeking after it.

God's interpreters are those who know Him best. Blessed are they who can translate the relation.

THE POLITICAL PUPA.*

BY GRANT ALLEN.

I have picked up on the moor the chrysalis of a common English butterfly. As I sit on the heather and turn it over attentively, while it wriggles in my hands, I can not help thinking how closely it resembles the present condition of our commonwealth.

But, first of all, do you clearly understand what a chrysalis is driving at? It means more than it seems; the change that goes on within that impassive case is a great deal more profound than most people imagine. When the caterpillar is just ready to turn into a butterfly it lies by for a while, full of internal commotion, and feels all its organs slowly melting, one by one, into a sort of indistinguishable protoplasmic pulp; chaos precedes the definite re-establishment of a fresh form of order. Limbs and parts and nervous system all disappear for a time, and then gradually grow up again in new and altered types. The caterpillar, if it philosophized on its own state at all (which seems to be very little the habit of well-conducted caterpillars, as of well-conducted young ladies), might easily be excused for forming just at first the melancholy impression that a general dissolution was coming over it piecemeal. It must begin by feeling legs and eyes and nervous centres melt away by degrees into a common, indistinguishable organic pulp, out of which the new organs only slowly form themselves in obedience to the law of some internal impulse. But when the process is all over, and—hi, presto!—the butterfly emerges at last from the chrysalis condition, what does it find but that instead of having lost everything it has new and stronger legs in place of the old and feeble ones; it has nerves and brain more developed than before; it has wings for flight instead of mere creeping little feet to crawl with? What seemed like chaos was really nothing more than the necessary kneading up of all component parts into a plastic condition which precedes every fresh departure in evolution. The old must fade before the new can replace it.

Now I am not going to work this perhaps somewhat fanciful analogy to death, or pretend it is anything more than a convenient metaphor. Still, taken as such, it is not without its luminosity. For a metaphor, by supplying us with a picturable representation, often enables us really to get at the hang of the thing a vast deal better than the most solemn argument. And I fancy communities sometimes pass through just such a chrysalis stage, when it seems to the timid and pessimistic in their midst as if every component element of the state (but especially the one in which they themselves and their friends are particularly interested) were rushing violently down a steep place to eternal perdition. Chaos appears to be swallowing up everything. "The natural relations of classes" disappear. Faiths melt; churches dissolve; morals fade; bonds fail; a universal magma of emancipated opinion seems to take the place of old-established dogma. The squires and the parsons of the period—call them scribes or augurs—wring their hands in despair, and cry aloud that they do not know what the world is coming to. But, after all, it is only the chrysalis stage of a new system. The old social order must grow disjointed and chaotic before the new social order can begin to evolve from it. The establishment of a plastic consistency in the mass is the condition precedent of the higher development.

Not, of course, that this consideration will ever afford one grain of comfort to the squires and the parsons of each successive epoch; for what they want is not the reasonable betterment of the whole social organism, but the continuance of just this particular type of squiredom and parsonry. That is what they mean by "national welfare"; and any interference with it they criticise in all ages with the current equivalent for the familiar Tory formula that "the country is going to the devil."

Through just such a period of reconstruction Europe in general and Britain in particular are now in all likelihood beginning to pass. And they will come out at the other end translated and transfigured. Laws and faiths and morals will all of them have altered. There will be a new heaven and a new earth for the men and women of the new epoch. Strange that people should make such a fuss about a detail like Home Rule, when the foundations of society are all becoming fluid. Don't flatter yourself for a moment that your particular little sect or your particular little dogma is going to survive the gentle cataclysm any more than my particular little sect or my particular little dogma. All alike are doomed to inevitable reconstruction. "We can't put the Constitution into the melting-pot," said Mr. John Morley, if I recollect his words aright. But at the very moment when he said it, in my humble opinion, the Constitution was already well into the melting-pot, and even beginning to simmer merrily. Federalism, or something extremely like it, may with great probability be the final outcome of that particular melting; though anything else is perhaps just as probable, and in any case the melting is general, not special. The one thing we can guess with tolerable certainty is that the melting-pot stage has begun to overtake us, socially, ethically, politically, ecclesiastically; and that what will emerge from the pot at the end of it must depend at last upon the relative strength of those unknown quantities—the various formative elements.

Being the most optimistic of pessimists, however, I will venture (after this disclaimer of prophecy) to prophesy one thing alone: 'Twill be a butterfly, not a grub, that comes out of our chrysalis.

AMUSEMENTS IN COUNTRY AND CITY.

BY MILES M. DAWSON.

The simple amusement of the peasantry of England and other countries, described in the writings of poets, romancers and essayists are idyllic and innocent. The good humor, excellent spirits and well-meaning disposition displayed in these sports appeal to the best side of our nature. In the same way the literature of our own country and even our own time has presented beautiful pictures of mirthful gatherings of young people—yes, and old people as well—the husking-bee, the taffy-pulling, the church sociable, the county fair, the picnic, the berrying excursion, the fishing-party, the family reunion and other functions of out-of-town society where the aristocracy of the exclusive gives way to the democracy of the tolerant. It is a brilliant and to the reminiscent soul a touching scene that these word-paintings call up of the big farm-house, the bigger barns, the rolling fields, the inviting groves and singing brooks. And, indeed, these hours of communion with nature, and that of man's making which is nearest nature, should be considered the most valuable and the sweetest of the hours that are past.

But it must be remembered that these things are the commonplace of the country to its denizen, even as high buildings and artificial parks and promenades are to the denizens of Chicago. Each finds more of real amusement in the things which the other cares least for as common and dull. The beauties of landscape gardening are apt to awe a country lad quite as much as the grandeur of towering cliff or beetling height stirs the city girl's soul when on her summer outing. Each finds distraction and interest in that to which the eye and mind are not accustomed.

Therefore is it that even those amusements which seem so poetical, so charming in the vistas of our memories, are but dull and to be yawned at by those who take part in them. People in the country here in the United States at least, are not stupid peasantry, animals driven by their lords to their laborious but degrading tasks; they have evolved from that and with a longing not free from bitterness, they think of the greater opportunities for intellectual amusement in town. For it must be considered that playing hide and go seek, concealing a dance under the play of Charley, exacting kisses in the game of forfeits at a husking, or even listening to shuffling and awkward school recitations and essays can in no case be properly ranked as intellectual entertainment. Better by far in that regard are the spelling-schools and often ridiculed debating societies of which—be it said to their credit—country people eagerly avail themselves, which have put country people far ahead of townsmen on many important questions and which have formed the nucleus in turn of the temperance, prohibition and farmers' movements.

But these things are infrequent, and the difficulties of association between neighbors are very great. The problem of overcoming the distance between the habits of members of a community is by no means solved. To tired Jack, after the hard day's work, a pipe of foul and poisonous tobacco on the veranda, or in winter in the close and stifling atmosphere of the kitchen, is more grateful than the possible pleasure of an evening elsewhere in congenial company, but at the cost of a considerable journey. When idle for a time because of the season, or for other reasons, he finds that all roads lead to the country cross-road village with its bar, or at best, if the common sense of the community has withheld license, its temperance billiard-room, perhaps with a blind pig attachment. Thanks to his usual inability to seek amusement because of the obstacle of distance, he now finds no entertainment provided except that which has been created for those in the community whose principal object in life is to be considered "sports." Indeed, to such straits has the country been reduced that all the plays and pastimes which I have spoken of the majority of every community affect to despise and to taboo, not for something more physical or æsthetic, but for the solid and stolid animal pleasures of gluttony, intoxication and hazard. The very significance of the word "amusement" is altered into something other than merely that which entertains; it must also be that which coarsely gratifies the lower instincts.

So true is this that it is one of the most painful facts in the experience of every young man who removes to the city that too many of his acquaintances and friends who visit him, mean by "seeing the sights of the city," not an examination of its treasures of art, architecture, manufacture, parks, libraries, theaters or churches, but instead, a delving into its sewers of sexual and alcoholic pollution. Such a conception of amusement has been fostered by this want of true entertainment common to all country places, and is often found unaccompanied by any real vice of character.

That conception, and that unexpected general uprightness of character are both significant. The country is democratic, a fact which cannot be too often emphasized, and which among males means not only political equality but also social equality. No epithet is really so opprobrious in the country as "stuck-up," and none will sooner blast a promising prospect. Consequently, men meet upon a level. If one's principles or church connection forbid his drinking, or even loafing about pool-rooms, he may be excused attendance; and even in a way honored for his self-denial. But he is made to feel that it is self-denial which again enforces the idea that such things are amusements. If, on the contrary, no strong convictions or church connections operate, the democracy of the community exposes him to especial peril; for his individual disgust at the coarse form others' amusement takes is not certain to overbear the combined influence of their banter and his own ennui. The most to be dreaded danger is that after a time he may not care to be better than he finds it convenient to care to be considered.

In the city the saloon habitué and bar-room loafer has no claim upon the recognition of any man except the ward politician. He has a proper sense, too, of his position in the social scale and is absolutely impotent as a tempter. It is true that the drinking places of the city are more inviting and brilliantly fitted up than those of the country; they are suited to the tastes of the city-bred loafer who spends his father's money at them. But their very magnificence makes uncomfortable the country lad, conscious of his own lack of sophistication and possibly of his ill-fitting garments, and consequently acts not as a temptation but an objection. On the other hand the places which provide the adjuncts to which he has been accustomed are patronized only by the vulgar and ill-dressed rowdies of the town; and he cannot but see at once that he must abandon hope who enters there. City bar-rooms are not in themselves tempting to him.

But his greatest safeguard, if he has the self-respect requisite to make a man, is the abundance of cheap and good amusement—much of it absolutely free. There is a transportation about the city on the street-cars, a never-failing source of entertainment to the observant. There are the parks which appeal to the poetry in his soul which the country has implanted, perhaps without his consciousness. There are calls upon the misses of his acquaintance, visits which do not arouse the coarse gibes of his acquaintances as of old in the country or necessarily form a prelude to marriage with his fair hostess; he will find the society of woman freer and more delightful than he has ever known. There are museums with their tricks, gambols and curiosities. There are the great libraries and art galleries and the morning and evening newspapers. There are the lectures, meetings, clubs and gatherings—many for every night of the year.

In short, there is a wide choice daily between many and various interesting and instructive entertainments. There need at no time be an acceptance of the poorer, the meaner instead of the intellectual and spiritual. The young man has his destiny in his own hands and must consciously choose the wrong if he go astray.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XVIII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

"April 5, 1887—Meeting opened by Mrs. Thompson, who read the 146th Psalm, and suggested that we concentrate our faith and prayers upon the coming of Francis Murphy the following week to our town, that the promises contained in our blessed crusade psalm may be verified in the hearts and homes of our people and that the Lord in His mercy may at that time "raise" some that have been long bowed down.—Minutes.

The prayers that were then offered came from warm hearts and not from feigned lips! And as the sequel proved, were heard in heaven, "His dwelling-place," and answered on earth to the joy of many hearts.

The "Murphy temperance movement" was inaugurated in Greenfield, Highland county, O., early in the spring of 1877. Hon. Henry L. Dicky, ex-member of Congress of that place, became a convert to the new code of sobriety, "with malice toward none and charity for all," and it had a magical effect upon his brethren of the Hillsboro bar, composed, as it had been for many years, of men possessing unusual talent and rare legal ability, famous, most of them, for social qualities, too often sinfully heightened by that enemy which "steals away the brain." Hence the "Macedonian cry" was the more gladly heeded by the distinguished convert of Greenfield, and he came over to aid our earnest aspirants after a new code of jurisprudence.

On the appointed evening, May 14, 1877, the city hall was lighted up, the Hillsboro orchestra was in fine tune, anxious hearts were throbbing and all things seemed to take on a readiness for the very remarkable "Temperance Pentecost," which, inaugurated upon that evening, grew to such amazing proportions in our county.

Many of the men who were then redeemed from the curse of appetite are to-day beacon lights, and some have left

"Footprints on the sands of time; for . . . .
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother."

The grace of forgiving spirits engendered by the "love that never faileth" was beautifully illustrated in the harmony that characterized the blending of Crusaders and Murphyites in the work which followed; indeed, the prominent counsel on Dunn's side, in his suit against the women of the temperance siege, were for a long time among the most earnest and zealous co-workers in the grand battle for the right in the "Blue Ribbon" army.

For many months the converts to the peaceful, God-trusting card of Francis Murphy formed a self-constituted band of workers and went into rural districts and by invitation to adjoining towns, speaking to crowds and gaining signatures to the pledge by the hundreds. And as so many of our "Murphy men" were lawyers we had the advantage of trained talkers, and much good came of their efforts. Strange to say, when the Gospel of Temperance takes hold of the conscience, it is apt to inspire the heart with such interest in poor humanity that words are given! as we have seen abundantly proved in this, as other communities.

After a visit from Francis Murphy and months of ceaseless labor the "Murphy men," aided by the W. C. T. U. and the ministers of the town, commenced each Sunday afternoon, "Murphy meetings" at city hall. These services continued to be well sustained for years, and were always cheered by the faithful few—among them, my husband, Judge Thompson, who at this late day is justly proud to be recognized as a successful "Murphy man," and much of the joy of our declining years, results from the peaceful blending of the sentiments, represented by our badges, white and blue.

During all the years since '77 the work of the Crusaders, although taking on new forms of service and new lines of work, has kept marching on. Notable workers, both women and men, have, from time to time, been with us by invitation and thus we have been greatly strengthened. Since the days of Crusade zeal and Murphy helpfulness, however, the white ribbon sisterhood finds it much more difficult to keep a full treasury, and many times our aspiration after the oratory of truth fails to culminate, simply because we cannot afford it and those who could help us will not do it.

CORRESPONDENCE

A VOICE FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Winter, which begins in June, is the best time for active work in Natal. It is neither hot nor cold; fair weather may be surely counted on and the only probable discomfort is dust. Sometimes there is high wind in profusion.

It was on such a blowing, dusty day, with a lingering breath of summer in the song of the birds and belated blossoms, that your correspondent set out in care of the treasurer of the Natal W. C. T. U. from the hospitable home of the latter to Verulam, the place of the annual convention.

The scenes at the various railway stations are still to me novel and interesting, taking in as they do, so many different types of humanity—English, Dutch, Arab, Cooley native, carrying on their various avocations in more or less picturesque costume and speaking a jargon of tongues. We left the central station at Durban shortly after two p. m. and reached the "city of the saints" as Verulam is sometimes called, a distance of about twenty miles in two hours. If you could see the rapid rise above the sea level made by this "north coast line," you would not be surprised at the slow rate of travel. You would only be surprised that a transit of any sort has been made.

It was Saturday afternoon. The convention was to open Tuesday, but there were preliminary meetings. First, I spoke to the young people in the Wesleyan Sabbath school room on Sunday afternoon. There were many older friends, too, to whom I did not need to talk as to novices in the W. C. T. U., for Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell had been to see them, and the work has increased to that extent that if Verulam were to start the chorus, "We all belong," there would be few who might not sing. I also spoke in the Wesleyan Church Sunday evening. Under the auspices of the "Juvenile Temple" an open meeting was held in their hall, which for interest and enthusiasm equaled any gathering of young people for the discussion of the temperance question it has ever been my privilege to attend. The juvenile superintendent of the Grand Lodge was present and spoke motherly words of counsel. Mr. Garland, the oldest total abstainer in the village, moved a vote of thanks to the speakers, in an address that was both eloquent and soundly practical; as the hale, happy old gentleman stood amongst his young friends I thought: "It is not only the words you say that teach these, but you are yourself a grand object lesson of what a man Christlike in his life may do and become in a community." Two young gentlemen, wearing Demorest silver medals, seconded the vote of thanks, and gave us more matter of rejoicing that the young as well as the older ones are giving their powers to God's service in this fair colony.

Since only about two hundred women in Natal were reported June 1, as regular members of the W. C. T. U., having paid Colonial and World's dues, we were agreeably surprised that the delegation to the convention should number forty-six, duly accredited. They had sent up their full force, and the result of this faithful representation will be a greatly increased membership by June, 1894. Our honoraries and children in Natal outnumber the regular membership, and we have found that two of the Y Branches had paid membership dues, but had not understood the steps necessary to becoming affiliated to the W. C. T. U., which they have since been happy to take.

As I listened to the reports of the various superintendents and noted their excellently put recommendations, I asked myself: "How do these women know so much?" But ere the feast of days had closed I answered, "God Himself has taught them." In following Miss Willard's watchword for the current year, "Microscopic rather than telescopic," little Natal is taking the lead. Pietermaritzburg, the capital city, beside the usual amount of hospital and jail visiting, flower mission and benevolent work, has purchased a comfortable house which is to be used as a temporary boarding place for ladies traveling alone, governesses or teachers, or young ladies in any employment who are taking a holiday in the city. The grounds are large enough to admit of the erection of a hall which will be used in all those ways which make it so convenient to have "a home of our own."

Durban union owns "a house on wheels," which now occupies a space on the market square. Here temperance refreshments are served and temperance literature distributed.

I was very glad to see a "social tea" down on the program for the first evening. I am sure that a convention which begins or closes with a tea is a greater means of grace than it would be without it. Many a member has been won, and many a life made better and brighter from the neighborly words spoken over a sandwich.

Y. W. C. T. U. evening at Verulam was just as good as it is at home. I wonder why all the nice little "best things" seem naturally to gravitate toward that evening? There never was a more beautiful bouquet constructed than the one given to me, who had been asked to preside for this evening. If you have not seen Ifarfa lilies you have missed one of the prettiest gifts of God. Hundreds of the dainty blossoms, with fair, pale roses, and magnificent ferns bound by the emblematic white ribbon, made a present worthy the acceptance of a queen. Natal, by these constant gifts of flowers and fruit, often accompanied by Scripture verses, is given to expressing a cordial sympathy with our work.

I cannot ask for space to print the fifteen resolutions passed by the fourth annual convention of the Natal W. C. T. U., but I will challenge any union twice our age to produce fifteen more telling ones.

The council of education has placed "The Manual of Health and Temperance" upon the desk of all teachers in the Colony with the request that they shall make it the basis of oral "temperance lessons." We are returning thanks, not so much for this permission, as because it is the first thing given us promptly and heartily, and will be all the more easily followed by something better. Mrs. McLaren, of Pieter aritzburg, is the superintendent of scientific temperance instruction and has been the chief mover in this grant.

Please let me thank the kind, thoughtful sisters of both the Denver Convention and of my own state convention at Marion, Indiana, who voted me a letter. I have not received either letter, but I appreciate their good intentions. I learned of them through reports in THE UNION SIGNAL.

The Lord has greatly blessed the work in the days I have been here, largely because of the efficient management and effectual prayers of Miss Gates, principal of the Natal Branch of the Huguenot Seminary situated here, and superintendent of the juvenile department of the Natal W. C. T. U. She has been aided in her plans by the young ladies who belong to the seminary Y. W. C. T. U. Saturday we organized a "Y Branch" in the village, and Sunday afternoon received names for a branch of the "Young Crusaders," as our South African juvenile societies are called. Within four days fully seventy-five young people have signed the pledge in Greytown who will belong to one of these societies. The "Young Crusaders" will be in charge of the village Y. W. C. T. U.

A grand council of temperance workers of the Colony, to meet at Durban, is in preparation for August 16 and 17. After that your organizer wends her way by steamship to East London and vicinity, until time for the fourth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Cape Colony early in October. Pray for us. ALICE R. PALMER, Organizer for the W. W. C. T. U. in South Africa.

A MISSIONARY'S VIEW OF UNION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was a great pleasure to me to read in your issue of July 6, the strong plea written by Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., for a union of all saloon opposers against their common enemy. For a long time I have been looking for an expression of that thought, and have even been casting about in mind to see if I could put it in shape myself. Imagine my satisfaction then on reading the clear, vigorous sentiment of that article.

It is an erroneous belief of some people that we who are sent by our churches to work in foreign lands, lose interest in the questions that agitate the home circles. I know of no more patriotic Americans, none who care more and pray more for their country's welfare than those abroad. We see the condition of lands that have no God and no Sunday, and oh, how we long to help on every effort to make our beloved land in deed and in truth the Christian nation she is reputed to be.

Then as to the W. C. T. U. work! Could it be possible, even if circumstances did not urge the need for such work there, too, for one to lack interest in that who has had the opportunity of entertaining several of the round-the-world temperance missionaries?

By the way, I, with others, wish that all your missionaries were not "round-the-worlders." There is work enough for one in any one of the open ports of the East, and she ought not to be obliged to earn her own living while starting the movement (it might become self-supporting). Just think! saloons abounding, seventeen nations represented, so that nothing can be done by law, no tax levied even, no check of any kind, no coffee-house, and nobody to do anything about it. I spoke of this to our dear Miss West, and we hoped to make it the subject of special thought and conversation on the voyage home from Japan last winter, but, alas, this was not permitted. Mrs. Leavitt, Miss Ackermann, and all who have visited the East, will confirm what I say of the needs.

I firmly believe that the next step taken should be concerted action against the open saloons by all sections of temperance workers. The questions at issue between them can be settled just as well after as before, and better, because every one can see more clearly when the saloon curse is terminated, when the wails of its victims cease to ring in our ears, and the wrecks of men who were once noble boys no longer distress our sight.

How this can be done, the experienced leaders of organizations will determine. I wish it might be the one question before the people, because of its tremendous importance. I rejoice that agitation has begun on this line.

Is it not a special device of Satan to hinder his opposers, that he makes concerted effort seem so difficult? Good men and women are beginning to find him out, though. Churches are realizing that even serious theological questions need not hinder the spread of the "good tidings," but can be settled after the rest of the world has been informed that there is but one God, and we are His children. Spending their strength against each other, instead of against godlessness, over questions of mere form, that is now about obsolete in the churches, thanks to the Good Spirit who has borne with us so long.

May it not be so in Christian temperance work, also? I shall look eagerly for other articles on union in anti-saloon work. No one can so severely realize the need of the union of Christian forces as the missionary in a foreign field. CAROLINE VAN PETTEN.

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.—1 Cor. 16: 13.

Dear, heroic Jane Weeden has again been heard from. She just arrived this morning in Chicago. She has been for months in loving attendance upon a sick sister in Ohio. On her way to the World's Fair she made a little detour to Michigan in the interest of the Temple, and raised $38; of this amount she secured $27 in Kalamazoo, Mich., where she received a royal welcome and assistance in her work from the president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Pengelly. She here raised a full Baby Band of one hundred names. She also visited South Haven, Mich., and collected $11. While she admits that it is very difficult to make collections at present, she stands fast in the faith that the set time is rapidly nearing when, by a simultaneous and aggressive movement throughout the land, money will be raised to wipe out the indebtedness of the Temple and give the National society its entire ownership. She said she found the kindliest feeling existing in Michigan toward the Temple enterprise, all promising that when the present distressing financial stringency had passed over they would be only too glad to give a helping hand to aid the W. C. T. U. in paying for the building.

There seems to be a noble emulation stirring the hearts of the women in many of our unions at present to have the name of their society placed on the marble tablets in Willard Hall before the World's and National Conventions assemble in Chicago, October 16. We will promise that all unions which complete the $100 gift and have the money in our hands by October 9, shall have the name of the union placed on the state tablet by the time the Convention opens. We mean to have the names of all unions and individuals that have given $100 to the Temple, also those in memoriam, engraved in Willard Hall by that time. Indeed, men are now at work chiseling them out as rapidly as possible. The Bellefontaine, O., W. C. T. U., has just sent $30 which completes a hundred dollar gift. The superintendent of Temple work for the union, Mrs. M. L. Rathmell, writes: "Our union is singing the doxology over the completion of our pledge. They are saying, 'Oh, dear, won't we have Bellefontaine on the tablet before the National Convention?' Thirty dollars of our pledge was raised by three Baby Bands. Fifty-eight persons gave $1 each. The rest was raised by mite-boxes and holding a 'Market.'" Think what an amount of educational temperance work the Bellefontaine union accomplished by getting the parents of three hundred children to pledge themselves to bring up their little ones as total abstainers. Could any union do a greater work for temperance than this? Why do not more unions try it? By writing to us all pledge cards and documents for Baby Bands will be sent free.

Our devoted missionary, Miss Ackermann, did not forget the Temple when seas divided her from her own land, as an extract from a letter which is given below, written by Mrs. S. L. Evans of Evandale, Australia, will testify: "I have received a letter from Miss Ackermann, respecting Australia and the temperance work here being represented by a tablet in Willard Hall in the beautiful Temple about to be dedicated in Chicago. I quite agree with her that this great land should not be left out, and therefore request that a marble tablet be placed in it to represent Australia. I enclose for that purpose £20. We have been much interested in reading accounts in THE UNION SIGNAL about the splendid building which, no doubt, will greatly assist the noble cause of temperance."

Mrs. B. H. Travers sends a check for $100 from Saratoga county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. for a tablet in Willard Hall; Mrs. M. A. Washburn sends a check for $32.35 from the Lake Crystal, Minn., W. C. T. U.; this union is striving nobly to raise $100; Romeo, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $62.78, which completes a hundred dollar pledge; $35.24 has been received from the treasurer of Erie county, Mrs. M. F. Umpleby, on the Erie county, N. Y., pledge; Columbia county, Wis., W. C. T. U., which this Columbian year should have a good representation on the tablets of Willard Hall, contains but one union that is at work as far as we know, to secure a place on the state tablet. This noble little union is Lodi W. C. T. U., small in numbers but heroic in aim and labors. They have already sent $59.60 to the Temple. Mrs. Mary N. Wait writes: "We had a revival recently of Temple interest. We intend to have a stand at the fair, and we expect to make enough to pay up our entire pledge to the Temple and thus secure our name on the Wisconsin tablet before the National Convention." The Ohio tablet in Willard corridors in the Temple records in the following order the names of local and county unions in the state that have paid a hundred dollars to the building fund: Central Union, Cleveland; Portsmouth Union, Portsmouth; Willsborough Union, Willsborough; Akron Union, Akron; Cadiz Union, Cadiz; Miamisburg Union, Miamisburg; London Union, London; Wellsville Union, Wellsville; Trumbull County Union; Medina County Union; Lucas County Union; Evelyn Graham Union, Newark; Belmont Union, Belmont; Athens Union, Athens; Kirtland Union, Kirtland; Oberlin Union, Oberlin; Granville Union, Granville; Bellefontaine Union, Bellefontaine.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THE WATER-LILY.

[Emblem of the W. W. C. T. U.]

BY FLORENCE BRONSON TUCKER.

THOU beauteous flower,
so fair, so wonderful,
Emblem of purity, of grace and love,
In dainty coquetry you lift your cup
Of snowy whiteness with its golden filling,
The foul, damp blackness of the lake above.

So beautiful thou art, I fain would ask of thee
What fair divinity doth rule thy time?
For lying there in restful confidence
With waxen petals spread in graceful curving,
Thou seem'st a creature of some purer clime.

And as I gaze upon thee, favorite flower,
Thy presence dear awakens in my mind
Sweet memories of the past so tender;
A day now dead—but bright on memory's walls,
The living picture of its grace I find.

I seem to see again the lovely lake so calm,
The fleecy clouds upon the sky's clear blue,
The overhanging green of varied tints
Softening the beauty of that summer scene,
While happy faces told that hearts were true.

And as I see thee rising clear and beautiful
From tangled roots that seek thee to entwine,—
I thank thee in my heart for this sweet lesson—
From sordid cares and all sin's dark allurements,
Our souls may spotless rise to heights sublime.

LEGEND OF THE TRAILING ARBUTUS.*

[The flower of the National W. C. T. U.]

BY C. E. BELKNAP.

On the south shore of Lake Superior, in the vicinity of Pictured Rocks, grows to perfection that dearest and sweetest of all wild flowers, the arbutus. The plant that the most skillful florist, the plant that the tender, loving touch of woman even, cannot cause to grow in hot-house or garden.

There are two things that the learned white man does not understand—the Indian and the arbutus.

From time to time as sitting by the camp-fires in the evening, I have been told of the creation of many animals and birds by the great Mannaboosho and his captains, the Manitos. And this is the legend as told me of the origin or creation of the arbutus.

It was many, many moons ago there lived an old man alone in his lodge beside a frozen stream in the forest; his locks and beard were long and white with age. He was heavily clad in fine furs, for all the world was winter, snow and ice everywhere; the winds went wild through the forests, searching every bush and tree for birds to chill, chasing evil spirits o'er hill and vale, and the old man went about searching in the deep snow for pieces of wood to keep up the fire in his lodge. In despair he returned to his lodge, and sitting down by the last few dying coals, he cried to Mannaboosho that he might not perish.

And the winds blew aside the door of the lodge and there came in a most beautiful maiden. Her cheeks were red and made of wild rose; her eyes were large and glowed like the eyes of fawns at night; her hair was long and black as the ravens, and it touched the ground as she walked; her hands were covered with willow buds; her bonnet was a wreath of wild flowers, and her clothing of sweet grasses and ferns, and her moccasins were white lilies, and when she breathed, the air of the lodge became warm.

The old man said: "My daughter, I am glad to see you, my lodge is cold and cheerless, but it will shield you from the tempest of the night. But tell me who you are that you dare to come to my lodge in such strange clothing? Come sit here and tell me of thy country and thy victories, and I will tell thee my exploits, for I am Manito." He then filled two pipes with tobacco that they might smoke as they talked, and when the smoke had warmed the old man's tongue he said:

"I am Manito. I blow my breath and the waters of the river stand still."

The maiden said:

"I breathe and flowers spring up on all the plains."

The old man said:

"I shake my locks and snow covers all the ground."

"I shake my curls," said the maiden, "and warm rains fall from the clouds."

The old man said:

"When I walk about the leaves fall from the trees; at my command the animals hide in their holes in the ground, and the birds get out of the water and fly away."

The maiden said:

"When I walk about the plants lift up their heads, the trees cover their nakedness with many leaves, the birds come back, and all who see me sing. Music is everywhere."

And thus they talked and the air became warm in the lodge. The old man's head dropped upon his breast and he slept. Then the sun came back and a bluebird came to the top of the lodge and called: "Say-ee, say-ee, I am thirsty;" and the river called back: "I am free; come and drink."

And as the old man slept the maiden passed her hands above his head, and he began to grow small; streams of water ran out of his mouth, and he soon was a small mass upon the ground, and his clothing turned to green leaves and then the maiden, kneeling upon the ground, took from her bosom the most precious white flowers and hid them all about under the leaves; then she breathed upon them and said: "I give thee all my virtues and my sweetest breath, and all who would pick thee shall do so upon bended knee."

Then the maiden moved away through the woods and over the plains, and all the birds sang to her; and wherever she stepped, and nowhere else, grows the arbutus.

I.

THE SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

When you hear some one regretting that he has lost the faith and trust of twenty years ago, you may be sure he has been searching for truth with his anchor of conviction torn loose from the Rock of God's Word; and so he has drifted into the sea of unrest and doubt, and his spirit is at the mercy of every on-rushing wave of human opinion.

When the conscience of a man is anchored upon the divine teachings of Christ, he can never lose past faith and trust; though, as his apprehension of truth grows clearer, his faith and trust may not run in the same ruts of human thought. The soul, whose present apprehension of truth only allows him to walk safely upon the shore of thought, wading perchance into the shallowest waves, must not venture to cast himself out into the deep waters where the soul of more experienced apprehension can swim with safety, thinking that the power of fearless spiritual swimming will come with the bold leap. For expertness in spiritual swimming in the sea of Truth can only be obtained by slow practice under the patient training of the one great Teacher in all spiritual exercise. And he whose spiritual apprehension enables him safely to propel his row-boat of conscientious conviction upon the sea of Truth, must not conclude that therefore he is spiritually skilled enough to start out upon the boundless ocean of God's manifestation, and without further practice, successfully guide a swift sailing ship of progressive thought, with no increased spiritual instruction from the Great Pilot.

But when the divine pilot has promoted the searcher to the swift sailing ship, spreading its white wings of love to the breeze of God's omnipotent will, let not the searcher seek to propel the ship by the rudder of his puny row-boat of outgrown convictions, when his more enlightened conscience has been trained by slow but sure practice into larger capacities for clearer apprehensions of Truth. To attempt to do this is as futile as the attempt to steer the ship when our spiritual insight was only equal to safely propelling the row-boat.

Now it came to pass that I stood on the shore of human thought gazing with awe and longing out upon the surging waters of the boundless ocean of the Infinite, despairingly wondering how any finite being could brave the dangers of these mighty crested waves. A shining ship approached the shore where I was standing. The sails were white and glistening as no fuller on earth could whiten them, and upon the air floated strains of music attuned to perfect harmony. Then as the ship drew nearer I perceived that the musicians were like myself, only that all their faces shone with a radiance above the light of noon, and in their hands I could see no musical instruments, but the harmony seemed to flow forth from their beings, as though within each form a spirit musician drew forth rich chords from soul-instruments attuned to perfect accord. As I listened entranced, my spirit caught the theme of that majestic anthem, and I heard like to the chanting of angel voices: "LOVE! LOVE! LOVE!"

Then there came to me out of the ship one like unto the Son of Man, and I could scarce behold the beauty and perfection of His form and face, for the glorious shining of His heavenly eyes, which held me and drew me on, until I must perforce follow wheresoever He should lead. I followed Him spell-bound even down into the awesome ocean of the Infinite; but when a deep, swelling wave threatened to engulf me, I found myself lifted upon that glistening ship and clasped by many tender hands; and all the while the music thrilled, and all the while the shining from those glorious eyes was greater than the blazing noontide sun; indeed, there seemed the light of ten thousand suns concentrated in their effulgence. In their light the dark waters shone bright as burnished silver, and the air quivered with radiant glow, and the blue heavens above me were illumined with a dazzling brightness, which would have been blinding but for the intenser light reflected from all objects around me.

When I found voice to speak, I asked amazed: "Where am I? and who is the glorious one with shining eyes?" "This is the gospel ship," the music answered, "and He with the shining eyes is Christ, the Truth, and we are finite beings like yourself, made immortal through the following of the Truth. We have sung faith, or trust and hope, but now we sing the greatest song of all, which is LOVE!"

And as the light from those shining eyes entered my soul, I found that my spirit had become attuned to the harmony of the heavenly music, and I, too, began to sing the greatest song of all, which is LOVE!

STORY OF THE WHITE RIBBON.

BY KATHARINE PENFIELD.

It was Christmas eve, and with arms full of packages I was making my way through the crowd, out of one of the large fancy-goods stores of our city. Some one touched my shoulder and I met the bright, earnest gaze of a young man about twenty years of age. Reaching out his hand he grasped mine and said: "Excuse me, but you wear the white ribbon."

"Yes," I replied, "and I am quite proud of it, too."

He hesitated a moment and then said, "You don't know me? You met me down there," pointing to our right; his suddenly downcast head told that he meant our county jail. "Last June, you remember when the ladies came with flowers and gave us each a bouquet, you told us never to be afraid, when we came out, to speak to any woman who wore the white ribbon; that no offense would be taken, and that any service possible would be gladly rendered. I thought about it a good deal and when I came out, began to watch on the street for a white ribbon. But it's been several months now, and you are the first one I have met, and I have thought there couldn't be very many of you in this city who wear it, but I felt I must take your hand in spite of the crowd." Then he told me he had been steadily at work, at good wages, that he had signed the pledge, was trying to keep it and be a man, and thanking me for my readiness to stop and speak with him he went his way.

Some months ago I found myself obliged to wait two hours in the railroad station of a distant city. I noticed an elderly, well-dressed gentleman passing several times by the seat I occupied; at length he stopped and addressed me, with apologies for the seeming intrusion. He had chanced to overhear some conversation between myself and an employé of the road and learned my destination. "Madam," he said, "I see you wear the white ribbon. I know by that I can trust you and I feel it is not an intrusion to speak to you or to ask you to take charge of this young girl, who goes your way." He further told me that his interest in the W. C. T. U. had been recently increased by attendance upon a convention held in Philadelphia.

The two hours passed swiftly. I had been delightfully entertained, besides being able to secure a pleasant companion in my young friend for the remainder of my journey—and all because I wore the white ribbon.

THE following is the opinion of one of the most famous London journalists concerning that language which Americans are proud to call "United States": "There is something a little trying to the nerves in Americanese to those who have not learned the language; but when you have acquired it, there is a singular attraction in its slow drawl, its curious serenity, and what I may call passionate composure; its delightful individuality, its eccentricity of view, its perfect simplicity and startling and fascinating frankness."

THE PLAINT OF A PESSIMIST.

Nothing to do but work,
Nothing to eat but food,
Nothing to wear but clothes,
To keep one from going nude.

Nothing to breathe but air,
Quick as a flash 'tis gone;
Nowhere to fall but off,
Nowhere to stand but on.

Nothing to comb but hair,
Nowhere to sleep but in bed,
Nothing to weep but tears,
Nothing to bury but dead.

Nothing to sing but songs,
Ah! well, alas! alack!
Nowhere to go but out,
Nowhere to come but back.

Nothing to see but sights,
Nothing to quench but thirst,
Nothing to have but what we've got;
Thus through life we're cursed.

Nothing to strike but a gait;
Everything moves that goes;
Nothing at all but common sense
Can ever withstand these woes.

EXPERT EVIDENCE FROM EMINENT EDUCATORS CONCERNING TOBACCO.

BY SLYETTE E. ELDRED.

My own opinion is that no tobacco should be used by boys, and the less the better by men.

CHARLES W. ELIOT,
Cambridge, Mass. Pres. Harvard University.

It is contrary to the custom of the college for any professor or any student to use tobacco in any form. Nothing would induce us to give up this delightful freedom. We pity the people who cannot escape from the reeking spittoons and stale odors and stifling smoke of tobacco.

W. G. BALLANTINE,
Oberlin, O. Pres. Oberlin College.

No record of the effects of tobacco on students has been kept in this institution, so far as I can learn. My judgment is no less emphatic, however, that the tobacco habit is, in theory and in practice, unwholesome and unclean, first, last and always.

B. L. WHITMAN,
Pres. Colby University.

We disapprove of and discourage as much as we can the use of tobacco among our gentlemen students when one of them seems to be given to it. I think you could safely say that the habit of using tobacco must be of a rather detrimental character for those who are studying singing.

CARL FAELTON,
Director N. E. Conservatory of Music.
Boston, Mass.

On several occasions during the past two years, youths who have successfully passed the physical tests have developed eye trouble, soon after commencing to study. In three cases the expert oculist in New York reported that the weakness of vision was caused by tobacco poisoning, resulting from the continuous use of the "deadly cigarette" before coming to the Academy. The regulations of the Military Academy prohibit the use of tobacco, and prompt and severe punishment follows, if cadets are detected smoking.

JOHN M. WILSON,
West Point, N. Y. Supt. Military Academy.

Unquestionably, the most important matter in the health history of the students at this academy is that relating to the use of tobacco. I have urged upon the superintendent, as my last official utterance before leaving this institution, with which I have been so long and so pleasantly associated, the fact of the truth of which five years' experience as health officer of this station has satisfied me, that beyond all other things the future health and usefulness of the lads educated at this school require the absolute interdiction of tobacco.

In this opinion I have been sustained not only by all my colleagues, but by all other sanitarians in military and civil life whose views I have been able to learn, while I know it to be the belief of the officer who is to succeed me in the charge of this department, and who was one of the board of medical officers which, in 1875, reported "that the regulations against the use of tobacco in any form cannot be too stringent." Since then, three successive annual boards of visitors have indorsed the prohibition of tobacco "as a wise sanitary provision."

With a sense of the serious responsibility which devolves upon the sanitary officer of this establishment, conscious that the bodily welfare and happiness of these young men and of their future offspring may be permanently influenced by this vicious indulgence, I have most earnestly advised that the strongest efforts of the authorities of the Academy shall be directed toward the prevention of this pernicious, indefensible, and wholly unnecessary habit.

Permit me to instance a few physiological facts as evidence that this is something more than mere opinion:

"The effect of tobacco on the minute vessels at the termination of the arterial circuit is to cause contraction of them as a primary fact, resulting in impaired nutrition, especially of the nerve centers." (Richardson.)

"By causing irregularity in the supply of blood it degrades tissue." (Axon.)

"There is no doubt that it predisposes to neuralgia, vertigo, indigestion, and other affections of the nervous circulatory and digestive organs." (Hammond.)

"It lessens the natural appetite, more or less impairs digestion and induces constipation, while it irritates the mouth and throat, rendering the latter habitually congested and destroying the purity of the voice. It induces an habitual sense of uneasiness and nervousness, with epigastric sinking or tension, palpitation." (Stillé.)

"It renders the vision weak and uncertain. Similar derangements of hearing occur, with buzzing, ringing, etc., in the ears, and even hallucinations of this sense." (Stillé.)

"When the sight fails with smokers, and no appreciable change of structure can be found in the eye, tobacco poisoning may be assumed. The assumption is converted into certainty by the fact that appropriate remedies fail entirely while the habit of smoking is continued. In rare cases the susceptibility is so great that the smoking of a single cigar a day will produce it." (McSherry.)

By the continued excitation of the optic nerve tobacco produces amaurosis, a fact demonstrated by Wordsworth, Mackensie, Hutchinson, Sichel and Chisholm. The latter states in his report, "On the Poisonous Effects of Tobacco on the Eyesight," that in the past few years he had treated thirty-five cases of amaurosis directly traceable to the use of tobacco by smoking in every case but one.

I have, myself, several times rejected candidates for admission into the Academy, on account of defective vision, who confessed to the premature use of tobacco—one from the age of seven.

I learn from Professor Oliver, head of the department of drawing, that he can invariably recognize the user of tobacco by his tremulous hand, and by his absolute inability to draw a clean, straight line.

"Out of eighty-one smokers examined, twenty-three presented an intermittent pulse, independent of any cardiac lesion. This intermittency disappeared when the habit of smoking was abandoned. Among children from nine to fifteen, smoking undoubtedly causes palpitation and intermittent pulse." (Decaisne.)

The irregularity in the heart's action, which tobacco causes, is one of its most conspicuous effects. Candidates are annually rejected for cardiac disturbances, who have subsequently admitted the use of tobacco; the annual physical examinations of cadets reveal a large number of irritable hearts—tobacco hearts—among boys who had no such trouble when they entered the school. Among the applicants for enlistment in 1879, ten in a thousand were rejected for functional lesions of the heart, indicating tobacco poisoning.

Finally, the antidotal effect of tobacco makes drinking of stimulating liquors the natural consequence of smoking. Decaisne found, in the examinations already alluded to, of children under fifteen, many of them older than cadets whom I have known to be inveterate smokers, that "they furthermore might become dull, lazy and predisposed to the use of alcoholic drinks."

"When we see a man smoking and drinking, quaffing off the cup of wine or spirit to quiet the qualms which would otherwise be inflicted by the fumes of the cigar or pipe, we really observe a physiological experiment upon a living animal. The man is inducing a balance in the tension of his arterial circuit. In the end, the nutrition of the organic parts, which are under the influence of the same nervous regulation, is sure to suffer, and in many organizations to suffer fatally and rapidly." (Richardson).

"A youth of fourteen smoked fifteen cents worth of tobacco for toothache, fell down senseless and died the same day." (Druhen.)

"A medical student, aged twenty-two, after smoking a single pipe, fell into a frightful state, the heart became nearly motionless, the chest was constricted, the breathing painful, limbs contracted, pupils insensible, one contracted, the other dilated, and these symptoms lasted four days." (Blatin.)

"Often there is a feeling of a rush of blood to the head, with vertigo, and impairment of attention so as to prevent continuous mental effort; the mind is also apt to be filled with crude and groundless fancies, leading to self-distrust and melancholy. The sleep is frequently restless and disturbed by distressing dreams. It impairs muscular power and co-ordination, by interfering with nutrition and by exhausting nervous force, and usually keeps down the growth of muscle and the deposit of fat." (Stillé and Maisch in National Dispensatory, 1879.

Aside from the effect on the nutrition, the adult smoker must be conscious that tobacco is not an aid but an obstacle to mental application, and it was actually found in the Ecole Polytechnique, that "a comparison made between smokers and non-smokers showed that the non-smokers took the highest rank in every grade, and further, that the smokers continually lost grade."

An agent that is capable of such potent evil, which through its sedative effect upon the circulation creates a thirst for alcoholic stimulation, which exerts a depressing and disturbing effect upon the nerve centers, which determines functional diseases of the heart; which impairs vision, blunts the memory and interferes with mental effort and application ought, in my opinion as a sanitary officer, at whatever cost of vigilance, to be rigorously interdicted.

MORBID APPETITES.

BY HELEN L. MANNING.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, was recently asked in one of his Monday Evening Question-box lectures, if it were right, when children inherited a craving for stimulants like alcohol and tobacco, to gratify the craving. In reply he said that he did not believe children ever inherited morbid appetites; if they lived where they could have an abundance of peaches, plums, pears and other fruits with finely flavored juices, they would not be likely to take up these bad habits. What children sometimes do inherit is a weak nervous system, a weak will and a weak constitution. A feeble, nervous, weak-willed child may be prevailed upon to take whisky or tobacco and grow to like their effects. The direct effects of tobacco on the nervous system are soothing and quieting—the remote effects are not considered by the users. Dr. Kellogg said that once he was expostulating with a clergyman for using tobacco, when he responded:

"This is my refuge. I hide away from my cares and troubles in a cloud of tobacco smoke. When I get tired out with my parish duties or weary from writing sermons, I seek the solace of a good cigar."

Now all that tobacco did for this misguided man was to obtund his nerves and stupefy him. He was just as tired as he was before, only he had ceased to realize his fatigue.

A child ought to be educated in fortitude, courage and endurance so as to meet the trials of life without the aid of any artificial stimulant, and he ought to have his appetite so educated that he will have no morbid cravings. There seems to be a growing desire in the world for some kind of a nerve tickle, or nerve-obtunding drug which shall give a temporary, artificial felicity. But this is simply discounting future enjoyment for the sake of having it to-day, and is very much like discounting a good note for 50 per cent. of its face value.

FOR THE FARMER'S WIFE.

LEMON SYRUP.

One pint strained juice, one and one-quarter pounds sugar. Let it simmer until it becomes clear; when cold, bottle and cork tightly. Pineapple syrup may be prepared in the same manner.

ICED TEA.

Green and black tea mixed. Make in the morning, strain and set aside in a cool place. Drink from glasses, served with platter of broken ice, garnished with small grape leaves. A slice of lemon for each glass improves flavor.

RASPBERRY VINEGAR.

Four quarts red raspberries, vinegar to cover, let stand twenty-four hours; scald and strain, add pound of sugar to pint of juice, boil and bottle. Use one large spoonful for glass of water.

CANNING PEARS.

Make a syrup of half a pound sugar and a quart of water to every two quarts of fruit. When syrup boils put in the pears, and when they can be pricked with a fork pack in hot cans, pour scalding syrup over them and seal.

IN London, one in every fifteen citizens dies in the workhouse, the hospital or the penitentiary. In England, eighty out of every hundred homes bear a valuation of but $100. In London, only one boy in forty attends any kind of school after he is twelve years old, and it goes without saying that the percentage is much smaller among girls. One million two hundred thousand of the residents in London live on less than five dollars a week per family, and 300,000 are in chronic want of food. In the poorer parts there is one public house to every eighty persons; there are 90,000 actual paupers, and yet the charities are such that there would be five dollars apiece for every man, woman and child in the city of London annually.

And the feast of harvest, the first fruits of thy labours, which thou hast sown in the field: and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field.—Ex. 23:16.

OUR "HARVEST HOME."

"Harvest Home" signifies the ingathering. It implies seed sowing, planting, watering, reaping. In short, it implies work; work of mingled pleasure and pain; work encouraging and discouraging. It is readily seen that in order to successfully observe this red-letter day—Membership Crusade Day and Children's Harvest Home—it is necessary to begin preparations months before. We must first make ready the soil for the kind of seed we intend to sow, and after sowing, must, as far as possible, keep out the weeds.

Every local union should commence preparations for Harvest Home as soon as the annual conventions are over. If each department would, at the beginning of the W. C. T. U. year, formulate a practical plan of work, and then do its best to systematically carry out that plan, it could not fail to receive the reward of its faithfulness. Especially is this true with regard to work among children. There are many devices, such as the distribution of "seed pennies," and tiny potted plants (to be utilized in the Harvest Home decorations) which will aid the L. T. L's to keep in view the time of the ingathering, and encourage them to work for the "increase" in the membership and in the treasury.

The celebration of the day itself with an entertaining and instructive program rendered by the children will make it also one of wide interest to the "grown-ups," and add, incidentally, moral and financial support to the W. C. T. U.

It seems fitting that Harvest Home should be observed on Miss Willard's birthday. We feel sure that no celebration of that day could better please our beloved "chief" and "elder(ly) sister" of the L. T. L's than this of "bringing in the sheaves," thus demonstrating the activity and faithfulness of white ribbon workers, young and old.

And now, taking it for granted that our president and editor-in-chief is obeying orders and taking absolute rest, and does not read even THE UNION SIGNAL, we seize this opportunity of making a few personal remarks "unbeknownst" to her. We would urge upon our unions the advisability of emphasizing upon this occasion—the celebration of her birthday—the beneficent and wide-spread influence which Frances E. Willard has had, and we hope is yet to have in the world. Emphasize it, not by the use of fulsome flattery or conventional compliments, not by magnifying her personality, but by setting forth in as vivid a manner as possible the ideas for which she stands pre-eminent—the Christian temperance idea—the woman idea, the human idea. Picture her to the boys and girls, the coming citizens of our country, as the embodiment of an ideal patriotism; picture her as the ideal mother-heart which is large enough and strong enough to contain the whole world. Men and women are born hero-worshipers. Show them in Frances Willard one of the most heroic lives the world has ever known!

"'Hitch your wagon to a star'? Pshaw!" exclaimed an enthusiastic Y, "I'll hitch mine to Frances Willard and get there before you do."

All of which simply means that our beloved leader is a shining example of a Christ-like consecration to the service of humanity. May she long be spared to lead the work and the workers, is the fervent prayer of every white-ribboner this day!

THE RELATION OF THE CHURCH TO THE STATE.

"Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and unto God the things that are God's." "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." In these words Christ struck the keynote of His attitude toward the temporal power of His time, and we believe, of what should be the attitude of His church towards the temporal power. It was an attitude which alienated from Him many of His immediate followers and which finally cost Him the allegiance of His nation. Mistaking it, His later disciples have made their most grievous errors.

As the reward of obedience to Jehovah the Jewish nation was promised autonomy and earthly prosperity; subjection and ruin overtook them (the prophesied penalty of their broken faith), and language is exhausted to image forth the glories of the Messiah's kingdom who should come to deliver them from their foes. Their whole conception of a victorious all-conquering nation was of a theocracy. At the coming of Christ the expectation of the people was fixed upon a temporal king. Overlooking the necessary spiritual condition upon which all the promises were based, they looked forward with assured confidence to the glorious reign of the King of kings who should deliver them from the hated rule of their conquerors. He came, but refused the crown they were so eager to press upon Him. They crucified their king and with him all their hopes.

Had the Jews as a nation accepted the humble teacher whose doctrines dashed all of their hopes, the turbulence and rebellion which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the exile of the nation would have been subdued and out of the ruins of the Roman Empire, filled with the life which animates Christian nations to-day, Judea would have arisen the greatest world power that had yet existed. But, blinded by their visions of an earthly conqueror, they turned aside from the glorious future that opened before them, and to-day Israel wanders over the face of the earth, the outcast of nations.

But the mistake which Israel made Christians have been prone to follow. It is very hard for our human nature to learn that no real conquest (outside the realm of mere material things) is ever made by force; that mind can be subjugated only by ideas. Impatient of the slow progress of the doctrines of Christ over the hearts and minds of men, Christians have striven to hasten these conquests by force. Like the five thousand whom He fed in the wilderness, the would-be followers of Christ have been determined to take Him by force and make Him a king after their own petty conceptions of kingship. But the kingdoms set up "In His Name" serve only to emphasize His refusal of an earthly crown.

The whole history of man's attempt to unite church and state is one long illustration of the truth, "My ways are not your ways, neither are my thoughts your thoughts; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts." In the name of Him who bade His followers turn the other cheek to the person who smote them upon one; to love their enemies and pray for their persecutors; whose last miracle of healing was performed for one of the mob that came to drag Him to His doom, and upon the cross prayed for His murderers, Christians of whatever name, when temporal power has been the ally of the church, have silenced those who differed from them with torture and death. So, too, when man would establish a universal kingdom, fire and sword, torture and death are his instruments for bringing his fellow mortals under his supremacy. Time passes, conspirators murder this king of rebellious subjects or he is forced to yield to the superior prowess of some greater conqueror.

God, too, seeks a universal kingdom. The stone cut out of the mountain without hands is destined to fill the whole earth. But no such ephemeral sovereignty over unwilling and rebellious subjects meets His requirements. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; of the increase of His government there shall be no end. But a kingdom thus secure from conspiracy and dissensions cannot be established by any methods known to men. Force can neither create nor maintain it. It must be sustained by willing subjects, and the King refuses all others. The only chain which can bind the subjects of His kingdom is the chain of love. The King wove the chain, and earned His right to the unwavering allegiance of His subjects by giving His life for them. Having been lifted up from the earth, He waits patiently until the great sacrifice shall have drawn all men to Him.

We may well long for the coming of that kingdom so unlike anything that men have ever set up. Its glories we cannot overestimate. We can but dimly picture the blessedness of the reign which will inaugurate unbroken peace on earth, good-will to men. But we shall only hinder its coming if we seek to hasten it by man's methods, if we arbitrarily unite church and state. The past and the present clearly prove that these attempts only injure the cause they seek to aid. The Jews in their bitter resentment of foreign rule would have none but a temporal king for their long looked-for Messiah. They scorned the gentle doctrines of Him who sought to turn the hearts of the people away from their earthly aspirations to God. They closed their ears to His words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The Prince of Peace was no prince for them. They crucified Him and with Him perished also their hopes as a people. So the Christian church whenever it has sought first the things that come only as the fruits of the kingdom of God, when it calls to its aid the power of the state and would compel men's allegiance by force, has defeated itself. We have happily outgrown the age of savage persecution, yet still in the union of church and state the church suffers only loss.

God has made man a free moral agent. He who knows the nature He has made, leaves His creature free even to defy His Creator. Man must choose God freely, must serve Him voluntarily else the service is not accepted. And man thus endowed with freedom, instinctively claims his birthright and resents any attempt on the part of his fellow-man to deprive him of it. Hence when human law demands of him allegiance to a power whose reign is primarily over the spiritual forces of his nature and which derives its prerogatives from the unforced dictates of his own conscience, he rebels. That is a domain over which human law has no rightful authority.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Because it is the kingdom of God, it must be set up in God's way, not man's. To serve its interests we must seek to learn God's ways. We can hasten its coming not by linking it to earthly powers and potentates nor by bringing to its defence armed hosts and the murderous implements of warfare, but by living and proclaiming its truths until the little leaven shall leaven the whole lump. Only thus, by the glad surrender of each individual soul can the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

RESULTS OF THE RELIGIOUS PARLIAMENT.

"A consummate triumph of liberalism," says a representative Chicago newspaper, referring to the World's Parliament of Religions. We would call it rather a consummate triumph of Christianity. That a Christian nation should be the first to break down the barriers of religious prejudice; that Christian churches should call together the first international congress of religions, and extend the hand of fellowship to brothers hitherto widely separated from them by bigotry and dogma, speaks more emphatically than words for the truth of Christianity, and for its claims as the highest of all religious ideals.

The parliament is in itself a splendid exemplification of the teachings of the Christ of the gospels, and demonstrates the fact that with a clearer understanding of those teachings, with the growth of the Christ idea, comes a consciousness of the common origin of all religions, and of the truth that "in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him." And the readiness with which leaders of the ten chief religions of the world responded to the invitation of Christianity and came from the four corners of the earth to greet their "brothers and sisters of America" is (as the most creed-bound Christian must admit) evidence that their religion, by whatever name called, has borne at least some good fruit. Any faith which develops a spirit of brotherliness, which opens the ear to the cry of the world and stretches out a helping hand to struggling humanity, is in its nature divine. Pure and undefiled religion is ever the same, and the blemishes found in any system are due not to religion, but to man's imperfect application of it.

One effect of the parliament of religions upon the earnest truth-seeker must be to emphasize the pertinency of the injunction, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." We rejoice when the disciples of Confucius in China discriminate between the religion of America as exemplified in the parliament and the religion of America as set forth in the Geary exclusion law; we heartily applaud when a Buddhist priest from Japan, while voicing his sympathy and coöperation with a Christianity which acts upon the principle of a common brotherhood, at the same time declares his scorn and hatred for "Christianity" as portrayed in the treaties of the Christian nations with his country. Let us in the same spirit discriminate between the true and the false in non-Christian religions. We do not want China or Japan or India to judge our national religion by certain sinful practices—the liquor traffic, for instance—carried on in the name of Christianity; neither should we regard the degrading customs which flourish in oriental lands as distinctive features of their religious faith.

Religion (from ligo, to bind, and re, again) signifies that which rebinds man to his Maker, that which reunites Father and child, and any system of philosophy or ethics which succeeds in bringing about this reconciliation—anything which impels the son to arise and go to his Father—belongs to the domain of true religion. And who, sitting an interested listener in the halls of the Art Institute the past three weeks, will deny that there is much in non-Christian faiths which bears the unmistakable impress of the Divine Teacher, the Spirit of Truth, which comes direct from our common Father?

The practical study of comparative religions afforded by the parliament proves that there exists in the minds of all men a subtle and instinctive recognition of the true relation between God and man, which, sooner or later, and by divers methods, wells up into consciousness. "Creation, not redemption, conferred religion on man," said Dr. Lyman Abbott. "All men are seeking God whether they know it or not. The incentive—the law of growth toward God—is in ourselves and nothing can pluck it out." The one main point of resemblance revealed by this presentation of the different religious systems by their representative men is that each one has a Saviour who came not to create but to develop religion, and that the soul's salvation is dependent upon the conscious presence of that Saviour in the heart.

Divinity in humanity! This was the key-note of the parliament; a note which awakens a responsive thrill in every truth-hungry soul, and which, struck for the first time in history by the religious world in unison, shall continue to echo round the globe in swelling chorus until above the din and roar of life's battlefield the grand diapason shall sound full and clear, attuning every heart to the divine harmony, and hushing into silence every discordant note in creed and dogma. He who finds God in man finds the Christ of the gospels, the universal Saviour, no matter by what name they may call Him.

Every speaker, every participant in the unique and stirring scenes of this remarkable congress, appeared profoundly impressed with the prophetic significance of the occasion. All seemed to realize that the event signalized the ushering in of a new era for the human race. "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord," exclaimed one Christian leader under the inspiration of the opening scene. And, indeed, the world seems to have had a new revelation of that glory, the parliament seems to have thrown a vivid flash-light upon the prophecies concerning the coming of the universal King. If we, as Christians, would hasten the millennial day, we must not fail to recognize the truth that "God fulfills himself in many ways," and that all His children are equally precious in His sight. Let us remember that the simple shepherd watching his flocks on the Judean hills, and the scholarly philosopher of the far East, wresting truth from mystical lore and occult science, each received the heavenly vision. And though to the one it came with the glory of a warm, close radiance which shone "round about" him, and to the other with the colder brilliancy of the far-off star, both were led to the same shrine, both were guided by the same spirit to the humble cradle of the Holy Child.

We deplore the fact that there should be a single Christian teacher or preacher in our land who is fearful of the influence of the parliament upon the religion of our western civilization. True Christianity must gain immeasurably by this contact with other forms of worship. It is only bigotry and fanaticism that have received a death-blow. This fraternal conference has but furnished additional proof of the preëminent inclusiveness of the Christian faith. It has shown that the "hundred names of God" are all contained in the one word LOVE, the Christian's name for the divine Father. All that is good and true and beautiful in oriental religions, ancient and modern, is found in the teachings of the Man of Nazareth, who adds to them the finishing touch, the highest truth of all. The founders of other religious systems point their disciples to the way of salvation, to the truth, to the higher life. Only one man—Jesus—rose to that sublime height where He could say, "I am the Way, I am the Truth, I am the Life." Other masters claimed to be teachers; Jesus claimed to be both teacher and the thing taught. He was and is, not only the door through which man goes to God, but the door through which God comes to man. "Jesus is man at his climax," said Joseph Cook, which is to say he represents that perfect union of the human and the divine, which all religions (that have any right to be called religions at all) agree is the supreme goal.

We can have nothing to fear from the parliament of religions, for the hand of God is in it. It is in harmony with His word as revealed in the gospels; it is in harmony with His word as unfolded in nature; above all is it in harmony with that word as it comes in living power to the hearts of men. The religion of the Orient and the religion of the Occident each has its rightful place in the divine economy, and the time will come when truth wedded to truth shall show to the world a rounded perfection measuring up to the stature of the fullness of Christ. The first world's parliament of religions will prove, we believe, a mighty factor in the winning of religious thought the world over, in the gathering of truth and the scattering of error, thus aiding in bringing about the great consummation—the union of God and man, of Heaven and earth.

AMONG the many prominent figures at the Parliament of Religions, Joseph Cook is avowedly in the lead. Though seldom occupying a front seat on the platform, he is inevitably singled out in his modest place by many hundred pairs of eyes in the audience, and the expressions on his interesting face are an index to the character of the speaker's ideas. He is quick to applaud what he approves, and his silence is equally potent in disapproving what he condemns. "In a certain sense," remarked one of the daily papers, "he has come to be looked upon as the representative of orthodox Protestant Christianity of the stricter type at the parliament." The following paragraphs are from a printed interview as to his views of the effects of the parliament:

There are now no foreign lands. The antipodes are neighbors. There can be no more hermit nations. Speed of intercommunication is such that the world hereafter is to be healed or poisoned very much as a whole. International conventions of many kinds are a natural outgrowth of our new day. It was never before so easy or so important as now for Occident and Orient to understand each other. I am a friend of the Parliament of Religions and earnestly believe that good will come from it. But I have had some fears as to parts of it, and yet I think my hopes are now stronger than my fears. It is too early yet for a final estimate. It was supposed at first that Christianity would concede doctrinal parity with herself to the various faiths represented. All that I understand now to be conceded is parliamentary parity. It was feared by some critics that no adequate representation of the devotional spirit which ought to be common to all religions would be allowed, but every meeting has begun by the use of the Lord's Prayer, and sometimes Christian hymns have been sung. With very few exceptions all the speeches and papers have been marked by a spirit of devoutness. The liberty of open discussion by the faiths which Christianity opposes is secured by the courtesy of Christian managers. This courtesy should not be misinterpreted in the Orient as indicating that there is a large demand in America for the propagation of faiths hostile to the Christian religion. It is possible that some representatives of Mohammedanism, Hindooism, Confucianism, and especially of Buddhism may be greatly encouraged by the marked attention shown them here and go home and report that America is ripe for spiritual revolutions in favor of some one or other of the non-Christian faiths. If such an impression is received it will be a great mistake. The courtesies shown to the various strange faiths is characteristic of American love of free discussion and parliamentary fair play, and it is not to be understood as any abandonment of the general Christian positions of the management.

. . . . . .

Time will show that the non-Christian faiths have made no serious impression here. We have called to a parliament the representatives of those faiths, but we expect to send out missionaries hereafter as heretofore to teach Christianity at the ends of the earth. It is a preposterous rumor that there are twenty thousand Buddhists in Boston. So far as my personal knowledge goes, I do not know a single person born on this side of the Atlantic who believes in Buddhism.

. . . . . .

I hold it to be a demonstrable fact in philosophy and history that only Christianity can provide for man's deliverance from the love of sin and from the guilt of it without violating any of the self-evident truths of ethics. I affirmed only that if the ethnic faiths would carry out their schemes of thought and belief in consistency with the self-evident truths everywhere admitted they would grow from torsos into full statues. When all the faiths of the world make their peace with self-evident truths and with the necessity of man's deliverance from the love of sin and the guilt of it, then the different religions will have made their peace with each other, and there will be but one religion. This is my watchword for one universal faith.

On Duty has been in attendance upon the Religious Parliament for the past two weeks and has so thoroughly enjoyed the "feast of reason and flow of soul" that she cannot resist devoting her column this week to quotations from a few of the inspiring addresses. Let this serve as an explanation only, as apology would be out of place in the face of such a feast.

Lady Henry Somerset's letter of greeting was received with great applause. Among many excellent things, she said: "By nature and nurture I am in sympathy with every effort by which men may be induced to think together along the lines of their agreement rather than of their antagonism, but we all know that it is more easy to get them together. For this reason the congresses which set forth the practical workings of various forms of religion were predestined to succeed, and their influence must steadily increase as intelligent men and women reflect upon the record of the results. It is the earnest hope of thoughtful religious people throughout the world, as all can see who study the press from a cosmopolitan point of view, that out of the nucleus of influence afforded by the congress may come an organized movement for united activity based on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

"Two things Christendom has proved it is unable to cope with. Those are the drink habit and the gambling evil. Chicago is to-day dominated by the saloon and the gambling den. But Mohammedanism is the greatest total abstinence society in the world, and Mohammedanism will not allow the testimony of a gambler in its courts of law. Therefore it seems to me it might be a good thing if the Mohammedans would establish several good living missions right here in Chicago!"—Mrs. Eliza Sunderland.

"No man knows God; all strive with their highest powers to create Him by aspiration, and we need in this vast effort, not the support of some single sect alone, like Roman Catholics or Buddhist, but the strength and sympathy of the human race. What brings us here to-day, what unites us, but that we are altogether seeking after God, if haply we may find Him? We shall find, if we find Him at all, individually by opening each for himself the barriers between the created and the Creator."—Thomas W. Higginson.

"Let us bring woman down from the clouds where the poets have sometimes placed her, and let us bring her up from the slime where beastly passions have dragged her, and let us place her on a good, solid, clean earth by the side of man, and so that the twentieth century may see man and woman sitting side by side full summed in all their powers, dispensing gladness and each reverencing each, and living even as they should, in love."—Rev. Annis F. Eastman.

"In educating the masses and in extending enlightenment to our women you can do much. Every year you are lavishing—I shall not say wasting—mints of money on your so-called foreign missions and missionaries sent out as you think to carry the Bible and its salvation to the 'heathen Hindoos.' Little do you ever dream that your money is expended in spreading abroad nothing but Christian dogmatism, Christian bigotry and Christian pride. I entreat you to expend at least one-tenth of all this vast fortune in sending out unsectarian, broad-hearted, educational missionaries that will spend all their efforts and energies in educating our women and our masses."—*Rev. ON DUTY.

THE BEAUTY OF INTELLECTUAL CULTURE.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

The most wretched of all persons is she who, in the midst of sorrow, isolation, or reverses, has no intellectual resources. Pleasures fail, friends are not always at hand, and trials are sure to befall. Then aside from the consolations of a religious faith and philosophy, what can be so helpful as the delight of intellectual pursuits?

"I cannot give wealth to my daughters," said a thoughtful man, "and it would not give them happiness if I could. It might render them hard and unloving. Neither can I insure them against sorrow and disappointment. But I can do one thing, after instilling good principles and a sense of humanity, and that is to foster a taste for good, healthy literature, and a love of culture. That, alone, will make them forget pain and the regrets that come even into the sunniest life."

I thought him a wise father and sighed to think how few like him there were.

Most parents think their duty done when they have sent their children to a good school and have provided for their use a few classics and a popular magazine. They are allowed to pick up books here and there; and, as popular taste is by no means of a high standard, they are likely to read slipshod literature, books thrown off the press with no merit under heaven, but with much want of merit, if not positive vice. The one safeguard is the cultivation of a high literary taste, the keen appetite for the best reading and for conversation with persons of noble intelligence.

By such persons I mean those of the finest aspirations; those who have studied and thought, as well as read good books. To read without reflection is like pouring water upon sand, it passes through and carries nothing with it. To associate with the unaspiring is to keep to a low level, not to arise to the higher springs of life.

Why are we placed in this world of superb and complex interest and beauty, a world which challenges all our powers to even observe its most superficial aspects, a world where every living plant and animal is instinct with mysterious life that unfolds itself to our comprehension only after loving, continuous, sympathetic study, if not to develop our intellectual powers by every means within our reach? Says Lowell:

"Life, the one block
Of marble, that vouchsafed whereon to carve
Our great thoughts, white and godlike, to shine down
The future. Life, the irredeemable block,
Which one o'er hasty chisel-cut oft mars."

If it were possible, more than man, woman needs intellectual culture. Once the opposite was thought to be true. To know anything beyond a smattering of music and French, to interest one's self in social problems, even to think at all, was a crime. A woman ought to be amusing, graceful, dependent, clinging. Her ideal was that of a grown-up child, pouting and perverse, pretty and prim, rather than a being with a soul. She was expected to live only in her emotions and her affections. Reasoning was not required. To exercise judgment, to discard prejudice, to be anything larger than a partisan, the slave of every whim, was to be a female monster. And so this inadequate conception of the womanly nature perpetuated itself through the ages, in the harems of the East and under the very shields of chivalry it balefully flowered, and its hot and fetid blossoms scattered their seeds over all the world.

But the divine nature is too strong to be crushed. One after another revolted at her restricted life. Sometimes the chains of custom and habit, forged in ignorance, galled her to the quick. Though ofttimes wreathed in roses, they were forever chains. Revolts grew more frequent as man himself developed. Here and there a tortured, struggling spirit revenged itself upon the sensuous hypocrisies of society, and in the search for a purer freedom sorely beat its untried wings against the bars that hemmed it in.

Such was the case with George Sand, that "man's brain with a woman's heart," that, in spite of all mistakes, won the reverence of Mrs. Browning. The latter understood the truth that all passionate souls in transitional periods are apt to display eccentricities. In the shadows of those mountain peaks that the rays of the morning sun first kiss, and whence is visible a broader horizon than can be seen by dwellers in a narrow valley, yawn deep, dark, abysmal gulfs. God seldom gives greatness without some corresponding weakness, thus preserving the general average. No growth takes place in straight lines, and the grandest aspirations do not always go hand in hand with judgment.

Mary Woolstonecraft was another who rebelled at perpetual childhood. Voicing the torment of her spirit, she uttered the word that was given her to speak, and so helped prepare the way for something better. At least she set her sisters to thinking, and that was needful.

Time passed until the royal soul of Margaret Fuller, the Minerva of the first half of the 19th century, took up the minor strains that had been chanted in such feeble, wailing tones through all the ages. A prophet, running before her era, she foretold with vibrant voice, truths that are only just now making themselves felt in social life. The gist of it all is, "Live out your own free, interior life." She says, "The gain of creation consists in the growth of individual minds that live and aspire as flowers bloom and birds sing in the midst of morasses, and in the continual thought of human destiny, which is given to eternity adequately to express, and which ages of failure only seemingly impede." "The truest grandeur of life is in the union of the power to discern truth with the sensibility to love it supremely. For this is the divinest use to which God, its author, can put it, and we so far identify ourselves with Him as we work lovingly in His ways to His ends." Golden words are these!

To the end of discerning truth, intellectual culture is imperative. It is Ruskin who says, "Truth cannot in any wise be prepared and sold in packages ready for use. Truth must be ground for every man by himself, out of its husk, with such help as he can get, indeed, but not without stern labor of his own. In what science is knowledge to be had cheap?"

It need not be forgotten, however, that the intellect is clear, cold, colorless. Like the sunshine it explores every nook and cranny and reveals what is, not what we hope and believe. That we must accept and declare. The process of so doing is the preliminary step in attaining intellectual culture.

And it must continue all our life long. Never can we yield the duty of observing, analyzing, comparing, reflecting and then of drawing logical conclusions. If we love truth supremely, often and again we shall reach it by the same intuitive process by which the bee sucks the honey-bearing flower. Our Maker has so constituted the soul that it at once, if not prevented, if in harmony with His laws, recognizes its natural pabulum. Not the less should we apply the plumb and square of the intellect to ratify the correctness of the intuition. And only by this method can woman balance the marvelous depth of her emotional nature.

But this is not all. The intellect is neither moral nor immoral. It is simply unmoral. It never led a martyr to the stake. Truth is its instrument, not its end. It needs warmth. Intellect contains the rays of light, not heat. It lacks the warming, fructifying love inherent in the womanly nature. It needs to be vivified by faith, that "antiseptic of the soul." Love and the faith that is its handmaid, illuminated by the intellect, are the last and best aids to human character.

As the fine grain of wood is visible only after polishing, so the loveliest characteristics of humanity may be unexpressed until they have been brought out by intellectual culture.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

Your reporter, like the rest of the world, has been to the World's Fair, and as a natural consequence this letter is late. If occasionally a worker takes a vacation the work does not, and New York workers are active as ever.

CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY.

White-ribboners met for their annual convention at Ellington and a magnificent report of the meeting is published in The Advance, including the president's address in full. The Advance has a W. C. T. U. department edited by Mrs. Harriet S. Marsh, who evidently understands her duty and performs it. Seventy-seven delegates were present besides many visitors.

The two evenings were taken up with a lecture by Miss Harriet May Mills and a young ladies' entertainment. Miss Lillian Phelps, of Toronto, who was spending a few days in that section, was present and gave timely help in many ways. Mrs. Mead and Mrs. Marsh were chosen delegates to the National Convention at Chicago. The old officers were all reëlected except the treasurer who, on account of absence, could not accept. Excellent resolutions were adopted, plans of work laid down and everything which goes toward making a successful meeting was done.

WAYNE COUNTY

convention is reported in the Alliance published at Sodus. Among other things it says: "If one would see broad, true womanhood at its best collectively; keen, intellectual, stately, yet tender, maternal and holy, nowhere is it better displayed than at these conventions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." And as this answers for every other county as well as Wayne, I quote it. The address of the evening was given by our state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, who held the close attention of her audience in spite of extreme heat. Mrs. Burt outlined the work of our state during past years, and gave a brief summary of the work done during this year. A gain in membership of 1,500 means much, while the work accomplished has been truly great. She reviewed the legislative work, spoke of our law enforcing the teaching of scientific temperance in public schools; of the law which prohibits the sale of liquor on any fair ground, and many other laws which have been helped along by the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Miss H. Ellen Orton was elected president for the coming year.

DELAWARE COUNTY

comes next on the list, holding its annual convention at Bovina. Rev. Dr. Lee, of Frankinville, formerly pastor of the church in which the convention was held, gave cheering and encouraging words. He recalled the time some years ago when a little Welsh girl, about sixteen years of age, stood on that platform to plead for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. That little girl is known to New York white-ribboners as Susanna Evans Pech, of New York City.

Rev. I. Park, of Walton, gave the address the first evening, and Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, state superintendent of Sunday-school work, on the second evening. In the afternoon Mrs. Bidwell gave an illustrated address to the children, which was enjoyed by young and old alike.

This county has taken up fourteen departments, with a bright, active superintendent over each. The county is well organized, having nineteen towns and twenty-six unions.

A male quartette furnished music both evenings, which was highly enjoyed by all. Good music adds much to the pleasure and profit of our conventions.

FULTON COUNTY

met at Northville, in the Baptist church, with a goodly delegation present. Fifty-four delegates represented the five unions in the county. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, state superintendent of evangelistic work was present, and gave a Bible reading and a talk on social purity. In the evening a gold medal contest was held, interspersed with fine music. The pastors of the three churches all assisted in making the convention a success.

Some of the ladies from Fulton county, in company with Mrs. Weaver, went into Hamilton county (which is the only unorganized county in our state), and held a meeting at Wells. The people were deeply interested. The result was that a local union was started there, and we trust the seed sown may bring forth an abundant harvest.

SCHOHARIE COUNTY

held its annual convention at Sharon Springs, nearly every union being represented. Miss Lizzie Margetts, of Candor, Tioga county, was present, and gave a most instructive Bible reading, besides delivering the address of the evening. Miss Margetts is one of our youngest workers, and during the past months has done much to build up our work. She spent two weeks in this county, organizing four new unions and increasing the membership one hundred and six. She held a parlor meeting every day to explain department work, in addition to the public meeting. She also organized a Y in Sullivan county, and gained fifty new members. Let us have more of such workers. We feel like thanking God continually for the consecrated young women who can accomplish great things when "In His Name" they undertake them.

Three new departments were taken up, and superintendents appointed. The membership of the county is nearly two hundred. A gold medal contest occupied the second evening.

TOMPKINS COUNTY,

although not yet a year old, is one of the most active and aggressive in the state. A temperance paper, The Plain Truth, published weekly, is a help to them in keeping the work before the people. A Fourth of July picnic was held at Freeville in Riverside Park under the auspices of the county union, the county president, Mrs. Carrie E. Bouton, of Ithaca, having charge. The Juvenile League of Freeville assisted in the exercises, several clergymen lent their aid, and with music added, a fine program was rendered. As the day drew to a close all felt that much had been done to counteract the influence of the saloon on that day.

OTHER COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

A late report of a convention held with Nelson union in Madison county comes to me which contains many good things. A practical paper was presented by Mrs. Helen M. Jarvis, entitled, "Let Us Prepare for Suffrage."

Following this, the special topic of this convention, scientific temperance instruction, was introduced by a roll-call of the unions who answered to the question, "What have you done in the department of scientific temperance instruction?" Mrs. Lytie P. Davies, state superintendent, was then introduced, who responded to the question, "What more can we do?"

Mrs. Keating, the first lady commissioner of schools in the state, being elected from Oswego county, gave an excellent paper on the subject, "How can the teacher best teach temperance?" This was followed by discussion and questions ably answered by Mrs. Davies on this department of work, which naturally also includes our present and coming franchise privileges, which occupied the remainder of the afternoon.

The evening session was opened with a praise and promise service. A royal welcome was given by Mrs. Bowers and also by the pastor of the church, and was responded to by Mrs. McDonald, of Oneida, author of the temperance book, "Apple Seeds." A fine address was given by Mrs. Davies.

The morning session was occupied by the county paper, edited this time by Mrs. Gifford, of Lakeport. This paper is edited by different unions and read at each convention. Resolutions were read and adopted, indorsing the Temperance Temple, also words of love and sympathy to Miss Willard. Help in entertaining the state convention was pledged to Onondaga county. School Commissioner Daniel Keating was present during the morning session, and gave us words of encouragement in regard to our work in the department of scientific temperance instruction, which he observes as he visits the schools in his district.

A most interesting and instructive school of methods was held in Tully Park, Onondaga county, conducted by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, first vice-president of the state in which every department of work was discussed, and the methods most helpful to the carrying out of the plans of work were fully explained. A parliamentary drill was especially helpful, and among other things the duties of officers received considerable attention.

Tompkins County has recently held its second annual convention at Dryden, and special mention is made of the beautiful decorations, so deftly arranged that our emblematic colors, white and yellow, alone were visible, while evergreens, tied with white ribbons, made a charming background. This county, organized last year, is a strong "infant," and we are proud of her. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, our state superintendent of evangelistic work, was present, and was a power. Her Bible readings and wise counsels added much to the success of the convention. Mrs. P. J. Adams, state organizer, who worked so faithfully in this county a year ago, was also present, and all felt grateful for her presence and assistance.

The superintendents reported good work done, and the department of fair work was taken up. A paper, entitled, "Woman's Part in the Redemption of Man," was read, and ordered published in our state organ. Much business was transacted, and plans formed for future work, which will increase both membership and influence. All the officers were reëlected, and my correspondent says "the entire session was marked by a spirit of consecration and perfect harmony."

The annual convention of Allegany county was held in Belfast. After the usual routine business and address of welcome the annual address of the president was listened to with closest attention, and was well calculated to arouse all to a more forward movement. A paper presenting the economic side of the temperance and labor question, prepared by Mrs. H. B. Mason, was read, recommending total abstinence as the best remedy for hard times and high taxes. In the evening Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman spoke on the suffrage question—while during the day also this subject came in for its full share of attention, and the responsibility resting upon the women in the fall election of school commissioner was made emphatic.

All the officers were reëlected. Among the resolutions was one of love and appreciation of P. A. Burdick, of Alfred Center, whose recent death they greatly lamented. Cut down in early manhood when his work seemed so necessary, yet he leaves a record behind him of which any man might feel proud. Not alone in Allegany county will he be missed, but in every place where he was known.

This county boasts of one of the best temperance camps in all the country around, located at Cuba. On W. C. T. U. day at that camp, the morning was given to an elocutionary contest which was fine, and a great help in making public sentiment. In the afternoon Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap addressed the people in her own forcible way, the meeting being presided over by Mrs. V. A. Willard, county president.

Niagara County has just held a most successful convention at Gasport. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver was present during the first day and evening, conducting a consecration service which will long be remembered, and giving a fine address. She was also very helpful in many other ways. A severe storm kept many at home this first day, and consequently much was crowded into the second day, but the business was kept well in hand and was conducted with order and dispatch by our efficient county president, Mrs. Ruth A. Frost. The reports of officers and superintendents were good, and received with applause; the annual address of the president was fine, and was published next day in our Lockport papers.

Mrs. Frost was reëlected president, and after her election she was presented with a beautiful writing desk and book-case combined, the presentation being made by Mrs. E. G. Dietrick, president of Lockport union, which is the oldest union in the county. Mrs. Frost, after her surprise was over, responded in a very happy manner, and this incident left a warm spot in every heart and each worker resolved that during the coming year no "black marks" should be set over against her name in the records which shall be kept in that desk. Mrs. Frost was also made a life member of the state union.

Plans for work at our county fair were discussed, and also for work along other lines, and we all felt that much good had been done. The suffrage question came in for its full share of attention and helpful hints given concerning our voting this fall. A goodly number of subscribers for our state paper was secured, and the matter of our duty in supporting this paper, Woman's Temperance Work, was kept before the women. The kindness and hospitality of the Gasport people was fully appreciated by all present, and before the convention adjourned an invitation was given for the next convention to meet with the Lockport union in February.

LATER NOTES.

Byron local union reports a fine parlor meeting held at the home of Mrs. Rowley, and the success of this meeting creates a desire for "more." Mrs. Hawthorne, of Alden, gave an interesting address on personal responsibility. Supper was served on the lawn, about ninety partaking of it. A fee of ten cents was charged and nearly fifteen dollars added to the treasury besides several new members being gained.

Lockport City union has held two parlor meetings with like results, at the home of the president, Mrs. E. G. Dietrick. The first was held in the evening, and our state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, was with us, which was indeed a treat. Mrs. Burt is in the forefront of the battle all the time and her words to us on this occasion were both cheering and helpful. The outlook is encouraging and with faith in God we can do all things. I wish Mrs. Burt might visit every union in the state.

Our second parlor meeting was the annual, when reports were read and officers elected. Many new members are gained by parlor meetings, and we cannot have them too often.

As the time approaches for our state convention we look about us to see what has been accomplished—to take account of stock as it were. The convention will be held in Syracuse, October 3, 4, 5, and a full report of it will be sent promptly.

Onondaga County will have its hands full this fall, as the entertainment of our state convention with nearly 500 delegates is no small undertaking, but in addition to this they do valiant work for the W. C. T. U. at the state fair in Syracuse every year.

Our state W. C. T. U. has had headquarters on the fair grounds for some years past, and amid many trying circumstances and discouragements our state president has been on the ground from the opening to the close of the fair each year. The banner of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been upheld, and our cause kept before the people. A fund for the establishment of a permanent building on the grounds is growing and we trust that this year will see blessed results from this work, which is a labor of love entirely with our president. I shall tell more of this work later on.

Many of our cities, towns and villages are interested in "school meetings" these days, and we find the women to be a potent factor in all such gatherings. In my own city, only a few days since, we had a lively time over the election of a school trustee, and nearly every woman in the district who was eligible voted. As I stood on the steps of the school-house and handed out ballots, I smiled to myself and said, "Who says the women will not vote when the opportunity is given them? Here are some of the very best women in the city, and they rather enjoy it, too."

Fairport, in Monroe county, reports a most successful school meeting, and the election of a woman trustee, Mrs. Mary Higbie, making two women on the school board. Mrs. Johnson, of the Fairport W. C. T. U., is now filling that position for the third year.

At the November election the women of our state can go to the polls and vote for school commissioner. Every woman must register in person on October 21 or 28, and we trust the women will look upon this as a Christian duty, and perform it, and then cast their ballots on election day, first asking God's blessing upon the action and the result.

MISSOURI.

HOW THE WORK GOES ON.

Notwithstanding the fact that there has been a suspension in business of almost every character, the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union goes steadily marching on. Well may it march on, for the demon of darkness is on the alert for disheartened victims.

One of the most encouraging things in the work this year is that the young are stirring themselves in behalf of the white ribbon army, which must soon march on to victory. The popularity of any organization must depend largely upon the social and literary features introduced. At Dexter, an entertainment, "The Queen of Fame," was given with great success. Frances Willard was crowned "The Queen of Fame." A social was given to the participants in the entertainment and refreshments were served. Miss Carrie Lee Carter addressed the girls, and a Y of nine members was organized.

At Bloomfield the union is at work. An ice cream festival and a lawn party have been recently given.

The Stoddard county convention was held here August 22.

At Bernice a new union has been organized with thirteen members and eleven honoraries. A few gentlemen enlisted in the cause add much to the dignity of a union.

The convention for the second district was held at Kirksville, or "Bone-ville" as it is sometimes called by the inhabitants.

Miss Carter has visited towns in this vicinity with great success. She spoke at Edina, Labelle, Newark, Know City and Canton.

At Edina, five new members were gained. There was a fair audience and a good collection was taken.

Four new members were gained at Know City and four at Newark.

At Labelle eight yearly subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL were taken by the ministers. Labelle has had a lawn party—about three hundred present and she and Edina have had the Whitneys for a week.

Newark has had a good Demorest contest in which a large audience was well pleased.

"They do say" that the Y's of Springfield are doing excellent work and we believe it is true from the symptoms discerned by us when we were there. At the convention recently held there they acquitted themselves with honor.

The evening session set apart for them was presided over by Miss Diltzer. After devotions a Y quartette broke the stillness by rendering some music. An address by Miss Carrie Lee Carter followed and much enthusiasm was awakened. She told the young ladies that while beauty and grace were a charm, they should learn that there were times when they should frown, and that to smile and look sweet was not all they had to do. The girls did themselves credit on other occasions throughout the convention. The church was beautifully decorated and they were largely instrumental in the work.

Miss Carter gives good report of work done by the Y's at South Side St. Louis, Trenton and Memphis.

A silver medal contest and a social have been given by the Brocks Prairie union. The silver medal was awarded to Miss Sarah Pflug. This is a new union and Mrs. Hall's lecture was an encouragement to them to go on with the work. This union wishes to thank those who have sent literature and especially the Neosho union.

Ridgeway has had a good time at a picnic. Interesting papers were read and several speakers filled out the program.

Flower mission work at Hannibal is carried on under the supervision of one who is blind. She is very earnest and her work seems so remarkable when we consider the darkness in which she lives. Meetings are held every Sabbath in the prisons, and says the Reporter: The superintendent of this work deserves a word of praise. The union has thirty-five members and a weekly attendance of about twelve, although they are small they push ahead. They have contributed to the National Temperance Hospital and expect to have their names inscribed on a tablet in Memorial Hall in the Temple.

Mrs. Golladay, president of the thirteenth district, has visited all of the unions in the district except two. She spoke at Freeman, Garden City and Austin, in Cass county. The meetings were enthusiastic and new members were added to each union.

Johnson county convention was held at Kingsville, and all of the unions gave reports of good work done. Discussions awakened by papers added interest to the work. A fine address given by Mrs. Hoffman was the climax of a successful convention. In this district mothers' meetings have resulted in a wonderful power for good.

The Cass county convention met at Pleasant Hill. This convention boasts of an exceptionally fine program and a large attendance. Mrs. Givan conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. Hoffman again gave an address and extensive plans for future work were laid.

Green Ridge union of Pettis county is prospering and keeps up interesting temperance prayer-meetings.

Sedalia is making extensive preparations for the state convention. They have had several successful teas and are preparing for more. They have engaged largely in rescue work and jail and prison work. Religious services are held every Sunday in the jail during the summer under the leadership of an honorary member. Seven of the prisoners now hold a prayer service every night.

East Sedalia has inaugurated flower mission work at the hospitals and railroad work. At a railroad meeting a brakeman spoke very interestingly.

"Neglect not the gift that is in thee," was the motto adopted by the convention at Clinton. With Mr. and Mrs Wisker, of Sedalia, Mrs. Warden, of Osceola, Mrs. Alice Williams, of Appleton, Mrs. Lord, of Sedalia, and Mrs. Hoffman, state president, added to the force at Clinton, the convention must have been exceedingly interesting. Professor Hall, a musician of high standing in his profession, conducted the music at each evening session and each evening entertainment was excellent. After such a convention in the Artesian City, the people will surely drink artesian water.

The convention at Springfield following close upon the one held at Clinton was interesting and was well attended. Springfield has a rescue home, and Wednesday at 4 p. m. the convention adjourned to the home. The home was adopted by the convention and every social purity superintendent made a member of its executive committee. During the convention a telegram of sympathy was sent to their sick president.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman was present, and many schemes for work were considered. In the course of her remarks, Mrs. Hoffman said: "So long as Christian men pray like saints on Monday and vote like devils on Tuesday, the saloon interests of the country will remain securely entrenched behind law." After her telling speech had been concluded the meeting was given an enthusiastic address by the president pro tem and the meeting adjourned.

A conference of the W. C. T. U. of Lawrence county was held at Aurora. The district president and various representatives from the unions throughout the district were present. One of the original Ohio Crusaders added much to the interest of the meeting by her "Reminiscences of the Crusade." This county gathering concluded it was so profitable and pleasant to meet together that they would hold their meetings semi-annually.

"See what the Y's and good have done." Six of the young men, honorary members of the Y, have had a contest at Pierce City, and Mr. Otis Maxey was awarded the medal. The music was furnished by the Y's and both recitations and music elicited much praise. We must enlist the young men if we would succeed.

The state convention will meet at Sedalia, October 4, 5, 6.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

MUSKOGEE NEWS.

Our school opened the 4th very encouragingly. The first week sixty were enrolled, and others are expected. This is, to us, very hopeful, as a sectarian school which has been opened this fall charges less tuition, which made us a little anxious for our school, and we are glad that so many more than ever before have been in attendance the first week of the term. Professor Crane has for his assistant Miss Alyne Goolsby, of Mississippi, who came well recommended as a teacher of elocution and music, as well as the branches usually taught in schools of this grade. She is a winsome lady, and is proving herself a successful disciplinarian.

During the summer our president, Mrs. Harsha, has had sociables every Friday night, at which ice cream and cake were served, and she tells me that these, together with some other ways, have enabled our treasurer to reduce the debt on our building to five hundred and fifty dollars. We call this doing well, and we expect to some day be out of debt. We could be this year, if all who claim to love the cause were as helpful as the few on whose shoulders the burden rests. Our fair is coming, and with it the temptations peculiar to our territory. We need the prayers of the faithful and the help of all in the battle against King Alcohol.

S. F. CROSBY,
Territorial Reporter, Muskogee.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Conditions of membership in the Hospital Association: Signing of the temperance pledge, payment of $5 membership fee and $1 annually thereafter.

Needs of the Hospital: Members in its Association; endowment of beds, contributions of money, blankets, towels, etc. (As quilts cannot be used to good advantage on hospital beds, it is better to sell them at home and to send the money thus received.) Acquaintance with its principles and purposes. Urgent invitation is extended to all interested, and especially to all physicians, to visit the institution and make full inquiries in regard to its workings.

DELIVERANCE OF WOMEN FROM SUFFERING.

Editors of The Union Signal:

In addition to the fact that we have proven beyond a doubt, in the successful treatment of all cases at the National Temperance Hospital in this city, that not only alcohol and alcoholic liquors or beverages of any kind, but opium and morphine are not only in any case unnecessary, but harmful, in the treatment of disease or in the case of the convalescent, we have recently proven, also beyond any doubt, that there is an absolutely safe and speedy deliverance for women who have heretofore been unable to find relief, except by submitting to a very dangerous and sanguinary operation. This is a great thing for us to say, truly, but we cannot claim too much or say too much for what has been done, is being done and will continue to be done for suffering women.

Heretofore the operations of hystorectomy and ovariotomy, performed by cutting through the abdominal walls and peritoneum have been submitted to by suffering women only as the last resort to save life. The contemplation of such a dangerous, bloody and painful operation, with only a bare chance of living through, and even then to be followed by months of suffering in order to recover from the wounds left, have filled every sufferer with horror and dread, and prevented every woman who needed it from submitting to it, only, as I said before, in case of dire and desperate necessity. But now, thank God, new discoveries have been made, new methods have been devised and new instruments manufactured, by which those dreaded and fearful operations have been divested of danger to life, loss of blood, shock to the nervous system, and all things to be feared. This new method was only discovered less than a year ago, but forty-one suffering women, who never could be well again, have submitted to the operation and are now well and happy. Not a single life lost; every case made a quick and satisfactory recovery. The last case was performed at our hospital on Monday the 11th of September, on a lady from Kansas City, Mo., who had been a great sufferer for many years and who had tried every means, even spending more than a thousand dollars to find relief, but found none. The organs were diseased and could not be restored to a healthy condition. Their presence was a constant drain on her system and a source of irritation and great and agonizing pain; indeed, she was "sick all over." The organs were removed without the loss of more than a half gill of blood, and without danger to her life. She suffered some, very little, after the operation, no morphine or alcohol was used; she commenced to improve on the third day; has been able to eat everything desired, and is now, ten days after the operation, able to sit up in bed, and in another week will be able to return to her home.

We have two other cases on hand for operation this and next week, and these ladies, knowing about the good and happy results in the former cases, are impatient to have the operation performed.

I think the importance of this matter warrants me, as a member of the medical staff of our Temperance Hospital, to make known the glad tidings to the women of the world that there is deliverance at last for suffering women in the manner indicated above, and to ask every member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to make known that our hospital is the place, above all places, for the care and treatment of diseased women.

Very respectfully,
WM. D. GENTRY, M. D.

HOTEL RATES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION.

It is impossible this World's Fair year to secure special concessions from hotels for the National Convention, but the following schedule is presented from those within two or three blocks or less of the Art Palace. These are for rooms only. All have restaurants connected with the house except the Grand Union; there are many others at reasonable prices at convenient distance, and there is an excellent one in the Art Palace itself.

PER DIEM.

Palmer House, Monroe street and Wabash avenue, two in a room, $1.50 each and upward,

Brunswick, Michigan avenue and Adams street, outside rooms, one in room, $1.50; outside rooms, two in a room, $2.50; outside rooms, three in a room, $3; court rooms, one in room, $1; court rooms, two in room, $1.50. These rates are to be divided by the number of persons in the room.

Windsor Hotel, Dearborn, between Monroe and Madison streets, two or more in a room, $1 each person.

Continental, corner Madison and Wabash avenue, two or more in room, 75 cts; and one dollar each, according to room.

Grand Union, Dearborn, between Madison and Monroe streets, $1 each person.

ESTHER PUGH.

RAILROAD RATES.

To White-Ribboners of the United States:

Your secretary of railroad rates for the approaching National Convention to be held in Chicago, October 18 to 21, has been investigating the matter of reduced rates for those who wish to attend that and the World's Convention.

The World's Fair excursion rates are the only rates, and the best, also, that can be obtained—are better than in previous years. These are:

On all western roads, one fare for the round trip, plus $2. This rate is good on all days and all trains and until November 15.

All eastern roads give a one fare rate, tickets good for ten days. This fare is only given on certain days. The dates are different on different roads, and must be ascertained from your local agents, as it is impossible to announce them all through THE UNION SIGNAL.

As it is desirable and more pleasant for delegates from the same state to come over the same road, you are requested to write the presidents of your respective states for information concerning the route selected for your state delegation.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

Patrons and lecturers are invited to visit the headquarters of the Woman's Lecture Bureau in the organization room of the Woman's Building at Jackson Park. We will be pleased to see you and talk over the work for the winter for which we are now arranging. It is necessary to urge upon all the necessity of coöperation in this line of the work and we trust that each union will do all that is possible to place the lecture work upon the footing it deserves.

Owing to the difficulty of unions in assuming the responsibility of raising money to compensate speakers for their lectures, Mrs. Marion B. Baxter has decided to devote a portion of her time each year to a special plan of work, particulars of which may be obtained by applying to the Bureau.

We wish to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available for woman's clubs in the East until February, and in the West for the remainder of the winter.

The following lecturers are under the management of the Bureau and will be available during the fall and winter.

Frances E. Willard.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw,* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall, and New Jersey in November.

Mary T. Lathrap, Illinois and Missouri after the 25th of September.

Helen M. Gougar,* Pennsylvania and Western New York after the 22d of September.

Miss Anna Gordon, the World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of juvenile work.

Carrie Lane Chapman, Ohio in November.

Clara C. Hoffman, Wisconsin in September and November.

Lillie Devereux Blake, calls in the vicinity of New York City.

Elizabeth U. Yates, Maryland first of October and Michigan the second week of October.

Mary Sparkes Wheeler, calls in Pennsylvania.

Rev. Eugenia St. John.

Rev. C. H. St. John.

BUREAU NOTES.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau wishes to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available in this country during the fall and winter. She will lecture on the arts, habits and literature of her own country.

We wish to call attention to the talent displayed by Frank Dwight Denny in his recitals and lectures. Unions desiring to make arrangements for this class of entertainment in lecture courses for the winter will secure all information by addressing

LUCY E. ANTHONY, Manager.

WOMEN OF CLEVELAND AND THEIR WORK, "philanthropic, educational, literary, medical and artistic; a history in which more than one thousand people of Cleveland's past and present are mentioned as participants." Such is the story told by the title page of the aforesaid book. Its author is Mrs. W. A. Ingham, a prominent leader in W. C. T. U. ranks who speaks with knowledge.

Address W. A. Ingham, 138 Superior St., Cleveland, O.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' YEAR BOOK is a gift volume filled with the choicest selections from the writings of the Rt. Rev. Phillips Brooks, D. D. These are selected and compiled by "H. L. S. and L. H. S.,"—a page devoted to each day in the year, with Scripture texts and appropriate selections of poetry making a very choice collection for daily readings. Beautifully bound in blue and white and gold, with a vignette of Dr. Brooks set in the cover, altogether a unique and attractive design.

E. P. Dutton & Company, 31 West Twenty-third St., New York City.

WHAT SUGGESTIONS CAN BE OFFERED FOR MAKING SECRET PRAYER A GREAT REALITY. By the Rev. Henry Wright, M. A., late Honorable Secretary Church Missionary Society, London. New York: Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union.

This very practical pamphlet is the first of a series entitled "The Helpful Hour Series," each one designed to be of aid to Christians in their daily life and work. It may be said of this booklet that it is just what it sets out to be—very clear and helpful.

SUNDAY READING FOR THE YOUNG, 1894, is an illustrated book of over four hundred pages of profitable and entertaining reading for children from the age of seven upward, including perhaps a few in their "teens." Besides stories and poetry it contains the recital of Bible scenes, illustrated texts to be colored, texts with missing words to be supplied, and other devices for the employment of busy brains and restless fingers.

Published by E. & J. B. Young & Co., Cooper Union, Fourth Avenue, New York City.

A NATURAL METHOD OF PHYSICAL TRAINING, by Edwin Checkley, contains in a nutshell very practical hints for the home training of the human frame. Modern civilization has swung clear away from the habits of the Greeks in their exaggerated attention to the body, to such an extent that it is a wonder this fearfully and wonderfully built temple does not more frequently break down under the unreasonable burdens it is made to bear, and the neglect, if not positive abuse, to which it is subjected. May every book like the above fulfill its good mission to "this mortal coil."

Wm. C. Bryant & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

MUSCULAR EXERCISES FOR HEALTH AND GRACE, as taught by Lydia J. Newcomb, lecturer in the department of physical culture in the National W. C. T. U. This volume, like the above, is practical and full of sense. Its illustrations, by Ella Perkins, will be of aid to the student in following directions. But any and all of these books will fail unless their precepts are followed persistently. Intermittent attention to any pursuit never yet was crowned with success.

Edgar A. Werner, publisher, New York City.

THE NEW HYGIENE. A drugless remedy for the treatment of all diseases, the promotion of health and longevity as practiced by Dr. Priessnitz, of Germany, and other eminent physicians. By James W. Wilson. Published by the Howard & Wilson Publishing Company, Chicago.

The country may be said to be flooded with books on how to get health and consequent happiness and he only is wise who, in reading, can separate the chaff from the grain. The book in question makes cleanliness the point on which all its recommendations turn—cleanliness without and within, the washing of the skin "with pure water," the washing of the alimentary canal with the same beneficent healer, thus keeping the wheels of our wonderful machinery free from clog, the constant attendance of Dr. Fresh Air, and the employment of sufficient exercise to develop the organs symmetrically and fully. There is a sweet reasonableness about the NEW HYGIENE that appeals to one more than the dreaded "prescriptions and doses at the hands of grave doctors." It may call down on its head abundance of criticism but one thing is sure—the human race can stand the application of a great deal more water than many use at present, and any line of reasoning that may induce people to use more lavishly God's universal purifier is one to be heartily welcomed and commended.

OSCAR PETERSON, RANCHMAN AND RANGER, by Henry Willard French, author of the "Lance of Kanana." Every boy who has enjoyed the "Lance of Kanana" can in a measure anticipate the good things laid up for him between the covers of OSCAR PETERSON. The story has the often used characters of Indians and cow-boys, but they never lose their charm for the young readers, and Oscar is a sturdy, brave, honest lad who can do none of his admirers any harm. It is just the book for the coming fall evenings when apples and popcorn and chestnuts, with a warm fire and a good story, make boy-life a thing to be envied.

D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

GLIMPSES THROUGH LIFE'S WINDOWS, by the Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D., selections from his writings. Arranged by Evalena I. Fryer. The compiler of this charming little volume has been very successful in her search through Dr. Miller's writings for nuggets of wisdom. Nearly two hundred selections, full of genuine piety and practical Christianity, illustrated by witty and apt ancedotes, fill this dainty book. There is not a page which does not suggest a thought and give an impulse "to a truer, better, richer, holier life." As the compiler says: "Many of the paragraphs here gathered contain incidents or illustrations through and by which the truth is presented. Every one knows the value of good illustrations; they help to make the teaching clear and they help to fix the lesson in the memory." She rightly believes that this collection of short paragraphs will prove of value. The volume is tastefully printed and bound, and has a fine portrait of Dr. Miller, which will undoubtedly prove acceptable to the large and ever-increasing circle of readers whom he has delighted and instructed by his "Silent Times," "Making the Most of Life," and other works.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

THE NEW REDEMPTION. A Call to the Church to Reconstruct Society According to the Gospel of Christ. By Rev. George D. Herron, D. D.

This series of six discourses will be eagerly read in these times of social perplexities. Professor Herron takes high ground, squaring the life of the world in its great problems touching capital and labor by the divine simplicity of the Sermon on the Mount, and making the Cross of Christ the pivot on which all human relations should turn and the center toward which all life should point. The author sees everywhere the signs of universal change. "We are," he says, "in the beginning of a revolution that will strain all existing religious and political institutions and test the wisdom and heroism of the earth's purest and wisest souls, a revolution that will regenerate society with the judgment of infinite love."

He portrays with impassioned and yet temperate eloquence the duties of the church in these new and trying times. It is a powerful arraignment, a trumpet call, a stirring argument, and ought to appeal to every one who has in view the good of his fellowmen. Professor Herron has already won a wide reputation as a forcible and brilliant writer. The present volume will add greatly to his reputation and influence.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

FOUR WONDERFUL YEARS. A sketch of the origin, growth and working plans of the Epworth League, by Joseph F. Berry, D. D., editor of The Epworth Herald.

Indeed, they have been four wonderful years, these initial years of the plucky young organization, whose simple motto, "Look up—Lift up," is being so beautifully worked out by its loyal members. Dr. Berry, who stands with sensitive finger upon the pulse of this child of Methodism, has told the story well in the above-named book. Every Epworth Leaguer, every friend and relation of an Epworth Leaguer and every one else, should know the history of the young people's society, and Dr. Berry has told it well. The latter part of the book explains the detail of work, and sums up some of the happy results therefrom.

Closely allied with this book is one entitled WORK AND WORKERS, which contains practical suggestions for the Junior Epworth League. It is written by Frederick S. Parkhurst, B. D. Work with the children needs the most careful and prayerful handling, since the bending of the twigs determines so surely the comeliness or crookedness of the mature tree. This little volume may well be called "meaty"—in fact, it is the very extract of thought-food, and can be strongly recommended to those who want to make their Junior Leagues a success. The work of each department is treated of, practical helps and hints in general are given, and a few charming outlines of talks to Juniors, together with a list of prayer-meeting topics.

Both books are published by Messrs. Hunt & Eaton, New York City.

ST. LOUIS MAGAZINE
TO YOUR ADDRESS
Two Years for $1.
The regular price of the St. Louis Magazine is $1.50 a year, but in offering it to you at $1 for two years (which is less than cost) we hope to in that time get you so interested in our Monthly that you will continue taking the Magazine always. The loss to us in sending it to you two years for $1 we consider as so much money spent in advertising our Magazine and creating a permanent and enormously increased circulation. Hence if the monthly visits of the St. Louis Magazine to your family for two years are made, we flatter ourselves you will become a permanent subscriber. A DAUGHTER OF THE FARM.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—One June day nearly fifty years ago—when your grandfathers and grandmothers, many of them, were children—three white-covered wagons might have been seen trailing across a Wisconsin prairie. The wagons were filled with household furniture and other family belongings. In the first wagon sat the father; a fair-haired boy of twelve was in another and the third team was driven by the mother. In front of her, perched upon the top of the father's writing-desk, were two bright-faced little girls about seven and four. A big Newfoundland dog trotted steadily behind.

This family of five had been traveling in this way for three weeks from their old home in New York state.

The long distance-had been accomplished without an accident except when the horse the mother drove went down in the quicksand and had to be "pried out" with rails. That happened near Chicago where there were so many signs marked "No bottom here" that the father said he "wouldn't be hired to live in such a place"! Quite a contrast, that, to the solidly built city of to-day; the great metropolis where one of the little girls afterwards—but I am getting ahead of my story.

The journey safely over, in a few weeks the Happy Family found themselves comfortably settled in a pleasant house near Janesville, at the edge of the leafy woods, with a wide view of the sunrise over the broad prairie. There were no neighbors within a mile, but the wise father and mother did not mind that; they had come to gain health and strength for their children and themselves. And the little ones, as the years went by, learned to love their "Forest Home" more and more dearly and never thought of being lonesome.

But who were this family? you begin to ask. Do we know them? Are they living now? No, they are not living now, for all have passed away to the heavenly home, save one. She is well known to you and all the world, as she has grown up to be a great reformer. You are familiar with her face, for it hangs in every temperance home. Would you not like to know how she looked and what she did and thought when as a happy child she played on this beautiful Wisconsin farm?

Imagine a bright, energetic, lively girl, brimful of fun, small and thin—that is our little friend. Her skin is fair, her eyes are blue and her hair so bright a brown that it shines red in the sunlight,—a color we consider very beautiful now, but which in those days earned for her the name of "red-head" from thoughtless boys and girls, causing great grief to the sensitive child. I wonder if any of our UNION SIGNAL boys and girls are ever tempted to call names in this way? I am sure they never would if they realized the crushing grief it causes a shrinking, modest boy or girl.

If our heroine had not been such a diligent little writer, I would not be able now to tell you so much about her happy childhood upon the old farm. But following her own instinct and her mother's desires, she commenced early to keep a journal of each day's doings. This in after life has been refreshing to her memory and has brought back many early thoughts and incidents for us to enjoy.

There must have been lively times at dear old Forest Home in the days when the young voices rang out over the pastures and through the woods. Fond as the three children were of study and books, they loved most of all the outdoor life with its many charms and its freedom. Oliver, the good-natured, willing, elder brother had no objection to his sisters joining in his sports, and the three were such boon companions that I cannot mention one without the others. And so it happened that at the age when you children nowadays are working your way through the public school, our little friend was playing boys' games upon the farm, making carts, sleds, cross-guns and whip handles with her brother and sister, walking behind the plow and learning wise lessons from nature's book. How she loved it! She has lived so much in God's blessed sunshine that it has become a part of her nature, reflecting through all these years of care and labor.

On the long Sabbath walks to church, and at the quiet talks around the evening lamp, the father opened to his children the secrets of nature, teaching them the habits of birds and insects, the names of trees and wild flowers.

Sunday afternoons the mother walked with her little ones through the orchard; there she talked to them of God's goodness, of tenderness toward every living thing, of the shapes in the clouds and of the great Heart of all. What better teachers could they have had?

I suppose that family life on a farm forty-five years ago was very different from what it is now, yet very much like. The family arose at daybreak in spring, and in winter long before that time. Each had his task to do, and the days were well filled. There was plenty of help, so that the children had opportunity for study and play, but could work if they had a mind. The long winter evenings were spent in study, in teaching the hired help or in singing for the father, who greatly enjoyed hearing his children's voices in song. They went coasting in the short winter days, took care of their numerous pets (turkeys, chickens, peafowls, rabbits, goats, calves, colts and dogs), and played their favorite game of "Fort City."

What's that you ask? Let me explain. Frances was constantly making up new games. One of the few young visitors at Forest Home was their pastor's daughter, from the nearest town, who remarked one day that she should think they "would get lonesome away down there in the woods." This was too much for Frances, who proposed to show that they had all the requisites for a city by starting "a town" at once. The idea was hailed with delight, and as a result the pretty farm was planned out as a city, which, as the young reformer declared, "should have no saloons, no billiard halls," and, of course, would not need a jail! The road in front of the house was named Broadway, because that was "the most famous street in America," and a sign was set up, bearing that name. The lane which ran past the barn, cowyard and granary was called "Market St." The barn was the "Warehouse," the cowyard became the "City Market," the well, "City Fountain," the hen-house, "Family Supply Store," the corn-crib, "City Elevator," and the pig-pen "City Stockyards." They had a "Board of Trade," with round bits of bright tin for silver money, yellow leather gold pieces and cloth-backed paper bank notes.

The "Laws of the City" were very complete, and written by Frances with as much care as in later years she has given to the constitutions of great organizations. The "hotel" was a little shanty playhouse, and this game of "Fort City" was the source of much skill and never-failing interest.

They had no toys, of course, excepting those which they made themselves. When Frances and her sister joined the boys in mock Indian fights and hunting expeditions, they wore big paper hats shaped like cornucopias, trimmed with peacock feathers and painted by Mary. They had belts of bright red flannel in which were stuck wooden swords, bunches of arrows, etc.

I would like to tell you more about Frances' childish frolics; of how she saddled and rode the cow when her father, fearing she would be hurt, forbade her to ride the horses: of her seat in the top of the great black oak, marked, "EAGLE'S NEST, BEWARE!" where she climbed and wrote verses and the accounts of the day's events; of the "Artist club" and the "Rustic Club" with their two members each, herself and sister Mary; all these and more you will find in "Glimpses of Fifty Years" which you will want to get and read.

Fourteen years old and never in school! You know very few boys and girls who have not been at that age. But now a school-house was to be built near the Forest Home and all was excitement there. True, the girls had had a sweet and well educated young lady tutor for two years, but that they considered only "play school." The real professor and real school room were a rare and novel delight to study-loving Frances who had already begun to "dream her dreams" of great things to be done. This is what she tells us she said "inside of herself" when the spectacled Yale professor, in his long blue coat and brass buttons, stood and rang the scholars into school that first morning: "At last we are going to school all by ourselves, Mary and I, and are going to 'have advantages' like other folks, just as mother said we should! Oh, goody, goody, goody!"

Such had been the "advantages" of the home school, however, that our two pupils learned in one year what it took the others seven years to learn. The home school wasn't so bad, after all!

Her sixteenth birthday marks what she calls the "date of my martyrdom." It was all because the time had come for doing up her hair woman fashion and wearing long dresses! This is how she describes the loss of her freedom. "My back hair is twisted up like a corkscrew; I carry eighteen hairpins, my head aches miserably; my feet are entangled in the skirt of my hateful new gown. I can never jump over a fence again so long as I live!"

Not long before this, our young thinker was standing with her sister at the window; they were watching Oliver, who was now twenty-one and a college student, drive off with his father and the other men, dressed in his Sunday clothes, to vote for the first time. Frances "felt a lump in her throat and things got blurred." Turning to her sister she said: "Wouldn't you like to vote as well as Oliver? Don't you and I love the country just as well as he, and doesn't the country need our ballots?" To which sweet Mary answered, "'Course we do and 'course we ought—but don't you go ahead and say so, for then we would be called strong-minded."

And now I must leave her, for soon she left the old farm home. You know the rest, or will know when you read how she has studied and taught; how she traveled abroad; how she enlisted in the great temperance army and became the beloved leader of the temperance women in our country; how she has entered politics and been abused by the enemy for it, and how she has forwarded the woman's temperance work in all the world. Her great work is not finished yet and we pray God to spare her many years. As she looks back upon the busy days and years of her life at this Harvest Home celebration of her fifty-fifth birthday, September 28, we know that none hold more pleasant and happy remembrances for her than those spent at Forest Home of which she said on leaving:

"Bright as the brightest sunshine,
The light of memory streams
Round the old-fashioned homestead,
Where I dreamed my dream of dreams."

LOVELY CHRISTMAS CARD

Designed by Lady Henry Somerset.

For Christmas, Lady Henry Somerset has drawn a lovely card, which has been engraved in colors at Nuremberg, by Nister & Co., the most celebrated art publishers in the world. It represents a mother and child of whom it might be said, "In the whole city full, home they had none," and bears the name, "A Nineteenth Century Nativity." It has a quotation from James Russell Lowell, and bears Lady Henry's autograph. The price, post free, is 25 cents, and it is a large-sized card.

Orders can be sent from now on, and specimens will be on view at the World's and National Conventions.

Happiness at a cost of One Cent a Day.

Books are the greatest sources of happiness within universal reach. The AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY now makes the world's best literature all accessible to any one, in city or country, at a rate of cost of one cent a day for a dollar book; vast numbers of books cost only one-half to one-fourth of that price; all best cloth-bound large type editions, no paper covers or small type.

Loaned Any Book you want to read, loaned to you, anywhere in the United States, for long or short time, as you desire. You can order through your county Postmaster, Newsdealer, Bookseller, neighborhood Book Club, or direct from us. You can call for any book you want.

Sold Books Sold at the lowest prices ever known. Any book supplied. A catalogue of 160 pages of choice books sent on receipt of a 2-cent stamp. A book worth reading is worth owning, if you can afford it, but many cannot afford it; and it is worth something to be able to read a book enough to see if it is worth owning, before you buy it.

Ben Hur for only 8 cents. "The Prince of India," for only 14 cents, (a $2.50 book), "David Balfour," 8 cents, "Lorna Doone," 3 cents; all of Scott's, Eliot's, Dickens's, Thackeray's and other standard authors, each 3 cents, if you can read them in seven days; these are examples; all excellent editions, no paper covered trash in small type. All the new books, a special feature.

Little Women for 8 cts., "Tom Brown at Rugby," 3 cents, "Little Lord Fontleroy," 11 cents, are other examples. It is positively cruelty to children not to give them the benefit of these and other measureless sources of happiness and good, when they can be had at such trifling cost.

In fact books cost nothing, if they increase the income of the reader more than their cost. There is not a person alive, who labors with hand or brain, who earns even $2.00 a week, who will not, by the stimulus of good books be helped more than one cent a day in his earning power. Think of that, and test it, parents, employers and workers. It is your own fault if you don't get the best books, instead of trash.

Magazines, all of them, for one cent to three cents a day, or half that after the first month, or a quarter of it after two months. It is worth more than that just to look at the pictures. Think of it, all of them, for less than the cost of one heretofore: Harper, Scribner, Century, St. Nicholas, Forum, North American, Godey, and the rest, and all the books you can read, besides, cost a patron of the AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY less than the subscription price of one magazine.

Hungry Readers and students generally need no longer go without books, all of them they want, and the best books, since now the best cost less than half what trash has cost heretofore.

Clergymen with small incomes, "starving" heretofore for want of access to the world's current literature, now have it all open to them—and not for personal use only, but as a power for good; organize Reading Clubs among your people and guide them in their selections—infinite power here.

Teachers may also receive and confer inestimable pleasure and benefit upon themselves and pupils, by the means now offered. Increase your earning power by reading the best books.

Send 2 cents for 160-page Catalogue and full particulars. Please mention this paper when you write or call.

Signal Notes.

PROFESSOR ELY estimates the unemployed in the United States as numbering two million.

FIFTEEN pence represents the daily wages of two hundred and fifty thousand women in London.

FINLAND has fifty thousand women who are total abstainers, in a population of two millions of persons.

COUNTING all the Protestant missions in India, there is one missionary to every five hundred thousand persons.

COFFEE palaces are a feature of Melbourne, Victoria, life, no less than ten million, five hundred thousand dollars being invested in them.

DR. NANSEN, the arctic explorer, has not taken any spirits with him on his new expedition. Tobacco is allowed, but it can never be smoked below decks.

GENERAL BOOTH says the qualities of generalship are latent and only awaiting development in one out of thirty-five men, and in one out of thirty women.

SIXTEEN of the Samoan group of islands have been evangelized entirely by native missionaries. The drink traffic is as usual the greatest hindrance to their work.

THE Queen Regent of Holland was the patron and official president of the recent International Temperance Congress at The Hague. She, however, delegated her duties to a man.

SINCE the Protestant missionaries first gained a foothold in Uganda, it is said there have been no less than two hundred martyrs among the converts, a record that can hardly be equaled in any other single field.

THE salaries of college presidents in the United States range from $10,000 to $620 a year, and of professors from $5,500 to $400. In contrast with the wages paid many "boss mechanics," this amount seems ludicrously small.

ONE thousand five hundred and thirty-nine liquor shops are owned by one hundred and seventy-two members of the House of Lords, England, consequently the temperance question awakens no enthusiasm there.

A KAFFIR maiden when visiting England was asked what she most wanted for her own country. She replied, "Let us be treated at home as here, not as cattle but as human. Let us have schools where we can be taught useful arts. Let us have free education and take away the drink."

IT seems a strange thing, but it is said that France leads the world in the thoroughness with which she teaches morality in the public school. By a law of 1882, moral instruction became obligatory in the primary schools, and the results, as given in the recent report of the commissioner of education, is encouraging, showing an improvement in the morality of the masters.

A DESCRIPTION of Norway prisons gives one the impression that they more nearly resemble the ideal prison than those of other countries. Norway, formerly one of the most drunken countries, is becoming quite a temperate nation. The number of prisoners outside of convicts is comparatively small. The prisons at Christiania, Bergen and Troudhjein are models of cleanliness and the governors seem to be humane, Christian men who care for the souls as well as the bodies of their charges. Flowers, books and pictures can be found in many of the cells.

AMONG other industrial experiments Australia has just started another to be known as the Australian Coöperative settlement Association. It is on the communistic basis; both sexes are to be placed on an absolute equality and children are to be supported by the community although under the care of the parents. Individual freedom in religion, speech and other matter will be inviolable. Paraguay has been selected as the home for the enterprise, four hundred and fifty thousand acres of land having been secured. It is stated that the enterprise seems to be started for the purpose of getting better conditions of life for working men and women, not simply to try some theory.

AT the edge of the village a neat cottage stood,
The home of the widow La Rue;
It was small, but so clean it fair shone in the sun,
From parlor to kitchen, straight through.

And the widow herself was as bright, and as sweet
As an April washed flower might be;
Rosy cheeks, sparkling eyes, as she took from the line
Snowy garments, a picture was she.

It befell that the deacon, a widower sad,
Passed by, and his lone, loving heart,
At the sight of that picture was pierced through and through
By that roguish sprite, Cupid's sharp dart.

Now his home and his children are cleanly and neat
Beyond the lone man's wildest hope;
And the widow with smiles lays the cause of her bliss,
To the use of the pure Ivory Soap.

October 16, 17—WORLD'S W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.
October 18–21—NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL W. T. P. A. MEETING.

Notice is hereby given that in accordance with By-Law I, Sec. 1, of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the annual meeting of the stockholders will be held at Willard Hall, the Temple, Chicago, at 10 a. m., Wednesday, October 18. At this meeting the Board of Directors (eleven in number) for the coming year, will be elected and other necessary business will be transacted.

MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Sec. W. T. P. A.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The bi-metallic convention opened in St. Louis, Tuesday.

W. C. T. U. conventions are being held in eleven states this week.

France's treaty of peace was accepted by Siam and signed at Bangkok, October 3.

The Woman's Congress of Christian Missions convened at Memorial Art Palace, October 2 to 4.

The elections repeal bill has been the subject of bitter and personal discussion in the United States Senate.

Gladstone's visit to Edinburgh, last week, was a well-merited ovation and his speech was loudly applauded.

After a number of decisive battles, the rebellion in the Argentine Republic has finally been suppressed by the government.

Heavy damage, the extent of which is not known, has been done in Rio de Janerio by the bombardment of the rebel fleet last week.

Fire on a St. Lawrence steamer descending the rapids, September 28, caused a panic among the two hundred and fifty passengers who were all finally saved.

At the Supreme Council of the Minnesota Knights of Pythias in St. Paul, Sept. 28, liquor dealers were excluded from admission to the order by a vote of thirty-one to ten.

The Sunday Rest Congress convened from September 28 to 30, in Chicago, calling forth many well-known Sabbath advocates. A mass-meeting was held last Sabbath afternoon.

The House Committee on military affairs has instituted a much needed inquiry in regard to the part taken by United States troops in the recent settlement of the Cherokee strip.

Citizens of the new Oklahoma Territory met in convention, Sept. 30, at Purcell, to urge its admission to the Union, the necessary population and wealth having been already acquired.

An anarchist conspiracy which meant the destruction of the Austrian public buildings at Vienna, has fortunately been intercepted by the public. Later developments show a plot of international importance.

AN important announcement to National superintendents will be found on page 13.

AT the repeated request of "our women," THE UNION SIGNAL begins in this issue a series of articles on Dress. Mrs. Helen Gilbert Ecob, author of the "Well Dressed Woman," has kindly furnished them. Nobody who met Mrs. Ecob at the Woman's Congress was unaware of the beautiful reform costumes in which she every day appeared; she will therefore be regarded as "qualified" to speak on this delicate question from personal experience. May the light grow till utility, beauty and safety in woman's dress are the high-tide marks of our civilizing processes.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET sails from Liverpool, October 7, to preside over the World's convention, October 16, 17. Every white-ribboner will extend a doubly warm welcome to Lady Henry, when it is known that she leaves her engagements in England at a great sacrifice to the work there and that she comes gladly to us to help as she may in the first absence of Miss Willard from the National Convention.

WILLARD Hall has seen more than its average audiences during the past week, and a growing spirit of earnestness is manifest. Saturday noon was observed as an hour of special prayer for the temperance movement and those actively engaged therein. On Sunday afternoon the hall was filled by those who gathered in response to a call for prayer issued by the World's and National W. C. T. U. Mrs. Carse presided, and the hour was one of encouragement and uplift.

ON Thursday, September 28, Mrs. Emma W. Kirkpatrick, of Monmouth, Ill., entered into rest. She has been held in strong and tender sympathies by the great white-ribbon constituency of Illinois through all these long years of sickness and suffering. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was among the charter members of the state organization, and, until prevented by failing health, she gave almost constant service to some form of the temperance work. She was for several years vice-president of the state and, later, state superintendent of railroad work. Every true temperance worker found warm welcome to the dear home over which Mrs. Kirkpatrick presided.

CHARGES of mismanagement of the funds entrusted to him for the work of the Rest Island Mission were made against our fellow-worker, John G. Woolley, by enemies of the cause, and sent broadcast over the country by means of associated press dispatches from Minneapolis, September 23. Knowing that credence might possibly be given this malicious and false attack, Mr. Woolley cancelled his engagements for a week, and repaired at once to Minneapolis, where a mass-meeting was called in Plymouth church last Sabbath afternoon, when a full and detailed statement of the Rest Island finances were made. Mr. Woolley's integrity, which none who knew him had questioned, was fully vindicated, and he returns to the work of the Illinois Christian Endeavor temperance campaign with renewed energy and consecration.

So poetic is the secretary's account of the birth of the Men's Christian Prohibition Union in New York City, September 20, that we give it in full, prefacing it only with our earnest congratulations and the names of three leading officers: President, Rev. Charles Roads, Philadelphia; secretary, Rev. D. P. Lindsley, New York City; treasurer, John Lloyd Thomas, New York City: "Twenty years ago the New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of Heaven, sent an angel band which left a tiny infant; and drawn in golden characters upon the sands of time, and in bright clusters in the starry heavens, emblematic of the eternities of God, we trace the mystic letters W. C. T. U. Again the heavens have opened and from the evening glory of the parting cloud a second shining band has come and left another tiny infant; and we trace upon the golden sands of time the mystic letters M. C. P. U. May they too be translated to the heavenly constellations, and there shine forth with ever-increasing radiancy. Adam was first formed, then Eve. In these societies the order has been reversed. The second Eve, free from the ignorance of her primal sister, was the first to appear; but God saw that it is not good for woman to be alone, and has given an helpmeet for her. May this prove to be a prophecy that the primal curse has been removed, and that woman who first tempted man to sin, now leads him in the regeneration, and will run a friendly race with him back to the New Jerusalem, the mother of us all."

WE have not been able until now to say whether our National president would be with us at the coming conventions. She has steadily clung to the hope that she could be here; but correspondence with Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, whose letters we give below, and the urgent pleading of those who have seen her daily during the past year will explain why she has at last and with great reluctance and heaviness of heart decided that her physician's advice must be heeded. Those who know the serious decision rendered in Miss Willard's case by one of London's leading physicians last May will rejoice to learn that Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, after a most careful examination a month later, gives assurance of Miss Willard's complete recovery and believes she has the best ten years of her life work before her. This opinion is conditioned, however, absolutely and only, on her following his prescription of one year's entire absence from public speaking and presiding over conventions. He does not prohibit her from dictating to a stenographer during part of the day, but emphatically advises against public work of any kind. The exact wording of his medical opinion, together with that of Dr. Holman who was called in consultation with Sir Benjamin, is as follows:

LONDON, June 29, 1893.

We hereby certify that we have this day, in consultation, seen Miss Willard, and have paid the most careful attention to her case. We consider that she is free of any actual organic disease, at this moment, and that she bids fair to make a complete recovery; but from excessive overwork she has brought her nervous powers to a condition of exhaustion that is critical and we are of opinion that she must have one entire year of absolute rest from all public labors.

(Signed) BENJAMIN W. RICHARDSON, M. D., F. R. S.
C. HOLMAN, M. D.

Dr. Hewitson, of Reigate, who has seen Miss Willard frequently during her stay at "the cottage" there, fully concurs in this opinion. Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset urged Sir Benjamin to permit Miss Willard to come over to the conventions October 16–21, but the appended replies to their united appeal tell their own story:

25 MANCHESTER SQUARE, LONDON, Aug. 19, 1893.

DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I regret much to say that I cannot change my decision in regard to your case. You must remain at rest. That is imperative on the grounds stated in the report which Dr. Holman and I have already given. No one is more attached to the cause of temperance than I am, and no one more thoroughly comprehends the importance of your labors, but the faithful physician must put life and health first, as I do, peremptorily, in regard to yourself. B. W. RICHARDSON.

DEAR LADY ISABEL:—I have studied the matter as you wish, from both sides (my patient's and the cause), and I have, in order to be quite faithful, no choice as to the reply. I would I could do differently but it is impossible.

B. W. RICHARDSON.

We can all easily believe that to really rest has been the hardest work Miss Willard ever tried to do, and to have the necessity laid upon her during this World's Fair year with its Columbian Congresses has been especially trying. But we must remember that since early last June she has been good enough to obey the doctor's orders; and this fact in connection with the prayers that hourly ascend on her behalf and the unremitting care she has received in that other "Rest Cottage" over the sea, leads us confidently to look for returning health and strength before many months have passed. The latest reports are encouraging and indicate that with no serious setback we may expect our editor-in-chief and National president to be with us again by next June fully restored in health. With riches of heart and mind impossible but for this prolonged season of rest and reflection, she will be equipped for finer leadership than she has ever given us in the past, although we had thought that matchless.

MY WHITE ROOM.

BY MABEL DELLE SMITH.

I awaken, 'tis at midnight,
And the moon is shining bright
In my dainty, little chamber,
With its hangings all in white.

'Tis so white, so pure, so perfect,
In the silvery moonshine,
That I question as I lie here,
Is it right it should be mine?

Is my soul thus white and perfect?
Does it harmonize with this,
Not one selfish thought to mar it?
That, indeed, were happiness!

Then I pray to Christ, the pure one:
Make my soul all white within;
Make it better, cleaner, purer,
Free from every thought of sin.

For this sleepless hour I thank God,
If my life can better be,
White enough to bear God's sunlight,
Clear enough to mirror Thee!

Hampden, Mass.

A FINANCIAL EXPERIMENT.

BY MRS. F. M. HOWARD.

"Some crackers and cheese, if you please," said the agent, as she came up to the little fly-specked counter of a small store in the suburbs of the town which she was canvassing—a river town in the West, having its full quota of foreign inhabitants.

"How many pounds, mem?"

"Pounds! oh, none at all. Only a little of each for my lunch."

"Vell den, de leetle gal, she vaits on you while I goes to mine dinner." The broad smile faded into disappointment on the ruddy German face as its owner lumbered away toward the door which led to the upper regions. Customers were not too plenty in that quiet vicinity. A small girl, perhaps nine or ten years old, took his place behind the counter. She was a weazened, ferret-faced little thing, with sharp eyes which seemed to pierce and turn into your thought like a cork-screw. There was calculation and shrewdness in every line of her thin nose and lips, and a singularly unchildlike expression upon her face—the face of a little, old, miserly woman, set upon a child's shoulders. There was nothing young about her save a pink pinafore, several inches too short, and the braided tail of flaxen hair, tied with a skimpy blue ribbon, which hung down her back.

"How much is the cheese?" asked the agent as the sharp miss stood by the cheese case, knife in hand. She was an elderly, motherly person, footsore and weary with travel, yet she was watching this small development of character with much interest.

"Sixteen cents a pound, ma'am, half a pound will be eight cents."

"But couldn't you put me up a lunch—a little of cheese, pickles, crackers and cookies," said the agent. "I have no room in my bag for leavings, and I could never finish a half pound of cheese at one meal, you know."

"Oh, no," replied the child. "We never cut less'n five cents worth o' cheese, and I don't sell nothin' unless I can weigh it and know just what it's worth."

The agent could not help smiling as the small financier carefully weighed the trifling bits of food, making sure each time that the balance of weight was not a crumb too much in favor of the customer, and carefully carrying the half cent to her own credit with a skill which a Shylock might envy.

"You can set here and eat it if you want to," she added magnanimously, after she had rung the quarter on the counter and given back the change, making sure that the two cent piece with a hole was among it.

"I suppose you have a good many customers here," remarked the agent, by way of making talk as she sat on a pickle keg, not the most restful seat for a weary body, but the best which the small saleswoman had seen fit to offer her.

"Yes, we have a good many."

"And you have a nice, quiet location and no saloons to trouble you."

"I wish there was," said the child eagerly. "I wish there was one right over there," pointing with her elfish finger to a vacant lot across the street. "A saloon would make business livelier, you know."

"No, I don't know," replied the agent earnestly. "The people who have money to buy food of you now, would go there and spend it for beer."

"Oh, no, ma'am. It's just the other way. Lots of folks would go there to buy beer, and then come over and trade with us."

"But even if it were so, would you be willing to have the wicked liquor going into people's homes and making drunkards? Would you like to be a drunkard's child?"

"No;" the speculative light died out a trifle from the little, old face, "but then my pa knows when to stop—every man ought to know."

"When men get where they feel the necessity for stopping, they are oftentimes where they cannot," returned the agent earnestly. It was a shock to her honest, motherly heart to hear such uncanny wisdom from the lips of a child.

"Oh, pshaw!" the flaxen head tossed disdainfully, "men can stop drinking when they want to, my pa says so."

The customer turned the subject. "Can you give me a drink of water?"

"Yes'm;" then with an adroit eye to further business, "We've got some lemonade under the counter."

"But I prefer water."

The child's face fell. They had not yet set a price on that commodity, and she watched with a half grudging air while the agent drank some very warm, insipid water from a battered tin cup with a hole in the side.

"Thank you, my little girl," she said, as she returned the cup and brushed the crumbs from her neat walking suit. "Here is a little book for you to read when I am gone," and she placed a temperance tract in the small, grasping hand.

Hans, the father, came down the stairs a few moments later picking his teeth with a satisfied smile. "Vell, Katrine, did you vait on te lady some more?"

"Yes, pa. She didn't want nothin' but little things, but I got the half cent every time."

"Haw-haw-haw," roared the proud father delightedly. "Dot vas my own sharp leetle gal. You will make a goot merchant sometime alretty."

"And she says it wouldn't be good for us to have a saloon near by us, and she gave me this little book."

"She vas one of dose temperance cranks, Katrine. I'll pet you put some fleas in her ears some more, hey!"

"I told her what you said, pa. Did ma keep my dinner warm?"

"Yaw, Katrine! You runs right along and eats it now."

In course of time the vigilant eyes of a saloon-keeper espied the quiet spot where his business was not represented—a community of simple working people who had hitherto managed to exist on coffee, tea and even water as a beverage, in place of salubrious beer, and naturally his philanthropic heart ached for them, and he straightway set about relieving their condition.

Katrine and her father watched with lively interest the cheap board structure going up over the way. "It makes peesness good some more," the father said, rubbing his hands joyfully.

"And some day you'll buy me a piano, won't you, fader?"

"Yaw, Katrine, just so soon as peesness comes lifely you shall have him, for you pees one goot girl; you helps me mit mine vork."

There was a grand display when the saloon was formally opened for business—a free lunch and free beer to all who came. The saloon-keeper also had a daughter, a bold, saucy girl of sixteen, who waited upon customers in a costume as loud as her voice.

Katrine and her father went over to welcome the newcomers.

"Dot vas goot—a goot-lookin' gal behint der counter helps peesness," said Hans with a wink at the saloon-keeper.

"Mine leetle gal here is petter as two clerks; she's a sharp leetle voman, Katrine pees."

"Is dot so. You sees to it that she gets not ahead of you, Gretchen," said the saloon-keeper, smiling broadly. "We'll try and keep business brisk between us, neighbor."

New brooms sweep clean. The saloon started upon a cash basis. "I wants no mans to drink my beer that's too poor to pay for it. I don't take no bread from wives and lettle childrens, as tem temperance cranks say," he announced pompously, and so it came to pass that nickels and dimes dropped freely into his till however long the credit bill might be in other quarters. It was remarkable how many men's stomachs needed toning up in that vicinity; the very smell of the stuff from the outside seemed to create an aching void which nothing but beer could satisfy, and business was certainly lively on that side of the street.

It had never been necessary for the police to patrol that quiet locality before, but there were some whose aching void, when well moistened with beer, became a fullness which could only be relieved by having a fight with somebody, and the patrol wagon, the star and billy became a familiar sight, and things generally grew livelier every day.

There were more washings being done by women whose husbands had formerly supported their families without the aid of the mothers' earnings, and girls were going out to work who had heretofore been able to stay in their own homes and go to school.

The deadly suckers of the octopus were reaching out in every direction, and mothers began to dread seeing their young sons come home with the flush of intoxicants upon their faces, and the smell of tobacco in their clothing; wives whose husbands had been sober, industrious citizens began to tremble with fear of the saloon influence.

The industry of patching and darning also became brisker than ever before, as mothers strove to keep their loved ones decently whole while the saloon till encroached upon the family income.

Business was certainly brisk in more ways than one; the influence of the increased activity was being felt at the little store across the way, though not in just the direction the proprietor had calculated. As the saloon till filled, his credit-book filled also, and families which had done a safe cash business with him before the saloon came, were forced to beg for credit to keep from starving.

Men who had ordered formerly a sack of flour and a dollar's worth of sugar, bought a little meal and a pitcher of molasses, if they were obliged to pay cash, and scolded roundly the capitalists "the monopolists who are ruining the country and grinding the face of the poor."

The rubicund face of Hans grew longer from day to day, and he puzzled over financial questions and studied his long credit accounts disconsolately.

"I must get me some money's some more, or te sheriff closes up mine peesness alretty," he said one day, as he saw his neighbor's wife and daughter stepping into a new carriage for a drive. "It must pe I makes some mistakes, either a man must keep some saloon himself, or else keep just as far away from it as he can when he makes moneys."

Even sharp-eyed Katrine began to mistrust that there was an error in the calculation somewhere, and to look wistfully at the prosperous family over the way.

"I thought, pa, that we was agoin' to have lots more business when we got a saloon here," she said one day, as she watched the unloading of a piano, which had been bought for the bold-faced daughter of the bar.

"I tought so, too, mine Katrine," replied her father, despondently, "but I tinks we makes some mistakes mit dot saloon. Dot agent vomans, she vas pritty near right after all. We seems to be supportin' dose community all around dere, while dot saloon takes all dere money. Dey buys new pianos an' carriages, while we blays der mouth organ and goes afoot."

Hans was not alone in his experience, and if any other financier entertains the same idea of commercial prosperity he would better satisfy himself by doing business for a while in a locality where beer from the cash saloon is a necessity, and food and clothing, the luxuries of life to be paid for when convenient.

Clinton, Ia.

"AMERICA'S UNCROWNED MONARCH."

BY MRS. N. L. CAMINADE.

With prophetical vision the great apostle declared to Timothy, that "the love of money is the root of all evil." Even in the church the sole object seems to be, who and which society can raise the largest amount, losing sight of the spiritual forces which ought ever to keep pace with the giving, that the gift and giver may reap the blessing.

Christians are tending to make large giving cover a multitude of omissions; rather let them plead for a spiritual awakening in the hearts of God's people, then money must necessarily flow for His cause. Is it not too true that the literature published by various benevolent and philanthropic institutions is so impregnated with the blessings accruing from the giving of the dollars, that one really loses sight of the object to be benefited? Those of limited means and generous impulses can recall when listening to the pleas for liberality, so intense was the desire to give that they were tempted to distrust God, because the power was not theirs, forgetting for the moment that to Him there are other gifts as acceptable as gold, and that He requires that which a man hath and not that which he hath not?

The average American's first question is, "Does it pay?" And while prudence demands a careful investigation, the worship of the "almighty dollar" can become the basest idolatry. When the aim is not to do good, but for selfish interests, that power in the hands of a few may control the country for evil, every instinct which does not make for their wealth is throttled that these kings, who hold the keys unlocking the golden vaults, may reign supreme.

Our government exists, it is said, "for the people and by the people"; its executive depends upon universal (?) suffrage, and should stand upon its merits; but it is not merit alone, but gold in the hands of a powerful syndicate, which controls one of the largest, if not the largest, interests in America, the National Liquor Dealers' and Brewers' Association.

No longer is it a question of morals, theory or sentiment, but a question of dollars and cents, which affect these liquor kings, who have with increasing power assumed the right of government in public affairs. The saloon is the headquarters for the ward, because its owner, perhaps, is a city official; and thus, with his increase of business, he dictates the excise, police, and various other commissions in the city, and from that up to legislatures, which must be of a complexion that will not make laws hurtful to the "interest of the trade."

Twenty years ago a "Commission of Inquiry into the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic" was asked for of Congress. Year after year the same request has been presented; but so averse have the liquor men been to having an electric light turned upon the traffic that the bill has never been able to pass beyond the senate. Is not the repeated failure to have such a commission appointed further proof that the liquor oligarchy has gained national supremacy? The brewers, too, send representatives to Congress to sustain the internal revenue system, because it thereby keeps others from competing with their monopoly; and they favor tariff reduction only so far as they are untouched.

According to the internal revenue reports for the past year several classes of persons are engaged in the spirit trade; the rectifier, the retail and the wholesale liquor dealer. The brewer, the retail and wholesale dealer in malt liquors each pay a special tax; then there are five other specifications, for which a special tax is required, amounting to one hundred and twenty-one million dollars (in round numbers), an increase for 1892 over 1891 of nine million dollars; therefore, if amount sold is one thousand million dollars, and the government's share is one hundred and twenty-one million dollars, these rectifiers, brewers and dealers, wholesale and retail, have a profit of eight hundred and seventy-nine million dollars annually. From the above, taken from the last official report, it is evident government is far from blameless, because it derives a revenue from the debasement of a portion of its people for the enrichment of a class, while its responsibility ought to be for the welfare of the whole commonwealth.

The whole revenue system, whether high or low, national or local, perpetuates a dangerous monopoly, and is a confession that the city, state or national governments are copartners with manufacturers and dealers, and thereby demoralizing to the whole country. While this profit remains, whether by revenue or direct sale, the moral support of the governmental forces is used to crush out prohibition.

According to the last annual convention of the Beer Brewers' Association, 31,817,386 barrels of beer were manufactured last year, an increase of 1,339,644 barrels over 1891. From their balance in treasury, $6,000 was appropriated for "missionary work." What kind the report fails to state. The board of trustees recommend the "dissemination of useful information in large quantities during the progress of the World's Fair," saying, further, that "the opportunities which the Exposition affords are of such uncommonly advantageous nature, that a failure to make proper use of them would be an inexcusable omission." They further recommended that the "magnitude of American brewing, and its relations to allied trades, and other wealth-producing sources, be clearly illustrated by maps, charts, statistical tables, lectures," etc. You that have been watching, know how faithfully these instructions have been carried out, and, further than this, their power has been used most successfully to control the Exposition management in their interests.

But how can such a very powerful enemy be dealt with? Not by presenting scattered forces to the solid front of the enemy. Can he be dethroned? There are about 250,000 distillers, brewers and liquor dealers in the United States. Multiply this by ten, the number each dealer is said to control by votes, and you have 2,500,000 votes under command of the united liquor associations. At the last presidential election a little over twelve million votes were cast for the several candidates. Subtract this 2,500,000 from the twelve million, and you have 9,500,000 left; now pass three million over to the purchasable side, and still there are 6,500,000 left. Is it not presumable that the most of these are on the side of right against wrong? Then why do not their ballots count in the struggle? Because of divided forces they are powerless. Let there be concentration of these forces by the conscientious Christian voter, with the weapon in hand, and give woman the same weapon, thus clinching the arguments of the mass-meeting and their ofttimes pronounced resolutions, and the ravager of sires, of sons and of homes will be compelled to bow to a power long ignored, a people thoroughly aroused. Then will laws be made for the welfare of the whole country; then will laws be enforced, because public opinion will be in sympathy with the laws, and thus becomes the enforcer.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

In the south end of the building of Anthropology stands a glass case that at first glance appears to be a model doll establishment to delight the heart of a fortune-kissed child, or perhaps to be the central figure of a well-furnished nursery. It is the exhibit of the located at Sherburne, Mass. The occupants of this glass house are a very busy lot of bisque dollies, whose important duty it is to represent the classification of convicts and labor in the famous prison. There are four grades beside the probationers. As should be, the highest grade women—promoted for good behavior—wear the best dress. I have always thought if the ends of justice were met the best women would have the prettiest dresses, and in Sherburne that is the rule. Through the center of the case is a grand march of the different orders in their different costumes, while in rooms at the side we see them engaged with their varying tasks. I notice that the one representing the highest point attainable within the prison walls wears the red ribbon of good conduct pinned upon her breast with a silver "T," which stands for temperance.

In one room a woman is washing. The tiny papier-maché outfit is perfect, tub, wringer and board, all complete. If the snowy linen in the dainty bit of splint posing as a "clothes-basket," is a sample of the laundry work done there—I know some longsuffering folk who would like to send their "wash" to Sherburne. Another bustling dolly, whose prison stripes are almost hidden by the big snowy apron, is engaged in the housewifely work of bread-making. One diligent wax woman sits at the sewing machine, and upon the floor at her side a package of neatly finished shirts, about six inches long, attests her industry.

Most touching is the model of the mother with infant in arms and a child of perhaps four years leaning upon her lap. Stern law has yielded to the entreaty of Christian kindness, and the crime-convicted mother is not further hardened by separation from her children. Here she is visited by tender women seeking their Lord in prison, who strive to quicken her motherhood by the touch of their own. Three kinds of rural industry are shown. A Jersey, wearing a bell, has beside her the dearest little fawn-colored "bossy-calf" ever done in wax, while one of the good-behavior convicts pats her on the back with one hand, and holds a bucket in the other, preparatory to milking. In the next pen a buxom colored woman—no color line in prisons—with a basket on her arm, is surrounded with poultry, so natural that you listen to hear them cluck and crow. They are all in expectant attitude toward the basket that evidently delivers meal as well as collects eggs. This is the highest grade labor in the prison, the women doing it being trusted to keep account of it and its profits. Finally a golden-haired dolly, looking innocent as a lamb herself, is feeding the sheep. Who can estimate the benefit of such pure association with domestic animals to those who perhaps during all their life have never known pure human association? One in neat, dark dress, with a bundle in her arms and hope on her face, represents the outgoing prisoner who has given evidence of reform and earned her discharge. She is about to try life over again, better equipped for the experiment than ever before, and it comes to me that the briefest, most practical statement of the problem of preventing vice and crime is this: How can we bring equally helpful instruction, healthful conditions and hopeful inspiration to such women before they become criminal? Law shuts the door and turns the key after the theft. Let the gospel stand guard over the rich treasures of manhood, womanhood and childhood to protect them from the depredations of vice and crime. Temperance education and manual training are strong levers for lifting the submerged classes.

We woman are looking towards the divided state of the north this season, and in a sense all of us had an interest in "Michigan day," but we hardly expected to be "in it" as we were placed by the speech of Michigan's gallant senator, and the whole world's president of the National Commission. It is Mr. Palmer's opinion that "we shall never enter upon the highest plane of politics until women bring their keen moral senses, their truer intuitions, their regard for the economies of life to our aid." He thinks women the true economists, because of their painstaking love for their families, and says, "When they come to vote universally, our public officers will be of a higher grade morally, and the liquor evil which blasts so many homes will be scotched, if not extirpated." His reason for expecting such outcome is that the "happiness of the home is involved." I fear—but would not have them know the doubt in my heart—that these good men greatly overestimate us. They see us through the halo of their own illusions; but shall not their praise be an incentive to us, oh, sister-climbers, to cast aside every weight of selfish, worldly ambition, and the small envyings and heart-burnings that so easily beset us, in order to reach the high moral measure at which our brothers estimate us, and to realize their hope that we shall supply the much felt want in politics?

In the religious parliament the sex line has been as indistinct as lines of sect and race. Scarce a session has been without women on its program. Among so many who deserve honor it is difficult to select any, but one of the ablest papers was by gentle Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, treating of the erring and criminal classes, to whom she has been a ministering angel many years. The paper showed wide historic, as well as present-day observation and deep understanding of the meanings of history. I think her definition of religion is the simplest and most comprehensive given from this cosmic pulpit: "Religion is the conscious response of the human being to the Universal Power which makes for moral order out of personal wilfulness, for good out of evil, for beauty out of ugliness." Expressed it has been "intellectually the philosopher's attempt to explain the universe, and man's relation to it; it has been morally the struggle to make the life obedient to the highest law of right perceived; it has been emotionally the yearning of the human heart to feel at one with a central Heart of all life, and to picture that idea in worship and in art." It will be remembered that this is not a definition of our religion, but of that deep root from which sprang all human religions.

Apropos of definitions Edward Everett Hale said: "Life with God for man, in a present heaven, will be twentieth century religion. It will be so practical that the baby born in the slums will have the same chance for health and life, as the baby born in the White House."

Mrs. Eliza Sunderland, in a very bright address upon comparative religions, pointed out the way in which each contributes something worth having. She was loudly applauded when speaking of the Mohammedan mission lately opened in New York: "You think we can learn nothing from Islam? Two great evils Christianity has not so far proved able to cope with—drunkenness and gambling. Mohammedanism is the greatest total abstinence society in the world, and in no Mohammedan court is the testimony of a gambler accepted." The audience capitulated completely when she recommended Islamic missions in sundry rum and gambling cursed quarters of Chicago.

A paper by Miss Henrietta Szold told the practical benefits of Judaism, which "did not assign to woman an exceptional position, but took account of her actual position, and made her education most effective." She proved the dominant position of woman in the patriarchal home and interpreted the banishment of Hagar not as the culmination of a domestic difficulty, but as necessary to Isaac's preservation from the corrupting influence and example of his elder brother. The mother's decision was seconded by the divine word: "Do all that Sarah saith." Rebekah and Isaac had a similar discussion about Esau and Jacob. Only when Rebekah had prodded her husband until both were utterly "tired" did he forbid Jacob's taking a wife from Canaan. She was the first to dare set aside the precedent and custom of primogeniture, and send down the family name by the son best fitted to preserve it. "The present age, purged of the idea that might is right, is returning to the patriarchal idea of equality of the sexes."

I must not fail to mention the beautiful young convert from Parsee faith, who brought greetings from the women of Bombay. In her scarlet, gold-embroidered robe, she looked as if fresh from the garden of Hesperides. She says it is not learning from which her countrywomen shrink, but from publicity. Now they have their clubs, and go out freely. Twenty years ago they seldom left the zenana. She paid fond tribute to the beloved Pundita Ramabai.

VICTORIA HOUSE.

Our British cousins may be interested in a word about the beautiful national building in which the hospitality of their sovereign lady is represented and displayed. It has the choicest location on the grounds, being right upon the shore of our great inland sea, near the battleship. The genius of Britain naturally dwells in peace beside the typical man-of-war. It was named in accordance with the Queen's wish, and represents an old half-timbered manor-house of the Tudor period. Grand hall and staircase bring us face to face with Queen Bess, the modeled plaster ceiling being a copy of one in Elizabeth's palace in Wales, built in 1550. The rich, carved oak wainscoting is in the Italian style of the Renaissance. The reception room is a stately apartment, displaying much artistic carving in its finish and furnishing. But the proudest display of all is in the library, where shelves, lining the walls from floor to ceiling, are packed with rich stores of English literature. By her great achievements in the realm of expressed thought, rather than by the conquest of her arms on sea and land, will Britain attain historic immortality.

DRESS FOR WOMEN.

I.

BY HELEN GILBERT ECOB.

"So long as the term victim can be applied to woman, even in the line of dress, she can never rise higher in the scale of human existence than the shackles of her slavery will permit."—FRANCES W. LEITER.

A crusade which, on the dress question, began forty years ago, with a few brave souls, has now reached the dignity of organized effort, and is ranked among the great reforms of the day.

Yet many intelligent women, because they do not appreciate the issues involved in this problem are disposed to treat it contemptuously. These critics assume a superior tone, and say with lofty irony: "I never think of dress. I am interested in more important affairs." Such a rebuke would be fitting if the end sought were mere prettiness or picturesque effect.

But the question concerns the physical, intellectual and spiritual possibilities of women. Those who ignore it ignore a practical means for attaining a stronger and nobler womanhood. It is as if the housewife should say, "I am too much occupied with important affairs to think about the food we eat," and so allow her family to be served with sour bread and burnt steak. There is a moral side to clothing just as there is a moral side to cooking. Woman's dress, defying the plan of the Creator in the structure of the body, setting aside the great laws which He has ordained for her well-being, sapping at the life of coming generations, is there a more rank or harmful form of atheism?

Concerning the unhealthfulness of woman's dress there is unanimity of opinion among all unprejudiced observers. It goes without saying that a system of clothing which has completely reversed the type of breathing among civilized women, which prevents free motion in the trunk of the body, displacing and diseasing its delicate organs; which weakens the action of the heart and depresses the nerve-centers by an impoverished blood supply, has had its part in making women a race of invalids and "the chief support of the doctors." Every white-ribboner understands the bearing of this subject on moral and physical questions. We know that with a body crippled and diseased the mind is crippled and diseased. We know that ill-health dwarfs the soul and enervates the moral power. We know that the difference between the upright, efficient man, and the feeble, criminal man begins in physical conformation. We know that the craving for intoxicants often grows out of a starved condition of the nerves of the body. Every physical perversion is a spiritual degeneration.

National dress is always an exponent of its life and faith. The marked difference in the dress of men and women is the record of their social evolution. The dress of the men of this century, while ignoring artistic qualities and not above censure from other standpoints, shows a degree of intellectual progress in keeping with their independence and greater opportunities for education. Man's dress is the symbol of freedom and service; it is above frivolity and respects the plan of the Creator in the structure of the body. Woman's dress is the infallible sign of those barbaric sentiments concerning women which still cling to our Christian civilization. The whole system is the outcome of the false position which she has occupied in society. Women, having never enjoyed personal liberty, have sought power through personal charms, and adornment has been the chief object in dress. This has led to personal vanity and to a low order of ideals for her life. Mrs. Frances Russell, chairman of the committee on dress, appointed by the National Council of Women, has well said: "While women, in individual cases, have proved their claim to equality on intellectual, industrial and social lines of activity, they make by ridiculous dress, the impression of inferiority. From the crown of her head, decked with the stuffed bodies or wings of slaughtered song-birds, to the soles of her feet, perched on disease-producing heels, and soles too thin to protect the feet from dampness, the average dress of the average woman pronounces against herself the verdict, fickle, frivolous, incompetent." The effect of this system of clothing on the character may be conceived if we imagine a boy reared in the same environment. Keep the little lord of creation in petticoats, so that the muscles of the legs can never grow strong by free exercise. Make his garments of unsubstantial material, and adorn them so that he will be always conscious of himself. Later, crowd in the ribs so that he can only pant in the upper part of the lungs, trail his skirts over the parlor floor, put rings on his fingers and bangles on his wrists, crimp his hair and cover his face with a dotted lace veil, deck his hat with all the wonders of the vegetable and animal kingdom; finally, imbue this young man's mind with the idea that the chief aim of life is to make a desirable match. What kind of a manhood should we then have? Would not an "annex"—an afterthought—be sufficient for the higher education of this youth, and might he not be compelled to do equal work for half pay!

Shall we never learn that what is unworthy in one sex is unworthy in the other also? We sometimes deplore the fact that there are so few young men to whom we can safely intrust the happiness of our daughters; we ought to deplore just as deeply the fact that there are so few young women to whom we can intrust the happiness of our sons. Speaking broadly our girls are uneducated, for very few, except those compelled to earn their bread by professional labor, have more than the rudiments of an education. They are crippled and diseased by fashionable attire and morally perverted through false ideals of life. While the average woman weakens her mental and moral power by pernicious methods of dress, can we, consistently, resent being classed with idiots, criminals and children? It is time for the reformer to reform herself. We must learn to see the divine in the commonplace. Right here, in the earthy, we must begin a reformation which will react on the spiritual. Every effort which we make here, humble though it be, hastens the day of woman's intellectual and spiritual emancipation and so elevates humanity. Women will be delivered from the follies of dress only when they take their position beside men, as free, intelligent, self-respecting human beings.

A century ago spinning was the only industry open to woman. To-day she is competing with men in an open and merciless market, handicapped by a system of clothing which is responsible for untold physical suffering, which exhausts the body by superfluous weight, which is not adapted to locomotion and which belittles the soul with false notions of personal adornment. All over this country and in other countries also, women are asking for a costume which shall allow the free and healthful use of the body in labor and exercise. They ask for a style of dress in which women can develop "vigorous, healthy bodies, strong muscles and pure blood, for these are the conditions of a soul upright and free." They ask for a system of clothing in which mothers may bequeath to coming generations the precious legacy of acquired health and acquired character. They ask for a style of dress in which from childhood up, the limbs of the growing girl may be free for natural exercise.

The old-time sphere of housekeeping, the new-time opportunity for education and industrial privileges, and the all-time duties of motherhood are but incidents in the life of woman. The true purpose of life is the broadening and enrichment of character. This above all considerations is the commanding reason for better dress. We have not caught the spirit of this movement until we see that it means individualism and moral restoration.

We shall hereafter consider certain sociological and ethical issues involved in this subject together with practical methods for improving dress.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XIX.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY.

It was on the morning of December 24, 1873, that our women first set out heeding only the inward voice which said: "This is the way, walk ye in it." As the tenth anniversary drew near the Crusaders were impelled to celebrate it in a service commensurate with the thanksgiving in their hearts.

By invitation of the union Frances E. Willard, the beloved National president, accompanied by Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer of the N. W. C. T. U., and Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's faithful private secretary, came to add honor to the day. A reception and supper in Music Hall on the evening of December 22 was a financial and social success. Services for the children were held on Sunday, 23d, at 2 p. m., conducted by Miss Gordon in the Presbyterian church, and assisted by Miss Pugh. A Murphy meeting in the city at 3 o'clock, was in charge of Rev. Mr. McShade, at which Miss Willard narrated the call to which she surrendered the cherished plans of her life to become an evangel to "the great unwashed, untaught, ungospeled multitude." Exceptionally fine music completed a memorable service.

A mass-meeting in the evening was presided over by Mrs. Thompson at the Methodist church, assisted by Rev. J. W. Weatherby, pastor of the Baptist Church of Seville, Ohio. Miss Esther Pugh, with the unflinching principles of her Friends' faith and the never-give-up spirit of the W. C. T. U., was the most suitable reader of the Crusade Psalm. The battle hymn of the Crusade was most impressively rendered as a quartette and chorus, all of which made a fine setting for Miss Willard's thrilling exposition of the results of a decade of Crusade work. A liberal contribution was made for the National treasury, and Rev. John Pierson, presiding elder of the Hillsboro district, invoked the blessing of God at the close.

Storms and cold winds had too long seasoned the spirit of the Crusaders for them to be intimidated by the rigors of the morning of December 24, which found them assembled in the old Crusade Church with hearts glowingly reminiscent of the goodness of God and the power of the truth. As Miss Mattie Mather said: "The marvelous growth of the temperance crusade, now making our quiet conservative town a very Bethlehem, was most aptly illustrated by the ancient legend of the tent in the walnut, brought by an oriental prince to his father, which being unfolded, covered the king, the councilors, the kingdom and the world."

The same faithful pastor, Dr. McSurely, of this same dear old church, as true to the cause as ten years before, opened the meeting, but after devotional exercises and cheering comfort of speech, turned the service over to the ladies by calling to the chair the president elected just ten years before. After reading the 146th Psalm she gave her testimony to the faithfulness of "a covenant keeping God" who had verified His promises made to her ten years previous, by "vindicating the wrongs of the oppressed," by loosing the prisoners, by opening the eyes of the blind, by raising up those who were bowed down, and by "turning the way of the wicked upside down."

Well knowing that hearts and ears were waiting for the inspired words of Miss Willard, always eloquent and soul-moving, she was doubly so in responding to the invitation to speak on this blessed day.

"Give to the winds thy fears," was sung at her request after which a memorial paper was read by Mrs. Janes, in which tender record was made of the members of the original Crusade band who had gone from labor to reward, and of whom it might be well said, "Their works do follow them."

TESTIMONIES.

Mrs. Gen. Jos. McDowell (our first vice-president) gave a brief account of the wonderful conversion of her noble husband at a prayer-meeting in the first room set apart for the use of the temperance women in which a continuous morning meeting was held during the month of February following December, 1873.

Mrs. McDowell gave us many incidents of interest connected with those wonderful days; this stirred the souls of others and one after another related some striking reminiscence of '73 and '74, until the noon hour admonished us that time was only too short for the pent-up memories of those days of spiritual power.

Mrs. Margaret Stevens, a faithful worker, though a most retiring one, was urged to relate the following incident of the war of bloodless victories: On one occasion when we were trying to save the poor men from entering those places of death, our leader, who was holding a prayer-meeting in front of a saloon, noticed that the back entrance was becoming popular, and suggested that it would be well to guard that point. I said I would be one to go, and Mrs. Doggett joined me. Very soon two young men approached—evidently not sober—one, having a gun upon his shoulder, insisted upon having their rights. We said: "You have no right to destroy yourselves." The gun was taken down in a menacing manner by the young man as he approached me. Just at that instant Mrs. Doggett stepped up, and in her kind, gentle way, laid her hand upon the shoulder of the young man saying, "John, I know how your mother prays for you, and now we will join her." The gun was laid down, the tears of contrition began to flow, and as they left they said, "You are brave, good, Christian women, and we thank you for your interest in us."

Two brave Crusaders from Wilmington, Mrs. Farquhar and Mrs. Clevenger, had dared the worst weather that has ever been known in this region, to come over and help in celebrating our twenty-third; they gave very earnest words of sympathy and cheer, and enlivened the meeting by some of the incidents of their work, which was so successful that for months they rejoiced in having no open door to destruction in their midst.

Two earnest Presbyterian sisters gave wonderful testimony to the power of the Spirit upon their hearts during the days of prayer.

Mrs. Stephenson said the "sword of the Spirit" had severed from her soul (through the influence of the Crusade) that formality of service which for years had enslaved her spirit and fettered her tongue, so as to cause a lifeless, dumb service; that she had been delivered from the fear of the world, and had ever since rejoiced in the will of her Heavenly Father, and continually upon her heart was the psalm of joy, "Praise ye the Lord."

Mrs. Ellifritz gave a most thrilling account of the struggles that she endured with her own spirit when she first went out with the Crusaders—lifetime usages, the rules and forms of her own church, which in the past, she claimed, had not brought out the latent spiritual power of woman. Finally, after a sore and prolonged battle with the powers of darkness, the Spirit set her free, since which time she had been free indeed.

Mrs. Gov. Hart, who was one of our most earnest and liberal workers, always counting "sacrifice" a portion of "service," gave a talk this morning that appeared to set the calendar back a decade, for the tongues of fire that rested upon the original band seemed again visible. Mrs. D. K. Fenner (first secretary) also proved the undying nature of this zeal for God and humanity.

Mrs. Rev. McSurely brought out a very noticeable feature of our work as Crusaders in the relation of an incident that occurred just as we were forming in line for the march to the street, on our way to do God's work. Some one said: "Why, Mrs. Thompson, are we really going to sing and pray in the saloons?" The answer was, "We don't know what we will do; God will lead and guide us."

To have heard the experiences of these good women on this "decennial anniversary" morning would have proved to the most doubting minds that the Crusade movement was from God, and that the purifying and quickening influence of the Holy Spirit was one of its seals.

Indeed it was a wonderful meeting, one long to be remembered, and with glad hearts we raised at this decade our Ebenezer, and sang together with the sisterhood of all lands, warmed by the same fire, "Blest be the tie that binds." Again we set forth with the "sword of the Spirit in hand," putting on anew the whole armor of God, resolved to battle with renewed zeal and courage "for God, and home, and native land."

MRS. CHAPIN'S GREAT LOSS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—So many letters have come to me, inquiring how I stood the hurricane, that I must beg space in your paper to reply. Early in the night, the house in which I rent a suite from a friend was unroofed of its tin covering, leaving us at the mercy of the most pitiless rainfall I ever experienced. Then the shutters to the windows were wrenched off, and the panes of glass blown out by the dozen. The house has a water front, and the tide came up to the piazza, the building meanwhile, shaking like a cradle; and when the chimneys fell over into the next yard and the great telegraph pole crushed the gate, fence, and end of the piazza, we felt our hour had come; but having passed through so much sorrow, and so many losses in the past, and now being so broken in health, I said from the bottom of my heart: "For me it is better to depart, and be with Christ."

But it was not to be so, and the next morning when I looked out, and saw the boys rowing around us in boats, and beds, cradles, cooking utensils, chairs, and tables washed out of the homes of the humble poor, who had nothing left, floating around, I felt there was something for even "half hands" to do.

My washer-woman came to tell me that "clothes, and tub and all had gone to sea," and when I heard her pitiful story, how they had "stood up to their wases (waists) in water, then climbed upon the safe and mantel-piece until somebody came and took them out in a boat," instead of grieving over my losses, I went to rumaging among my wet wardrobe for shoes and clothes, for the poor soul and her daughters.

A friend heard a continuous knocking at the door; afraid to open it lest the tide might rush in it was unheeded for a while, but as it became more imperative he opened to find the cow and the carriage horses, which had ascended the marble steps and were seeking shelter, the water being over their heads where they were. They whinnied delightedly, as they were admitted into the hall.

I learned a lesson never to be forgotten from a circumstance that occurred that night. Hurricanes are never prepared for, so the city was in utter darkness when deprived of gas and electricity, few people being thoughtful enough to keep on hand candles and oil. A gentleman looking out of the window to his surprise saw the tide rushing over all barriers, and a great expanse of water obliterating streets, and making it dangerous for any one to pass. In a moment he lighted his lantern, so that when placed in the third story window it disclosed the danger. Five minutes later a young man who was piloting a widow and three baby children to a place of safety, came along, and but for that friendly light might have been drowned. It is encouragement to those of us from whom the power to do much has been taken, to do the little we can, and have faith to believe God's blessing will do the rest.

I am suffering with heart trouble and nervous prostration. The storm of persecution through which I was called to pass because I dared to believe and say that closing every open saloon in the state was more than half the way gained to actual prohibition, proved too much for me in my overworked condition. The doctor thought I could not live, but I am better, notwithstanding I bailed water out of my rooms for a night and day, and held an umbrella over me when I went to bed. The storm has passed, but it has left many sad hearts and desolate homes, and there are many who stand trembling before the dreaded approach of cold weather, with the necessity for coal, wood and warm clothes. May the God who cares for the sparrow, take them under the shelter of His wings.

A TEMPERANCE UNIVERSITY AT HARRIMAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Who shall say what the fruitage may be of work on September 14, here in Harriman? Who dare assert that day in this new town did not mark a new epoch in education and reform work, and in the progress of moral ideas in the world?

Three months ago a temperance university, upon soil dedicated to Prohibition in its title deeds was undreamed of, save in the minds of a few who hoped that on some happy day, not too far distant, even this might come true. Yet, even to those most hopeful ones the day of their dream seemed remote, and not encircled either in this year or the next. Had they been asked about it they would have said that nothing which they could do might surely bring it near, and they would have shrunk from any effort; they would have said: "We must not attempt the impossible." They did say it when the suggestion came.

Yet behold! In the roomy Temple of the W. C. T. U., at nine o'clock, September 14, a notable assemblage saw a notable sight and enjoyed a notable experience. There on the platform were gathered the officers of our city government, the members of our public school board, the pastors of our city churches, the white ribbon women and the faculty of the American Temperance University; and before them, thronging the floor seats and galleries, were students and citizens, eager and interested and proud; all gathered to inaugurate the first term of the first year of a new educational institution of the highest grade, well organized, and with every promise of a prosperous and fruitful future.

How did so much come about in so short a time, from conditions immediately promising so little? There appears to have been a Providence in it. Dr. John F. Spence, by whose efforts Grant University had been upbuilded in this state, retired from that, and was not eager to undertake similar work elsewhere. But he visited Harriman, and he said to himself, others said to him, "Here is the place for a broad, high-class university, dedicated to the 'Temperance Idea.'" He doubted the ripeness of conditions; he feared the financial outlook; and so did others. "I am not a crank as to special Providences," he said last evening in private conversation, "but the providential leadings in this case did seem unmistakable."

He followed them. Others went with him. The way opened more and more clearly. Plans fairly shaped themselves. The people of Harriman coöperated. Several thousand dollars were subscribed for the school's work and support the first year. Scores of men and women attested their willing spirit of sacrifice. A campus and building material to the value of fifty thousand were donated. Instructors were engaged. Excellent temporary buildings were rented. Announcements went forth. The names of students came in, and the inaugural ceremonies were the surprising first result.

It was fit and proper that the American Temperance University founded for the highest educational functions, dedicated in its very name to the highest moral ideas, should have formal dedication and consecration in the Temple of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

It was both graceful recognition and fervent desire that prompted all, in the original dedication hymn, to sing and pray:

"Here now for God and right
Lift we our banner white,
Ensign of truth;
Teach us its deepest things,
Show us its hidden springs,
While hope her blessing sings
In hearts of youth."

Not less fitly applied were these words of one of the faculty in the opening portion of the closing speech, before the hymn was sung:

"The local organization which erected this edifice, which has here its home, which has kindly permitted the use of it for chapel purposes, and which graces this occasion with its presence, forms part of a great body of Christian temperance workers, who, by their devotion, their energy, their unfaltering faith and their heroic works, have encircled the world; who have given to the always broad and inclusive word, temperance, a newer and broader and grander scope, and with whom we may proudly and gladly and appropriately share it in the work we have set out to achieve."

Our two adjectives—"American, Temperance"—we regard as fitly preceding our proper noun, "University," and as fitly characterizing what our university shall be; while our name in full fairly pledges and prophesies what our institution shall become—a university, broadly foundationed, liberally endowed, amply equipped, an American university, imbued with the American spirit, inspired with American patriotism, devoted to the highest American ideals and loyal to the noblest American attributes—the American Temperance University.

And let nobody assume that the term "Temperance" in the name of our University weakens the strong purpose underlying it, or will in any wise detrimentally affect its administration, so far as radical teachings are concerned. In the charter of the University its radical character is fully enough established; and in the by-laws of the University corporation its purpose is shown to be the maintenance of an educational institution of the highest grade, "wherein the principles of temperance shall be inculcated, the habit of total abstinence from intoxicating liquors required, and the principles of political economy, in regard to the use of and traffic in such liquors, and the traffic therein and the effect of such liquors, upon the individual citizen and upon the social and political fabric of which the individual citizen forms a part."

We believe that such provisions mean absolute and unqualified Prohibition as the educational aim sought, so long as Prohibition is anywhere required. The Board of Trustees, self-perpetuating, must be in full sympathy with Prohibition, and a large majority of them must be known and recognized advocates thereof. Some of our strongest Prohibitionists have already accepted a place on the Board, among them Gov. St. John, Prof. Dickie, Mrs. Lathrap, Mr. Mead, Mrs. Fisk and Mrs. Snell.

Harriman, Tenn.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith and have not works? Can faith save him? Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works.—James 2:14-18.

The absence of our beloved President, Miss Frances E. Willard, from the coming World's and National Conventions of the W. C. T. U., which convene in Chicago, October 16, is indeed a source of unspeakable regret. The only comforting thing about it is the assurance of Miss Willard's physicians that continued rest for another six months will restore her to her usual health. In the midst, therefore, of our bitter disappointment we have reason for thankfulness that our great leader will be restored to us if she can be persuaded to take a rest of sufficient length for recuperation. On account of Miss Willard's absence and the continued stringency in the money market, preventing for the present any further attempt to carry out the plans (referred to in THE UNION SIGNAL of September 7) for raising money to enable us to become owners of the entire capital stock of the Temple, we have postponed the dedication until such time as Miss Willard can be with us, and we can announce that the trustees hold and own for the National society the capital stock. This will also cause a postponement of the presentation of the Temple banners to the three Loyal Temperance Legions that have raised the most money for the building. It will, however, give other Legions a chance to compete for the prize, now that their effort to raise money for the children's fountain has been completed.

Mrs. H. L. Reed, Burbank, O., writes as follows: "While reading the column headed Temperance Temple Items, in THE UNION SIGNAL, Sept. 7, I seemed to have caught a new inspiration. Our leader in the Temple work says: 'Now we stand waiting with a faith undaunted.' Does not that mean to the white ribbon army and the hosts that love God, home and every land, to move on and with their mites and hundreds and thousands pay for the 'House Beautiful' that is to bless the rich and poor alike? Yes, we think we are not mistaken in this grand and to us, precious thought, that from the homes of our land and all lands, rich gems will be sent that will bless the living and their posterity forever. By my side on the table is a Temple mite-box, and when I read the extract from that New Zealand sister's letter, I just dropped in a dollar. Can you not keep a little corner in one of the tablets where a union or some name can be placed hereafter, coming from a small town in Wayne county, Ohio?" Yes, Sister Reed, we will keep such tablets open both for unions and individuals until the entire indebtedness on the Temple is paid, but you and all other white-ribboners must go to work at once if you would have your name inscribed on the marble records of Willard Hall, for FAITH says within two years the building will be entirely paid for and owned by the National W. C. T. U., after that it will be too late, unless in memoriam the names of the now living may find record.

Last week we noted the gift of £20 from Australia, sent by Mrs. Evans at the suggestion of our dear, brave, round-the-world missionary, Miss Ackermann. We supposed the money was the gift of the W. C. T. U. of Australia. Miss Ackermann has just written us that the money is the generous donation of Mrs. Evans given in order that the Australian W. C. T. U. may have representation in the Temple. The beautiful bronze over the outer entrance to Willard Hall, bearing upon it the legend, "For God and Home and Every Land," is surely in keeping with the gift received and interest manifested by white-ribboners all over the world. And we want our sisters in other lands to know that for every dollar sent us the W. C. T. U. of their country will receive, when the Temple is all paid for, their pro rata share of the interest on the money they have sent, just as much as though it came from the W. C. T. U. of one of the commonwealths of the United States. The building is a World's as well as a National one, and the income from it will be perpetually going on doing its munificent work in all lands, healing the broken-hearted, rescuing the perishing, making safe paths for little feet, long after the present generation and those who have given of their means to its erection have passed to their reward. To do and labor for unborn generations constitutes in any soul a marvelous oneness with God, and gives a breadth to life of which they who only labor for the present alleviation of suffering have no conception.

Mrs. E. A. Mickle, the treasurer of the W. C. T. U. of New Jersey, a woman greatly beloved, not only in her own state, but in the nation, has the deep sympathy of all white-ribboners in her late great bereavement in the death of her noble husband, who was a true friend of the W. C. T. U. Only a few months before he was called to enter the Paradise of God, he showed his confidence in and love for our work by purchasing $10,000 worth of Temple Trust Bonds. Mrs. Mickle is again attending to her duties. We have just received from her $66; of this amount $15 comes from the Morristown, N. J., Y's and completes their $100 pledge. The Tuckerton, N. J., W. C. T. U. sends $41 on a pledge of $100; $5 comes from the New Egypt union. The Pennsylvania tablet in the Willard corridor in the Temple contains the following names of unions which have contributed $100 to the building fund: Kean County Union, State Union, Beaver Union, Crawford County Union, Warren County Union, Indiana Union, George Institute Union, Philadelphia Tidioute Union, Strasburg Union, Franklin Union, Philadelphia; McKeesport Union, Mercer County Union, Venango County Union.

DID YOU EVER?

An advocate of dress reform
In dress reform array,
Walked out for reasons known to her.
It was a rainy day;
Her gown was neat
And short and sweet
And frankly showed her tiny feet;
And sister women looked askance,
Exclaiming with each sidelong glance:
Did you ever!

The advocate of dress reform
Without the least dismay,
Goes safely o'er the muddy street
And lightly on her way.
Her sisters gasp
And clutch and clasp
Their garments with a frantic grasp,
And lift their skirts, quite unaware
Of heights no dress reform would dare.
Did you ever!

The advocate of dress reform
Goes home quite fresh and dry,
And, full of satisfaction, puts
Her natty storm suit by.
Her sisters fret
At mud and wet,
And scowl and shake and brush, and yet
Console themselves in spite of dirt:
"At least we wear a modest skirt!"
Did you ever!

SIM'S SAWDUST PICTURE GALLERY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

Sim was carefully spreading damp sawdust on the sidewalk before his shop. Sim kept "beers" and "tonics" in his shop, and he thought it would be a fine way to advertise his goods to dispense the odor of them, free, without waiting for customers to come in; hence the damp sawdust saturated with his "best brand" of something he might not have felt quite free to name.

Sim chuckled to himself now and then as he worked; ah, but wasn't he a shrewd old fellow for business! He stopped to sniff and snuff, and push his hat back from his forehead to ease his expanding brain. As he stood with his hands on his sides, regarding his work with a cunning smile on his weazened face, he glimpsed a woman coming that way. He gave her an attentive look, for she was not like the women that commonly passed by Sim's beer shop. She was of goodly proportions, she was dressed neatly in brown, and as she advanced, Sim beheld a face comely and wholesome as any one might wish to see, but something like dismay came into Sim's face as he looked.

"Hullo! I know her if I hain't much mistaken; a regular temperance crank, out on the rampage, I know by her gait. I can tell one of them critters as far as I can sight 'em."

Sim seemed to shrink into himself as he furtively watched the woman's approach, and rubbed his nose with an anxious, speculative air, which seemed to say, "Now it couldn't be me she is after, could it?"

"Hullo!" he called to himself presently, "if I hain't much mistaken that's Mother Hathaway, she that nussed my boy through the typhoid. I heerd how she had got rung in with them temperance lunatics. Mighty good woman; too bad, too bad!"

Sim tried to look innocent of any suspicion, but he might have spared himself the effort, for Mother Hathaway did not glance his way. When her foot pressed the damp sawdust she looked down, she walked slowly and looked intently into the sawdust, so intently that Sim leaned forward to see if there was anything there of which he was not aware.

"What a picture gallery," exclaimed Mother Hathaway, not moving her eyes from the sidewalk.

"Picture gallery!" echoed Sim, surprised into speech, then leaning up against the door again and saying to himself, "The woman must be gone 'clean daft.'"

"It's so kind of you to have them out here where every one can see them," she continued, not noticing Sim's interruption. "Who is that young man in that picture,"—pointing at the sawdust—"with his hand at his throat, and his eyes so wild, and his face so white. What ails him?"

Sim's face took on a darker hue, but he said to himself: "Yes, her head's turned with all the carryings on of them temperance folks. Too bad, too bad!"

"Oh, those dear little children!" Mother Hathaway went on, "why are they crying so, and why are they barefoot and ragged? And that sweet-faced woman, what has she done that that evil-looking man beats her so?

"These boys—they seem to have just left their mother, who is on her knees praying for them. And this, this, why this seems to be another picture of the same boys. How terribly their faces have changed. I see they all have glasses in their hands; the glasses are full of little snakes, and the boys are about to drink them. Oh, Sim! what a great artist you are. You must be very happy to be able to make such startling pictures. And what a comfort it must be to you every day of your life to know that you have helped that praying mother to make such men of her boys.

"But, oh, Sim, Sim! did you really make that picture, those fair young girls sitting at that table with glasses in their hands and those dissolute looking men beside them? Ah, but what a noble thing to seize these foolish girls and flatter them to ruin, to make them more foolish by hiding the snakes in the glasses they hold, and then to destroy them body and soul! How they will bless Sim for making such pictures of them, how their fathers and mothers will bless him, and how God will bless him, and what a reward will be his when he goes to give a final account of his good works done on this earth. That is the happiest part of it, Sim, for it is said, 'their works do follow them,' and what a grand exhibition it will be, your picture gallery!

"Why here's a jail, and here are prisoners with names on their caps; I can't quite make it out. Oh, I see, 'S-i-m'. What a splendid work, to educate men for the prisons. What a blessing a man is in a community who educates men for theft and murder, and all crimes under the sun. How orderly and peaceful and safe a town is where there is a Sim making such pictures!

"And this I know by the terrible faces, is an insane asylum. Some of the portraits I see are done by 'Sim.' Insane asylums are great institutions; the men who create a demand for them should prosper and receive all honor.

"What's this? Oh, I see, a 'poor farm.' The name is over the door. Sim, how you do love to paint portraits. The country owes you a great debt, I think, for how much better it is to permit you to beggar and craze and ruin men, women and children, and then to build jails and asylums and poor farms, and reform schools, and the like, and support city missionaries and public charities, and law officials and policemen, with the money you pay to the government for the privilege. How much better than to stop your work, and use the money needed to build industries and schools, and farms, and trades enough to give every man an honest living. What a foolish government it would be, Sim, that should spend its time and money in clearing the country of its slums and criminals, and building clean cities with clean homes, and educating men and women to become clean and Christian citizens.

"How short-sighted a government would be, Sim, to invest time and money in work that would make the country safe and prosperous and happy, and yield an interest ten times greater than that of licensed crime. Oh, Sim, you are a great artist. You will certainly receive your reward in this world, and in the next a thousand fold. Sim, what envy you must arouse!"

Mother Hathaway looked at Sim for the first time as she spoke the last words, and then with a quick, "Good-day, Sim," went her way. Sim's face was not a dull red now, but a grayish yellow, like the face of a corpse. He moved into the shop with uncertain steps, and closed the door. The next passer-by noted, amazed, that Sim's beer shop had closed shutters and a closed door, and the next customer found that the closed door was bolted.

The following day the sawdust had vanished from the sidewalk, and the shop was still closed. Upon inquiry, it was found that Sim had gone away for a vacation. When the shutters were drawn again there was a sign, "To Let," in the window. A little later there was a W. C. T. U. lunch room where the beer shop had been. Sim never came back, and Mother Hathaway believes he is making different sort of pictures in a different sort of a place.

Abington, Mass.

THERE are in the entire world, 51,000 breweries. Germany easily heads the list with 26,240, which produce every year 4,750 million liters of beer, the liter being equal to about 1¾ pints English measure. Next comes England with 12,874 breweries, and an output of 2,600 million liters; then the United States with 2,300 breweries and 3,500 million liters; Austria with 1,942 breweries and 1,300 million liters; Belgium with 1,270 breweries and 1,000 million liters; and France with 1,044 breweries and 800 million liters; In Bavaria, the annual allowance of beer per head of the population is 221 liters; in Berlin 191; in Belgium 169; in England 143; in Switzerland 131; in Denmark 133; in the United States 31; in Sweden 11; in Russia 5.—Alliance News.

A VISION IN THE NIGHT.

I sat down in an armchair, wearied with my work. My toil had been severe and protracted. Many were seeking the pearl of great price, and many had found what they sought. The church wore an aspect of thrift and prosperity, and joy and hope and courage were the prevailing sentiments on every hand. As for myself, I was joyous in work. My brethren were united. My sermons and exhortations were evidently telling on my hearers. My church was crowded with listeners. The whole community was more or less moved with the prevailing excitement, and as the work went on I had been led into exhausting labors for its promotion. Fired with my work, I soon lost myself in a sort of half-forgetful state, though I seemed fully aware of my place and my surroundings. Suddenly a stranger entered the room without any preliminary "tap" or "come in." I saw in his face benignity, intelligence, and weight of character; but, though he was passably well attired, he carried suspended about his person measures, and chemical agents, and implements which gave him a very strange appearance.

The stranger came toward me and extending his hand said: "How is your zeal?" I supposed when he begun his question that the query was to be for my health, but was pleased to hear his final word for I was well pleased with my zeal, and doubted not the stranger would smile when he should know its proportions. Instantly I conceived of it as a physical quantity and put my hand into my bosom and brought it forth and presented it to him for inspection. He took it and placed it in his scale, weighed it carefully, and I heard him say "one hundred pounds." I could scarcely suppress an audible note of satisfaction, but caught his earnest look as he noted down the weight, and I saw at once that he had proved no final conclusion, but was intent on following his investigation. He broke the mass to atoms and put the crucible into the fire. When it was thoroughly fused he took it out and set it down to cool. It congealed in cooling, and when turned out on the hearth exhibited a series of layers or strata, which all, at the touch of the hammer, fell apart, and were severely the stranger making minute notes as the process went on. When he had finished he presented the notes to me, and gave me a look of mingled sorrow and compassion as, without a word, except "May God save you!" he left the room. I opened the "notes" and read as follows:

TESTED AND WEIGHED,

Analysis of the zeal of Junius, a candidate for a crown of glory:

Weight in mass.....100 lbs.

Of this, on analysis, there proves to be:

I had become troubled at the peculiar manner of the stranger, and especially at his parting look and words; but when I looked at the figures my heart sank as lead within me. I made a mental effort to dispute the correctness of the record, but I was suddenly startled into a more honest mood by an audible sigh—almost a groan—from the stranger, who had passed into the hall, and by a sudden darkness that was falling upon me, by which the record became at once obscured and nearly illegible. I suddenly cried out,

"LORD, SAVE ME!"

and knelt down at my chair, with the paper in my hands and my eyes fixed upon it. At once it became a mirror, and I saw my heart reflected in it. The record was true; I saw it, I felt it, I confessed it, I deplored it, and besought God to save me from myself, with many tears; and at length, with a loud and irrepressible cry of anguish, I awoke. I had prayed, in years gone by, to be saved from hell, but my vow to be saved was now immeasurably more fervent and distressful; nor did I rest or pause till the refining fire came down and went through my heart, searching, probing, melting, burning, filling all its chambers with light, and hallowing my whole heart to God.

That light and that love are in my soul to-day; and when the toils of my pilgrimage shall be at an end, I expect to kneel in heaven at the feet of the Divine Alchemist, and bless Him for the revelations of that day which showed me where I stood and turned my feet into a better, higher, narrower path.

That day was the crisis of my history; and if there shall prove to have been, in later years, some depth and earnestness in my convictions, and some searching and saving pungency in my words, I doubt not eternity will show their connection with the visit of the Searcher of hearts, at whose coming my sins went to judgment beforehand, and I was weighed in the balance and found wanting.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in "Sword and Trowel."

FIFTEEN TO-DAY.

For the last time, dear dolly, I dress you,
And carefully put you away;
You can't tell how much I shall miss you,
But then I am fifteen to-day.

And you, not so very much younger,
Have you nothing at parting to say?
Are you sorry our fun is all over
And that I am fifteen to-day?

What walks we have had through the clover;
What rides on the top of the hay;
What feasting in grandmother's garret!
And now I must put you away.

Cousin Ethel just buried her dolly
With its eyes open wide, and as blue
As yours, my sweet dolly, this minute;
I couldn't do that, dear, to you.

Oh, stop, dolly, what am I thinking?
Why cannot I give you away?
There's a poor little girl I love dearly,
And she's only ten years to-day.

How happy your bright face would make her!
She never had playthings like you,
With all your fine dresses and trinkets.
Yes, dolly, that's just what I'll do.

I do believe, dolly, I'm crying.
"What nonsense, child!" grandma would say.
Good-by; one last kiss; I'm half sorry
That I'm fifteen, dear, to-day.

TWENTY TIMES A DAY.

Twenty times a day, dear,
Twenty times a day,
Your mother thinks about you,
At school, or else at play.
She's busy in the kitchen,
Or she's busy up the stair,
But like a song her heart within
Her love for you is there.

There's just a little thing, dear,
She wishes you would do.
I'll whisper, 'tis a secret,
Now mind, I tell it you.
Twenty times a day, dear,
And more, I've heard you say,
"I'm coming in a minute,"
When you should at once obey.

At once, as soldiers, instant,
At the motion of command;
At once, as sailors seeing
The captain's warning hand.
You could make the mother happy
By minding in this way,
Twenty times a day, dear,
Twenty times a day.

MABEL'S FIRST PEACH.

To a little stranger from the North,
Who was timid and shy of speech,
We gave—the first she had ever seen—
A ripe, beautiful, downy peach.

We caught one glimpse of her big blue eyes,
From her drooping lashes beneath,
As into the peach's curving side
Went her sharp, little milk-white teeth.

She spoke not a word till all was gone,
Then she cried in a joyous tone:
"I've eaten it, cloth and all, mamma,
Now, what shall I do with the bone?"

SWEET GRAPES.

A Temperance Story for the Little Ones.

What kind of fruit do you like best? Most boys and girls like nearly all kinds.

Good, ripe fruit is a necessary part of our daily food. It is much better to spend our money for fruit than at a candy-store.

Men sometimes squeeze out the sweet juice of good fruits and make it into poisonous drinks. It is a great pity to have the fruit that is good for our use spoiled to make drinks that do us harm. A harmful drink called wine is made from grapes.

To make wine men crush grapes in a press and squeeze their juice into a big tub, or vat, that is put under the press to receive it.

You have often seen upon the skins of grapes a kind of dust that you could easily rub off. When grapes are being pressed the juice that flows from them washes off some of this dust and carries it into the vat.

In this dust are some very tiny things called ferments. They are so small you cannot see them unless you look at them through a glass called a magnifying glass or microscope. A microscope, as you may know, makes things look many times larger than they really are.

If you should look at a ferment through a microscope you would see a very tiny speck without much shape or color. You might think it too small to do any harm; but many ferments together can do a great amount of mischief. They quickly spoil good grape juice after it has been pressed out of the grape. How do you think they do this?

The juice of grapes is sweet, as you know, because there is sugar in it. No one puts the sugar in the grape; it forms in them while they are ripening. Just how this is done we do not know.

The ferments change this sugar of the grape juice, after it is pressed out, into a gas and a poison. They cannot do this while the juice is inside the unbroken grape, for they do not get inside the fruit while it remains whole.

But when the juice is squeezed out of grapes and is left standing in the vat, the ferments that were on the stems and skins of the grapes begin to work upon the sugar of the juice. Other ferments, too, get into the vat from the air. Ferments are so small and light that they are easily carried about in the air.

How can we know when ferments are turning the sugar of grape juice into a gas and a poison? We can know by the little bubbles of gas we see rising up through the juice. This gas passes out into the air, but the poison remains in the wine and makes the wine poisonous.

The name of this poison is alcohol. There is no alcohol in a sound, ripe grape.

No one should drink wine for there is alcohol in it.

All poisons do not at once kill those who take only a little at a time; but a man could easily take enough alcohol to kill him at once. The man who takes a little alcohol every day is seldom as strong a man, as wise a man, or as good a man as he would be without alcohol. The alcohol hurts his body and his mind.

Alcohol may make a father cruel to his children and to his wife. It sometimes makes a man tell falsehoods and do other bad deeds.

One of the most dangerous things about alcohol is that it can make those who take it want more alcohol. If you should begin to take wine, the alcohol in it might make you want to drink more and more wine until you cared for nothing so much as drinking wine.

It is the nature of alcohol to make those who take it want more alcohol.—Selected.

WHAT TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

A little girl but four years old was observed to be very devout in church and to be very eager not to miss attending the services. "What do you do, when you are there, Rosie," asked a lady friend, "you cannot read and you must get very tired of such long services?" The little one shook her head gravly. "I am never tired," she said, "I have so much to say to God." "What do you say, do tell me," persisted the lady. The child climbed on her knee, and whispered with all her soul in her eyes, "I cannot go to church too often to thank God—I was not born a boy."

A LITTLE boy had his first pair of rubber boots, and could not be contented till his mother went down to the brook to see him wade.

With loving care he dragged a board across the brook for her to walk upon, while he waded beside her in water which came nearly to his boot-tops. Suddenly, as if he had just realized what she was deprived of in being a woman, in shoes, he took her hand and said with affectionate earnestness:

"Indeed, mamma dear, I will not wade another minute where you can see me. It must be too temptationy for you to bear."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Do you ever think, oh, there's so little I can do, it isn't worth trying? Just read this:

"In an English dockyard a great ship was to be launched. An immense multitude assembled to see it glide down the slides that were to carry it into the water. The blocks and wedges were knocked away; but the massive hull did not stir, and there was disappointment. Just then a little boy ran forward, and began to push the ship with all his might. The crowd broke out into a laugh of ridicule, but it so happened that the vessel was almost ready to move; the few pounds pushed by the lad were only needed to start it, and away it went into the water, amidst the cheers of the people."

When our great ship, "Home Protection," is ready to be launched it may be just one pair of hands will be God's chosen power to move it. Won't you get ready, then, each one of you, to push with all your might?

I come, asking for admittance to the Cozy Corner. I am now at my summer home at my aunt's, who lives on a high hill. I come here nearly every summer, on account of my health. I am a Prohibitionist, and am working for temperance all I can, and some day I hope to help vote the saloons out. EDITH R. STARBUCK.

Barnesville, O.

Bravo, little Cozy Cornerer.

I am nine years old, and a little temperance girl all over. I belong to the L. T. L. I am proud of my badge, and wear it all the time. I send ten cents for the Willard Fountain, which I earned washing dishes. I am going to try for one of Miss Gordon's medals.

Weymouth, Mass. FLORENCE E. SMITH.

And I know you will succeed, Florence, in getting the ten dimes and the medal.

I was eleven years old yesterday. I got three books. Their names were, "Samantha at Saratoga," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and "Mother's Portfolio about the Kindergarten." I also got a set of authors, a bonnet, a handkerchief, a bottle of perfume, some bananas, a lead pencil, a fancy hairpin, a shell from the Miami River, and a blue velvet girdle. You will find enclosed eleven cents for the fountain, one cent for each year. I belong to the L. T. L., and would like to join your Cozy Corner.

Lyons, Ind. GERTIE D. STEVENS.

What a nice birthday, Gertie, and how thoughtful of you to remember the Willard fountain! Miss Gordon has just returned to this country and will arrange for the presentation of the fountain to the city of Chicago.

SCRIPTURE ACROSTIC.

It takes ten dimes to make a dollar, and it takes just ten letters represented by the first letter of each of the following Scripture references to form an acrostic on a certain name: Psa. 42: 1; Isa. 8: 7; Matt. 5: 15; John 4: 12; Gen. 24: 43, last clause; Jer. 8: 1; Prov. 14: 34; James 3: 11; Eccl. 12: 6; John 4: 6. Whose name can I cover with my ten dimes? Then there is something to be built and its name contains just eight letters which can be found in the first letters of the following references: Psa. 36: 9; Psa. 108: 1; Prov. 8: 4; Jude 24; Prov. 13: 14; Rev. 7: 17; Zech. 13: 1; Lev. 11: 36. For He is our peace, who made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us.—Eph. 2: 14.

CLOSING SCENE OF THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

A novel and unparalleled spectacle was that which it was our privilege to witness at the Memorial Art Palace, in the World's Fair City, last week, on the last evening of the Parliament of Religions, September 27. For seventeen days Columbus Hall had been thronged with appreciative listeners and earnest speakers, whose lips moved in unison with the words of the universal prayer, and whose hearts were turned towards the common and frequently expressed thought, "The fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man."

When these representatives of diverse creeds and sects, of varied doctrines and denominations, gathered in a body upon the platform for the closing exercises of the notable congress, we, who had been in attendance at the gatherings of the two weeks and a half, and heard their utterances, could not but feel that in truth a new era of fraternity had dawned for man. Along the front of the broad platform were ranged the foreign visitors, their brilliant and varied robes gleaming against the dark background of the American clergy's plain attire. The Japanese Hindoos and Buddhists, observant and motionless; the self-possessed young Christian African prince; the courtly Russian Catholic prince; the picturesque Ceylonese Buddhist priest; the Chinese imperial representative of Confucianism; the Shintu priest with odd headdress; the Armenian; the Catholic rector; the Jewish rabbi; the negro bishop; the English evangelist; the Christian woman preacher, the Oriental Brahman; all these were there sitting with rapt attention, and a unanimous desire for unity and coöperation seemed to pervade the extraordinary occasion.

The walls of the hall resounded first with Handel's glorious chorus, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates! and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory will come in." This was rendered by Chicago's finest musical society, the Apollo Club, under the gifted leadership of Mr. W. L. Tomlins. Silent prayer concluding with the Lord's Prayer followed. Again the great chorus sang, rendering "Lead, kindly Light," and the introductory exercises were over.

Judge Bonney, who is at the head of the general congresses, opened the meeting and gave way for Dr. Barrows, the president of the parliament, who proceeded in a characteristically happy way to introduce the foreign representatives; for instance, in presenting the first speaker, Dr. Momerie of England, Dr. Barrows hoped that "when Dr. Momerie stands next on London bridge, he will think of Chicago and this great parliament, 'though lost to sight, to Momerie dear.'" Dr. Momerie expressed his gratitude to Dr. Barrows, to the American people and to Chicago, remarking that while the Columbian Exposition was greater than all previous expositions put together, the parliament of religions was the greatest event of the Exposition. He said that Chicago is destined to be the leading city of the world, and that she had witnessed the hitherto impossible in this parliament.

Mr. Mozoomdar, of India, who has been one of the leading lights of the parliament, said that the charge of materialism in the new world was forever refuted by this great religious gathering, and that the unity of purpose exhibited had demonstrated that different faiths can form one congregation, one household, when animated by one common spirit—the Spirit of God. When that unity is accomplished, the kingdom of God is come on earth. He had come 13,000 miles to realize the dream of his life—the harmony of religions, and he rejoiced that once for all nations had called each other brothers and that His will had been done.

Prince Wolkowsky, of Russia, asked that the good feelings expressed for himself might react upon his countrymen, and frankly declared that although "Russia thinks all Americans are angels and America thinks all Russians are brutes," when both come together they are mutually disappointed.

Kinza Ringe Hirai spoke for the several representatives of the Japanese faiths who could not use English sufficiently well to address the audience. Pung Quang Yu, secretary of the Chinese legation and representative of his government to the parliament, stood by the side of Dr. Barrows as the latter read his eloquent and feeling address. He said that this was the pleasantest experience of his seven years' residence in America, and begged that his countrymen have the same courteous treatment that he had received. He expressed his sincere hope that no national differences should alienate his government from ours, and at that juncture, Dr. Barrows, ever ready to clinch a point, asked the audience that if it desired "the infamous Geary law to be knocked into smithereens," to rise. The audience quickly rose and burst into applause.

The Shintu priest, Right Rev. Shibata of Japan, was glad that his ideas of fraternity, humanity and universal brotherhood had been so well received, and declared that America was nearer to Japan than ever.

George I. Candlin, an English missionary, paid a fine tribute to the parliament. He said: "As a missionary I anticipate that it will make a new era of missionary enterprise and missionary hope. If it does not it will not be your fault and let those take the blame who make it otherwise. Very sure I am that at least one missionary who counts himself the humblest member of this noble assembly will carry through every day of work, through every hour of effort on till the sun of life sets on the completion of his task, the strengthening memory and uplifting inspiration of this Pentecost."

The white-robed priest from Ceylon, called "the gentle Dharmapala," gave this good advice: "Learn to think without prejudice, love all beings for love's sake, express your convictions fearlessly, lead a life of purity and the sunlight of truth will illuminate you. If theology and dogma stand in your way in the search of truth put them aside. Be earnest and work out your own salvation with diligence; and the fruits of holiness will be yours."

The Hindu monk, Suami Vivekanauda, spoke most feelingly, especially when he declared: "The Christian is not to become a Hindu or a Buddhist, nor a Hindu or a Buddhist to become a Christian. But each must assimilate the others, and yet preserve its individuality and grow according to its own law of growth. If the Parliament of Religions has shown anything to the world it is this, that it has proved to the world that holiness, purity and charity are not the exclusive possessions of any church in the world and that every system has produced men and women of the most exalted character."

The Prince of Africa spoke eloquently, from the view of a Christian ruler.

The first half of the program was completed at this point, by the exquisite rendering of the majestic Hallelujah chorus, and Dr. Barrows introduced Mr. Bonney who proceeded to present the American speakers who were to respond to the foreign delegates' cordial words of appreciation. Mr. Bonney was warmly applauded, as Dr. Barrows attributed to him a large measure of the success of the parliament, and replied: "Not unto me, but unto the God who inspired this movement and has guided and aided it by His blessing, and the multitude of the best men and women in the world, under the leadership of Dr. Barrows in this majestic work, is due its triumphant success."

Rev. George Dana Boardman's address was brief and effective: "Fathers of the contemplative East; sons of the executive West, behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. The New Jerusalem, the city of God, is descending. Heaven, the phone; earth, the anti-phone, chanting the eternal 'Hallelujah chorus.'"

Rabbi Hirsh characterized the parliament as "A gateway to higher, broader and better life. Let me bid you go toward peace, the peace which is not yet, which we are to bring to men and which will come to the end of days when no longer through a blurred glass, but like Moses, through a translucent mirror we behold in His majesty the God who is our common Father."

Rev. Frank Bristol well said that "tolerance was not compromise, but the measure of the strength of our faith and conviction."

Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, secretary of the parliament, proposed that the next great parliament of religions be held in Benares, India, on the banks of the Ganges, and that Dr. Barrows be chairman of the American committee.

Three women then addressed the audience, Mrs. Charles Henrotin, Rev. Augusta Chapin and Julia Ward Howe. Sixteen women have taken part in the parliament, and two hundred and twenty-eight have acted on the various committees. Both "halves of humanity" have at last stood on one platform, and spoken of the deep things of life.

Bishop Arnett of the African Methodist church, said that "brother" never meant so much to him before. A new commonwealth had been created, the "Commonwealth of Humanity."

Bishop Keane, rector of the Catholic university at Washington, delivered a wonderfully strong and tolerant address in which he expressed the hope that this meeting would result in the unification of the world in religion.

The two closing addresses were by Dr. Barrows and Mr. Bonney and we regret that our space will not print them in full. Dr. Barrows' closing sentence should surely set at rest the fear that the religion of Christ has been ignored or belittled in this parliament. Here is the sentence: "As Sir Joshua Reynolds closed his lectures on 'The Art of Painting' with the name of Michael Angelo, so, with a deeper reverence, I desire that the last words which I speak to this parliament shall be the name of Him to whom I owe life and truth and hope and all things, who reconciles all contradictions, pacifies all antagonisms, and who from the throne of His heavenly kingdom directs the serene and unwearied omnipotence of redeeming love—Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the world."

OUR CONVENTIONS.

The convention is the concomitant of organization, and as such is necessarily a distinctive feature of our modern civilization. Whatever may be the line of effort, political, philanthropic, religious—the convention plays an important part in building up and fostering that spirit of unity and coöperation without which organized work lacks vital power and effectiveness.

The benefits to be derived from the periodical coming together of persons having the same aims and purposes, the advantages of the meeting face to face of the leaders of any reform movement, are seen at a glance; and the practical results of convention gatherings are, as will be admitted by all who have had experience in associated work, of a character in the highest degree encouraging and invigorating to the work and the workers.

Our own organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, owes much of its present strength to its system of convention work. Every such assembly furnishes additional momentum to the rolling car of progress. First, we have the county convention, the importance of which, we think, should be emphasized more than it is by our local workers. We have found it advisable (taking our own experience in local work as a guide) to hold a county meeting of unions once every three months. We have in mind a certain district in a western state, nearly every county of which held a convention of one day's session quarterly, the district convention itself meeting semi-annually. As a result of these frequent gatherings enthusiasm was kept up to a desirable level even to the smallest and remotest union, and the educatory influence in both town and country was very marked. Every local society was well represented in both county and district conventions, and at the annual state convention this district went up with a full delegation as the banner district of the state. The county convention creates an interest in the district meeting, the district in the state, and the state convention in the great assemblies of the National and World's W. C. T. U.

We would suggest en passant that in large cities where there is more than one local union that the unions meet together, say once a month, and thus come in closer touch with each other and with the different lines of work in their locality.

While it is true that where two or three are gathered together in the name of Christ, He is in their midst to bless their efforts and make them a power for good, still no one denies the inspiration to be found in numbers. There is a mighty power in the concentration of purpose in united movement for the accomplishment of that purpose, and in just that touch of hands and hearts which we get in our conventions. The little local union out on the prairies, often struggling with discouraging surroundings, and seeing as the months go by very little fruit as the result of its labors, is apt to think it does not count for much in the great conflict of home against the saloon.

But let it send its delegates—or even its delegate—to the county, district or perhaps the state convention, and it begins to realize that it is a part of a great whole, part of a wonderful force, which like a mighty lever is lifting the world to the standard of Christian temperance. And how filled with inspiration and enthusiasm do those become who are privileged to attend these meetings! Whoever heard of a delegate returning from a W. C. T. U. convention discouraged or apathetic? Is it not the universal testimony that they return with renewed zeal, with renewed determination to do and to dare for the sacred cause in which they have enlisted?

By a natural law this earnestness and enthusiasm is communicated to other workers—in fact all who come in contact with a white-ribboner fresh from one of our great conventions, catches in more or less degree the W. C. T. U. spirit—and the consequence is that the local union becomes conscious of a practical uplift, in vulgar parlance a "boom." Despite the discouragements of "hard times" (we might say by very reason of them) every local union should this year make special effort to send a full representation to the state convention; every state should send its full quota of delegates to the National and World's Conventions. These are times when more than ever before the cause of humanity is calling loudly for help, and the hour is ripe for any work, any method, which looks toward the improvement of conditions. Woman's hand, and woman's heart and woman's brain are especially needed in this crucial period of our nation's—of the world's—history. The W. C. T. U., with its forty-two arms reaching out to help and to save is destined, by reason of its inclusive nature, its methods of organization, and most of all by reason of the home and mother element it brings to the work, to be no insignificant factor in the evolution of the Christian social ideal, which, said Prof. Peabody in the religious congress, was the highest dream of the master.

All thinking W. C. T. U. women will realize the profound importance of the approaching World's and National conventions. Held as they are to be in the city where are gathered representatives of every civilized nation of the earth; following as they do the wonderful congresses which have already made historic the memorial Art Palace on the shore of Lake Michigan; and especially coming as they do while the resonant tones of the religious congress are still hovering in lingering cadence over halls and corridors, these white-ribbon assemblies are fraught with graver responsibilities and with deeper meaning than ever before in the history of the organization. The occasion furnishes an opportunity the like of which we have never before seen, the like of which we shall in all probability never see again. The surroundings are of themselves an inspiration, and every W. C. T. U. sister should consider it her bounden duty to seize this unparalleled opportunity and make the most of it.

We expect to have many wonderful National and World's Conventions in the years to come, but certainly none will ever again have the same wonderful setting. Only in this Columbian year will it be possible for this generation to take in two great Conventions and a World's Fair at the same time. So we say to every W and to every Y, come yourself and bring your non-union friends to receive and help spread the pentecostal fire of the conventions, and the very liberal and practical education of the Exposition.

THE OUTCOME OF A NOBLE WORK.

As the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL already know, when Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell were in India in the winter of 1891–92, at the request of Mrs. Josephine Butler, superintendent of social purity in the World's W. C. T. U., they made investigation into the treatment of native women by the British soldiers of India, and reported their investigations to the British Committee for the Abolition of State Regulated Vice. This British committee, made up of ministers and men and women philanthropists, including Mrs. Butler and Lady Henry Somerset, numbers many gentlemen of great political influence. Upon receipt of the evidence sent to England by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, these political members of the British committee, led by the Rt. Hon. James Stansfeld, brought the matter to the attention of Lord Kimberley, Secretary of State, and after considerable difficulty, secured the appointment of what is known in England as a "Departmental Committee," with Sir George Russell, under secretary for India, as chairman; Mr. Stansfeld, Mr. H. J. Wilson, Sir James Piele and Sir Donald Stewart were the other members of this important committee. Sir Donald Stewart was commander-in-chief of the Indian army before Lord Roberts. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell returned to England from Australia to give their evidence before this departmental committee, which had its first sitting last April. From that time until the latter part of August, when they sailed for America, these two noble women have been engaged in very arduous labors in England in behalf of the poor oppressed women of India. They were able, when in England, to produce such overwhelming proof of their statements, that no one attempts to deny their accuracy at the present time.

Lord Roberts has been commander-in-chief of the Indian Army up to a very recent date. His term of service ended about the time that Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell returned to England from Australia, and he reached England a few months after they did. When he arrived in England last May, he was met immediately by a representative of the Christian Commonwealth and interrogated as to the truth of the charges made by our white-ribbon missionaries. Lord Roberts promptly denied the charges and characterized them as "rubbish," "absurd" and "false."

He has insisted that he favored enforcement of the resolution of the House of Commons which forbids state regulated vice, although he thinks said resolution detrimental to the health of his soldiers. Lord Roberts, himself, was called before the departmental committee last August to give evidence, and it was there for the first that he learned the full strength of the evidence Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell had presented to that commtitee, in consequence of which he wrote a letter apologizing to them for having denied their statements, with the request that it be printed along with the evidence when all became public.

The following is an extract from the Westminster Gazette (London) of September 13, 1893:

The charges brought against the Indian authorities by the two American ladies, Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell (delegates of the British Committee for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice), appear to have been amply substantiated, and the committee reports that the resolution of the House of Commons on the subject has been defied. This is admitted in the following letter:

DUNBAR, SCOTLAND, August 11.

Having read the report of Mr. Ibbetson's committee in regard to the working of the rules dealing with the abolition of lock hospitals, etc., in cantonments in India, and also the reports of the officers commanding the seven stations which the committee did not visit, I frankly admit that the statements of the two American missionary ladies, who made a tour through Upper India in the cold weather of 1891-92, for the purposes of inquiry into the matter, are in the main correct. I hoped and believed that the orders issued to give effect to the resolution of the House of Commons had been everywhere obeyed. In some stations the rules have been strictly enforced, but in others it now turns out this has not been completely the case. I deeply regret this, and I feel that an apology is due from me to the ladies concerned. This apology I offer unreservedly.

In doing so, I would remark that I think it would have been better if the missionary ladies had been commended to the care of the authorities in India. We could have assisted them to carry out the work on which they were engaged; omissions and shortcomings would have been remedied at the time; a great deal of unpleasantness would have been avoided; the ladies themselves would have found their task considerably lightened; and there would have been less chance of their drawing wrong deductions from some of the circumstances which came under their notice. ROBERTS.

Lord Roberts' apology is frank and conclusive. But we cannot refrain from calling attention to the naiveté of the remark that "it would have been better if the missionary ladies had been commended to the care of the authorities in India." When even the commander-in-chief was kept in the dark, how much would the American ladies have found out if they had been "commended to the care of the authorities"?

Although Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell had seen this letter of apology from Lord Roberts previous to their leaving England, they were not at liberty to talk of the matter until the report of the departmental committee to Parliament had been made. The matter has just come to the public in England, and Lord Roberts' letter of apology is the subject of wide-spread comment. The purity workers feel that they have gained a wonderful victory through the efforts of our two world missionaries, who were far too wise to put their heads into the wolf's mouth. If the subordinates, who have done their utmost to keep alive the system of degradation in India, have been cunning enough to deceive Lord Roberts so that he did not dream the system was still operative, and declared that the statements of our white-ribboners were "absolutely untrue," how much opportunity would they have had to look into the true inwardness of the abominable situation if they had gone to those very officers for protection? We regret that in sending out this apology it was not stated that Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell went to India by the request of Miss Willard, authorized by the general officers of the World's W. C. T. U., and that they went as round-the-world missionaries of our society.

That was a happy saying of a Chicago journalist that "Miss Susan B. Anthony's glasses have a more genial twinkle to them than most people's eyes."

Twenty-five years ago women writers were excluded from the Charles Dickens banquet in New York City by the press club. These women were individually indignant, and there the matter would have ended had they not had the wit to organize themselves into what has become the greatest, as it was the first, notable literary society of women in the New World, the famous Sorosis.

If Lord Chesterfield were alive to-day he could not utter more ringing truths against the licensing of intoxicating drinks than he did in 1743—one hundred and fifty years ago—in the British Parliament. He said: "Luxury is to be taxed, but vice prohibited. Drunkenness is universally and in all circumstances an evil, and therefore ought not to be taxed, but punished. I never heard that a law against theft was repealed because thieves were numerous."

A friend who says, "Everything depends upon the W. C. T. U. nowadays," suggests that a petition be started for the purpose of improving the character of the reading books in our public schools. While many of the selections in the average reader are good and teach some moral truth, there is no reason why every selection should not be made with reference to some desirable virtue—something practically useful in the life of the child, such as self-denial, honesty, love, how to care for the body and how to overcome temptation. While we do not think a petition necessary or effective for this, we do emphasize our friend's wish for improvement, and urge upon parents to examine their children's readers and discuss the question with their school directors and teachers.

The rapidity with which women are entering into all lines of work heretofore closed to them may be appreciated by noting the number of items in the papers concerning this or that woman who is the "first" to do something, to receive some degree or fill some position. The last case is that of Miss Bertha Lamme, who, according to a contemporary, is the first woman to receive the degree of electrical engineer. The degree was recently bestowed upon her by the Ohio State University, where she has stood uniformly at the head of her class. The Westinghouse Electric Company offered her a position in Pittsburgh, which she has accepted.

American children are showing their precocity by taking out profitable patents. A boy of six has recently obtained from the United States the exclusive right in a sounding toy. A girl of eleven has invented an ingenious game for her invalid brother, and got a patent for it, and a boy of twelve has just patented a rowing apparatus.

Every one knows that the ideas of etiquette are unusually severe in the Dutch court, so that the dignity "that doth hedge the king" becomes a close set hedge. This is especially annoying to a joyous little spirit like Queen Wilhelmina, who has but just reached thirteen years of age, and of whom a journalist tells us this plaintive little incident: Once when occupied with her doll, the little princess was overheard scolding the little protégé for being naughty. She said: "If you do not behave better, I will turn you into a queen, and then you will have no playmates, but you will be forced to blow kisses with your hands to the public whenever you go out in your carriage."

A French writer makes a good point in the following words: "When modern society has thoroughly convinced a woman by means of novel reading, attendance at the theater and opera and fashionable conversation, that there is here below no happiness for her except in love, then this same society calls upon her through the offices of a gentleman wearing official robes to sacrifice this unique possible happiness to some man who has amused himself as he pleased for a dozen years, simply for the reason that he has a heavy purse or high position, so that whatever she may get out of marriage, the young woman fails to get love." Perhaps the best outcome of the progressive movement among women is that it will so fortify this poor, unfortunate young woman of the nineteenth century by putting an honorable bread-winning weapon into her hand and giving her a more practical outlook upon life that she will not marry until a strong and well seasoned tie of the heart becomes the only basis of such an alliance on her part. ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

MOTTO: "For God and Home and Every Land."

OBJECT: To unify the methods of woman's temperance work the world over.

BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.

HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.

METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.

DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed in fifty languages. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

THE INDIA UNION.

In glancing over Miss Willard's last annual address, just received, I make a discovery. I supposed myself first in the field with the idea of a union of scattered members—the "India Union," as I had seen no notice of any such thing. We have already thirty-two memberships accompanied by such letters of thankfulness for the privilege of being connected with the work with earnest prayers and heartiest sympathy for the W. C. T. U.

Many ask that letters and pledges should be sent to such or such a relative or friend who might like to join. One woman sent her membership fee for five years! Letters are coming to me daily about this "union." I have been thinking what a pleasure it would be to report to you the eagerness with which the idea has been accepted, but am glad to find that two older unions of this kind, one in England, and the Somerset W. C. T. U., have already given you the same pleasure, and drawn within the loving circle of the W. C. T. U. many earnest hearts who are debarred from active participation in concerted work.

It is the exception to find an Eurasian family that has not been bitterly cursed by drink, if not in the immediate circle, yet among near relatives. There is little drunkenness seen on the street for here particularly, "they that be drunken are drunken in the night."

In the English community "doctors' orders" are making hundreds of drunkards. An English woman lying in a hospital superintended by an English doctor, was given so much wine to restore her strength that she said: "I came to this hospital a Christian, I shall go out a drunkard." A few days ago I was saying to one of the "society set," that within a short time I had come across the names of ten living English lady drunkards in India, to which she replied: "That's very little; you have not learned much if those are all you know."

Cannot some, one or more, be found who will supply to these doctors a work whose authority from a medical standpoint they will respect, and so set to work an influence that shall cut at the very root of much of this evil?

To show you how this W. C. T. U. work is the handmaid of the gospel I may say that a union was formed in May among a little settlement of European and Eurasian railway employés. Before that no religious services were held in the place; since there are regular Sabbath services conducted by one of their number, and our beloved evangelist, Miss Phebe Rowe, has been invited to hold meetings among them.

A lady who has spent thirty years in India told me that the coolie women give liquor to their little children. A clergyman in Darjeeling said that of about four hundred English and Scotch tea planters in those hills, not more than four are strictly temperance and the majority of them keep "coolie rum" to furnish as a treat to their people on particular occasions. There are from one thousand to three thousand coolies on a single plantation. I wish to have some temperance tracts published in the native dialects to place in the plantation schools and also for distribution to such as can read. Our first great need is money to create a simple temperance literature and pledges in Urdu or Bengali, and Hindustani (the language of 100,000,000 people) for distribution in the zenanas.

As there are particular temptations for native Christians to drink I wish to organize unions in the girls' boarding schools that they may be trained temperance workers in the homes to which they will go. It will be best to call such unions Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, as the girls must be married in most cases immediately after they leave school, and very few of them know anything of young womanhood here.

SOUTH AFRICA.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, VERULAM, NATAL.

At the fourth annual convention of the Natal W. C. T. U. at Verulam, June 20-22, there were present representatives from Durban, Maritzburg and Verulam Unions, and of the Young Woman's Unions of Maritzburg, Durban, Sydenham and Verulam. The attendance at the business meetings was from thirty to forty members while the evening meetings were well attended by the public.

The convention was called to order by Miss Alice Palmer, colonial organizer, who, after the opening prayer, gave an encouraging Bible reading from Isa. 58. Committees upon credentials, resolutions, finance, courtesies and press were appointed. In the afternoon Miss Palmer presided over a Y conference during which methods of work were discussed and an enjoyable hour was passed. A telegram conveying good wishes from Miss Anna Cummings, Y secretary for South Africa, was read.

At the evening public meeting, which was presided over by Rev. S. Clark, addresses of welcome were delivered by Miss Janes, president of the local union, and Mr. T. W. Garland. These were responded to by Mrs. Perry, secretary and treasurer of Maritzburg W. C. T. U. Tea was served after which Mrs. Bridgman, colonial president, delivered her annual address. Musical numbers were rendered and the meeting closed with the doxology.

Mrs. Bridgman conducted the devotional exercises on the second day after which reports were heard by the colonial treasurer, the superintendent of evangelistic work and of scientific temperance instruction. Miss Palmer gave a helpful Bible reading at the noon hour. In the afternoon, press, literature, work for soldiers, medal contests, jail and prison work reports were read and a question box was conducted by Miss Palmer who also addressed the evening meeting.

Thursday morning was occupied by committee and business meetings and the election of officers for the new year occurred in the afternoon. Mrs. Fernie became president; Mrs. Bridgman, vice president; Mrs. Churchill, corresponding secretary; Miss Scott, recording secretary, and Mrs. Garland, treasurer. Resolutions were adopted and the business meetings were closed.

The evening meeting was conducted by the Y's led by Miss Palmer and a very profitable entertainment of music and recitations was given.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

REPORT OF SOCIAL PURITY DEPARTMENT.

Reviewing the world's work during the past year we find advances have been made in the efforts to raise Christ's standard of purity and temperance. At the World's Convention held at Boston in November, 1891, when framing the preamble to their constitution, England's strong purity women, with America's strong temperance women, succeeded in beautifully interweaving and interlacing the standard to be uplifted by women. It runs thus:

"In the love of God and humanity, we, representing the Christian women of our world, band ourselves together with the solemn conviction that our united faith and works will, with God's blessing, prove healthful in creating a strong public sentiment in favor of personal purity of life, including total abstinence from the use of all narcotic poisons, the protection of the home by outlawing the traffic in alcoholic liquors, opium, tobacco and impurity, the suppression by law of gambling and Sunday desecration, the enfranchisement of the women of all nations, and the establishment of courts of national and international arbitration, which shall banish war from the world."

The South Australian constitution prepared in 1889, appears to have been the first to introduce purity into its preamble. New South Wales adopted it also in 1890; the Australasian W. C. T. U. following in May, 1891. Largely through the determined stand taken by the Victorian W. C. T. U. this year against the delay in the Victorian legislature to give their children better protection, and the pressure brought to bear, their "Criminal Law Amendment Bill" became law. That influence has been felt in New South Wales, Queensland, West Australia, where they ask that youthful ignorance and helplessness be thus protected.

The law given to the millions of children and child-wives in India last year, raising the age from seven to twelve years, has worked with some measure of success, though the need for improved laws and purity work there has lately been shown to readers of the Bombay Guardian, Banner of Asia, etc., in the revelations made respecting the "Slave Traffic in Women and Girls," carried on by their inhuman traffickers. These wronged and oppressed slaves are secured from Germany, Italy, Russia, Austria, Spain, Roumania, Japan, a traffic extending to all the principal British ports on the coast line between Bombay and Shanghai, including Colombo, Singapore and Hongkong. This slave traffic is so enormous, purity workers are asking that the Viceroy of India in council may enact a law for the whole of the British Indian Empire, upon the lines of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of England, that these helpless slaves may be protected to sixteen years. It is to India, too, the Sentinel says, "That ten thousand young English boys and men are sent away every year as fresh recruits for the British army. After five years' education in British governmental vice, which is the sacrificing of women to pander to the lusts of bestial men, they return to England at the rate of six thousand per year, and are scattered abroad amongst all the workshops, factories, counting-houses of England, spreading the debased morality in which they have been trained by our representatives in India." We ask, can that work of demoralization be confined to India and England? Unfortunately our continent does and will suffer immensely. A great blow will be struck at vice—when we shall secure such a clause as that inserted a few weeks since into the Glasgow Police Bill by the House of Commons. It provides for the equal punishment of men and women, who, found on the premises proved to be a "disorderly house," will be liable to a fine of five pounds.

South Australia has benefited largely by the visit of Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, World's purity evangelist, and lovingly upheld by her fellow-laborer, Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, they have bravely faced sneers and opprobrium as they go on, uplifting the purity of the nations they pass through.

Our unions report a more than steady increase (from 6 to 14) in the election of superintendents to this department. In these and all elections, we are convinced that as each upholds the other by name and prayer, we shall become a mighty power throughout our colony; and have asked that short, effective readings and addresses, with sacred prayerful discussion, be given regularly by them, to educate; while ministers, laymen, and laywomen, with hearts and tongues touched with fire, shall surely not hesitate to speak burning words to hearts and hearers, while giving this side of Christ's gospel to the people.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

The Brisbane, Queensland, Y's, have just had a "newsboys' social."

Mrs. Ferguson, Colonial superintendent of the Victoria, Australia, Y Branch, has been very ill.

The King's Daughters and Sons, of Rondell, South Dakota, have just sent eighty-four names for the World's Petition.

Fifty-two wall-pocket boxes containing temperance and religious literature, have been placed at railway stations in Lucknow and at the dâk bungalows, in Kumaon, by the Lucknow W. C. T. U.

The World's Petition is receiving many new additions by the names of visitors at the W. C. T. U. booth in the World's Fair.

Through the influence of Y workers, temperance committees have been formed in connection with Christian Endeavor societies in South Australia.

Mrs. Margaret G. Ure, 772 Palace St., Montreal, Quebec, has been appointed Dominion reporter to THE UNION SIGNAL by the Dominion W. C. T. U. executive committee.

Sydney, New South Wales, has an enthusiastic Y union of forty members newly organized. At an afternoon meeting, Mme. Antoinette Stirling gave them a most helpful address.

A Loyal Temperance Legion of nine members was organized by Miss Anna Gordon among the pupils of the American Institute for Girls at San Sebastian, Spain, during her recent visit.

Reports from ten different countries in which the Young Woman's Branch is found, with illustrations and much valuable reading matter on the World's work, comprise the contents of the Oak and Ivy Leaf for October, which is a World's number.

Madame Antoinette Stirling, the British white-ribbon prima donna, has just met with a great bereavement during her trip in the Australian Colonies, in the death of her husband. White-ribboners the world around will tender their heartfelt sympathy to this stalwart and consecrated singer.

Miss Alys Pearsall Smith, daughter of Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, of London, has accepted the superintendency of the British Y Branch. She will attend the World's and National Conventions in Chicago, comparing notes of progress and exchanging ideas with the American Y sisterhood.

Representatives of the new Spanish W. C. T. U. at Madrid are expected to be present at the World's Convention. This union was formed through the efforts of Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, World's W. C. T. U. vice-president for Spain, and though few in number, promises great things for the future.

A branch of the World's W. C. T. U. was formed by the Dutch ladies at The Hague during the Temperance Congress which met there in August. Mme. M. W. de Ranitz, of Groninque, was made president; Miss Hartsen, The Hague, vice-president, and Mme. Van Herwaarden, The Hague, secretary. About thirty ladies were present at this organization of the Holland W. C. T. U.

The Y's have added Turkey to the list of countries in which the Y Branch spreads its growing foliage. Miss Mary A. Massaouti, a native Christian worker, of Smyrna, has been made general secretary of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Turkey, the nucleus of which is the girls' temperance union. This society was organized by Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, in 1889, with ten members, and numbers now fifty-two. They have sent a contribution of money to the World's Fair Y souvenir fund.

MINNESOTA.

THE YEAR'S HARVEST.

September 12, 1893, was a day the women of Minnesota W. C. T. U. had long looked forward to with special interest, for it was the beginning of the seventeenth annual state convention of that body. And they came from all over the commonwealth, down from the vast territory of the northern districts where are countries large enough, as Mrs. Hobart said, to make an empire; up from the lovely hills and vales of the southern portion of the state; and from the west, clear across the state, coming, coming, to St. Paul, our capital city, lying on the bluffs that rise above the Mississippi. They were not a fashionable class, these women gathering here, but the fashion of their countenances was that of earnest motherliness, as if they would carry all humanity on their hearts as mothers carry their children there.

The first session was opened by Mrs. Hobart; Mrs. L. W. Irvine, of St. Paul, led the devotional hour, after which committees were appointed. Mrs. Slate, recently of New York, was introduced as our musical leader. Mrs. Slate very soon won her way with the women, and her appointment later as state organizer met with general approval. The gift of song she enjoys will aid her greatly in the work of organization. Mrs. Emily Merritt, the new president of the sixteenth district, was also introduced, and though she was a stranger, one somehow felt, looking into her sweet face with its bright eyes, as if somewhere, sometime we had known her very well, and mentally resolved that if we had not in the past, we would in the future. Mrs. E. L Condit, recording secretary for the last four years, being absent, Mrs. E. H. Chase, editor of our White Ribboner, was appointed to the position pro tem. Miss Cramsie, of St. Paul, representing the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, was introduced and heartily received.

The afternoon session was taken up in part by three minute reports from the state superintendents of departments. Mrs. Hobart had sent out a request to these women that they tell, briefly, how their respective departments are related to prohibition, and why each is the best.

The evening session was devoted to the address of welcome and response, and a series of speeches on woman's sphere, participated in by Mesdames Julia B. Nelson, J. A. Clifford and Miss Edith Edison. Mrs. Clifford's subject was women in the church, and was handled wittily and energetically. Mrs. Nelson followed, taking for her subject women in the home and state, closing her remarks with a quotation from Thos. Jefferson, "The art of politics is to be honest." Miss Edison expressed her opinion of woman's rights forcibly and logically, demonstrating as the St. Paul Daily News said, that "woman's rights always gain in popularity when asked for or defended by youth and beauty."

Wednesday morning, Mrs. Florence Lake conducted a Bible reading on "Prayer," full of helpful thoughts. Mrs. Neal, of Minneapolis, then presented for adoption an amendment to the constitution, doing away with district organization and confining the work to counties. Mrs. Neal was one of the original members of the first union organized in the state and has labored continuously since for the W. C. T. U. and she firmly believes the best interests of the work would be served by such a change. She quoted Miss Willard's approval of the plan as carried out in New York and Pennsylvania, and referred to the growth of the W. C. T. U. in those states.

By request Mrs. Hobart took the floor and spoke at length on district organization and its advantages. She was followed by several of the district presidents, and when the vote was finally taken the motion was lost.

The memorial hour came next. There was an unusually long list of members gone on before, among them Mrs. A. B. Turley, of Minneapolis, a most efficient leader, and Dr. Satterlee, so well known, not only in Minnesota, but also in the South, for his ability and energy.

Wednesday afternoon and evening were devoted to the Y's, their superintendent, Mrs. B. L. Scovell, presiding. Mrs. Irvine, of St. Paul, led the afternoon session with a beautiful Bible reading. Then followed reports from the Y unions throughout the state, papers on "Our Bible Helps and how to use them," "Flower Mission work," "Our Papers and our Duty concerning Them," songs from the Y's own book, and talks from the W. C. T. U. corresponding secretary and treasurer.

Miss Donovan in a paper on "How may we best advance the cause of temperance in our towns," after outlining the work down in her own town, told of their defeats and triumphs. Among the latter was this incident: "At one of our meetings held recently, a prominent business man of town, who six months ago was elected president of the license council, rose and signified his intention of working for the cause of temperance hereafter. Our hearts were full of thankfulness when he said that it was what he had heard at our temperance meetings that caused him to make this decision."

Wednesday evening's principal event was Miss Ackermann's address on "Why the Y's." In Australia they had tried to get the colonial government to pass a bill preventing the employment of girls as barmaids, but it failed to pass, the plea being made that it would throw so many young women out of employment!

Thursday morning's session was opened by a devotional meeting led by Mrs. McCurdy, of Minneapolis. Mrs. Chase gave a report of the state paper, the White Ribboner, appealing to the women of Minnesota W. C. T. U. to aid her in making this paper—our very own—such a paper as it should be. Mrs. Ames, organizer for a part of the past year, gave her report, and stated her reason for leaving the work and the state.

A report from the committee on amendments to the constitution, appointed at the annual meeting a year ago, was then called for and read by the secretary of the committee. But some disagreement among the members of the committee itself led to a motion to have the whole matter indefinitely postponed, which was carried. A paper on L. T. L. work followed, by Mrs. E. S. Wright.

The corresponding secretary's report was full and interesting. Of the new unions formed, twenty are not auxiliary to the state, failing to pay their dues; sixteen are auxiliary. There are in all 258 unions, W. and Y, with a total membership of 3,723; honorary members, 612; state dues, $1,403-.05; money raised by locals for other purposes, $10,631.19; UNION SIGNALS reported, 1,028; White Ribboners, 985; Oak and Ivy Leaf, 136; Young Crusader, 424.

The afternoon session was taken up largely by the reports of the district presidents. Mrs. Hobart called them all together upon the platform and told the convention something of the faithfulness of these, her allies, and then introduced them one by one. The reports were largely statistical, with the exception of Mrs. Merritt's, she being recently appointed to the sixteenth district, which is unorganized for the most part, so there was nothing to report except in one county. But what it lacked in figures her report made up in wit and brightness. The tenth district had met during the state convention and elected Mrs. Irvine, of St. Paul, their president, so that she was the very newest, as well as the youngest of them all, and instead of any report, spoke briefly of her hopes for the coming year, "relying solely on the Omnipotent arm."

Thursday evening Miss Ackermann spoke to a crowded house, dressed in the Oriental costume she had worn during her travels in China. Our sisters over the sea will seem the nearer to us because of Jessie Ackermann's efforts in their behalf, while she herself is now a personality to us all, and when we read her bright letters to THE UNION SIGNAL hereafter, we shall have the picture of her earnest face before us.

Thursday morning's session began by a half hour of prayer and song, led by Miss Ella Cook, president of the second district. The election of officers was the principal event of the morning. Mrs. Hobart had intended to resign, feeling that the work was almost beyond her strength, which has been undermined by her own sickness and the care of her husband during his illness. But she had been so repeatedly urged to serve another year, that she announced herself ready to do the best she could if the women wished her to serve. The applause which greeted this announcement must have been gratifying to the woman, who for twelve years has led the W. C. T. U. of Minnesota, in the midst of difficulties and dangers that required an intrepid spirit. The first ballot reëlected her for another year by a very large majority. The secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for Mrs. E. S. Wright as corresponding secretary, because, as Mrs. Newcomb said, in making the motion to that effect, "We would all vote for her anyway." For treasurer, Mrs. C. S. Soulé, of St. Paul, was the choice of the convention, and for recording secretary, Mrs. A. C. McCurdy, of Minneapolis. Mrs. Woodbridge, of Duluth, was elected vice-president at large.

Friday evening, the last of the convention, was devoted to a Demorest silver medal contest, with seven young girls as participants. All did remarkably well, affording no little enjoyment to the large audience, and, let us hope, sending home some arrows of truth to the hearts of the hearers. The medal was awarded to the youngest one of the group, a sweet child of not more than twelve years. Her evident surprise at the announcement, childish delight and pretty embarrassment, were beautiful to see, as well as the friendly interest of the other girls, eagerly examining the medal. Banners were then awarded, the Y's banner going to St. Charles Y's, who had the largest per cent of increase. The local banner went to a union in the first district, while the district banner was awarded district No. 2, which had increased over one hundred per cent. There was a new banner, a beautiful one of white satin, handsomely decorated. This was the one the third district had offered to the district having the largest increase in percentage of subscriptions to the White Ribboner, and, with poetic justice, the third district received it back for the year.

Mrs. Hobart was about to dismiss the audience when Mrs. Irvine stepped upon the platform, and, in a few words, presented to Mrs. Hobart, in the name of Minnesota W. C. T. U., a purse containing substantial evidence of the regard in which Mrs. Hobart is held. A brief response, the dismissal, and the seventeenth annual convention was adjourned sine die.

CONVENTION NOTES.

More suffrage ribbons were worn than ever before.

St. Paul daily papers gave good reports of the convention.

The lunches prepared by the St. Paul unions were excellent. Cake was left entirely out of the menu.

Another speaker urged upon the attention of the convention the county poorhouses, whose inmates often feel shut out from all Christian sympathy and care.

The clergy of the two cities was well represented, and many spoke words of hearty appreciation and cheer and pledged their aid and influence to the W. C. T. U.

Among those introduced to the convention was Rev. Mr. Gjerkstein, of Minneapolis, who made a strong plea for the insane, urging the W. C. T. U. to create a department to look after these unfortunates.

It was a singing convention. Mrs. Slate's leading was animated and her spirit infected others. The Y's, on their afternoon, sang frequently and well. The music furnished in the evenings by a fine quartette was excellent, and the frequent solos were well rendered and enjoyable.

The St. Paul Daily News through its reporter, Miss L. V. Baldwin, offered to the W. C. T. U. of the state the use of a column weekly, or a page if necessary. Miss Baldwin kindly consents to compile a newsy letter or article every week if the unions will but send her their news items. This is a generous offer and every union should instruct its press superintendent to send frequent items. Address Miss L. Virginia Baldwin, St. Paul, Minn.

ILLINOIS.

A FEW JOTTINGS.

My last UNION SIGNAL notes appeared in June, the month of roses and special flower mission work, when from all parts of the state sweet incense was rising from this department of W. C. T. U. work, sweeter than the odors of the flowers that entered hospitals and sick rooms, bringing sympathy and cheer; for the gospel messages to weary and sometimes sinsick souls, brought responsive echoes. Fires were kindled thereby upon altars of living sacrifices as flower mission workers personated hives of busy bees gathering sweets from "every opening flower." The Illinois W. C. T. U. Watch Tower had its flower mission number, which was wreathed with literary floral garlands.

This was the month of teachers' institutes, and from the Watch Tower heights there came fluttering down into these wise convocations, myriads of copies of the scientific temperance instruction number, of which a large issue had been printed for this special purpose. Piatt county W. C. T. U. sent a copy to every teacher in the county. Want of space forbids my rehearsing in detail the appreciation of this help, and its distribution among the teachers of Illinois, as white-ribboners were working in the interest of the nearly eight hundred thousand school children of the state.

The Fourth of July gave special opportunity for patriotic enthusiasm. The Carlinville W. C. T. U. rejoicing in the no-license victory achieved last spring, decided to celebrate, and celebrate it did, notwithstanding county officials refused the use of the court-house park, which has been desecrated for years by political rallies. The president of Blackburn University tendered the use of the beautiful college campus. The large flag given by the W. C. T. U. to the public schools was loaned for this Fourth of July celebration. The Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist pastors each took some part. Dr. Rogers of the university gave a grand address in the morning. Dinner was followed by toasts and responses in which the American eagle soared aloft. Patriotic and temperance songs helped swell the enthusiasm, and this Fourth of July celebration, like several others in the state, was counted a complete success.

Following these were the camp-meetings and Chautauquas, which are never complete without a W. C. T. U. day, and the children's meetings, under the leadership of some earnest W. C. T. U. worker. Mrs. Carlock reports the largest week-day audience at Lithia Springs Encampment, August 19 to 29, as being on W. C. T. U. day. The daily children's meetings there had throngs of parents, as well as boys and girls.

The Rock River Assembly of Lutherans in Dixon generously gave August 1 to the W. C. T. U. An interesting program for that day was the result. An address by Mrs. Carlock, on "The Present Crisis," and one by Mrs. Hoffman, upon "The Problem that Faces Us," were fitted to awaken thought and arouse sluggish consciences.

The annual camp and grove meeting of Lee County W. C. T. U. was held August 12–15, at the beautiful camp-meeting ground of the M. E. church in Franklin Grove. State, district and county presidents were there. There was an excellent program. The Sunday services were impressive, consisting of a Bible reading, children's meeting and one of Mrs. Rounds' soul-stirring addresses on "Character Building" in the morning. In the afternoon Miss Mahon spoke to the young people upon "The Responsibilities of Life." A temperance address by Mrs. Rounds in the evening was pronounced a fitting conclusion to the inspiring exercises of the day.

A helpful W. C. T. U. conference was held at Urbana, August 25, Mrs. Kuhl presiding.

Effingham county had its sixth grand rally of Bands of Hope and other temperance societies on September 2, at Effingham. The street procession and competitive demonstrations were followed by a Demorest gold medal contest. Prizes were also offered for the best essays on alcohol, cider and tobacco, and the largest new Band of Hope or L. T. L., the most Scripture verses recited (not less than two hundred). Various other prizes were offered for good Loyal Temperance Legion work. Miss Wintringer has been a busy worker in L. T. L. work.

Brimfield has held its first gold medal contest, as have also other places.

The Streator union is rejoicing in a temperance revival and "showers of blessings" that came as a result of a ten days' series of meetings in August, that dryest of months.

The Rounds W. C. T. U., in the country, always alive and pushing, entertained the Shelby county convention, not long ago. Parliamentary drills have been quite a specialty in conventions this year.

This is the season of district conventions. Excellent programs are closing the year's work. Reporting is the order of the day, and yet it is a well-established fact that "not half has ever been told"—not half ever reported of W. C. T. U. work. Many unions have been organized. Bloomington reports a new organization, "The Bloomington Central W. C. T. U.," with a large membership.

Some of the Y's of the state have been doing earnest work, and we say "bless the dear girls."

With grateful hearts we call to mind the increased vigor that came to our beloved state president by rest amid northern breezes and are hoping for good tidings from our leader across the sea.

This World's Fair year has been a hard one in which to keep W. C. T. U. columns marching in unbroken lines, for all eyes and ears have been turned Chicago-ward, and W. C. T. U. pocket-books have been depleted by visits to the World's Fair. There has been so little time for reporting in this busy year, that the figures may not show the real advance; but that would not be a true index to the real situation when the world's Mecca is this year on Illinois soil.

Springfield is the place, and October 4, 5, 6 are the dates for our annual feast.

OHIO.

STATE CONVENTION.

The veteran regiment of the peaceful W. C. T. U. army, assembled in twentieth annual state convention, at the historic city of Marietta, August 30, and continued in session until the close of the evening meeting, September 1.

Marietta is the oldest town in the state, and is situated on the Ohio river where it makes one of its most picturesque bends. The streets are unusually wide, and are bordered on either side by beautiful green grass plats and rows of majestic trees, that in grace and beauty rival those of the world-renowned Plymouth of our Puritan fathers. Indeed, the heart of a lover of nature is continually stirred within her by the rare loveliness of this classic town and its surroundings. It is the seat of Marietta College, which, we are glad to record, has this year opened its doors to women. The homes of Marietta are most attractive, and their doors were thrown open to extend to us the most generous hospitality. Our hostesses were untiring in their efforts to make our stay among them pleasant in every particular.

The place of meeting was the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Rev. R. F. Bishop is pastor, and a royal welcome to the church was given us by that good friend, who was never absent from one of our meetings, and never failed to see one opportunity where he could minister to the comfort or convenience of his guests. Surely Rev. R. F. Bishop will go down into the history of the Ohio W. C. T. U. as the perfect model of a kind and thoughtful host.

The convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. Henrietta L. Monroe. The opening prayer was made by Mother Stewart, our Crusade historian, in her impressive manner, which seemed almost to bring down to us again the Crusade fire.

After the roll-call by the recording secretary, Miss Anna M. Pollock, the appointment of committees, the report of the executive committee and joint meetings of the executive committee and superintendents, held the previous day, Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger, gave a very interesting report of the successes of the year. For the first time in its history the paper was able to report money sufficient on hand to pay all of its expenses for the past year, including the editor's salary and office expenses. The convention rose and sang the doxology.

Our president then delivered her annual address, which was indeed a masterly one, showing not only her broad knowledge of the field of W. C. T. U. thought and endeavor, but of the current history of our own day, and almost with prophetic vision she looked into the events of the future. Her address made a profound impression and strengthened the strong cords of reverence and esteem which bind the hearts of her constituency to our able president.

A consecration service of great power was led by Rev. Emily K. Bishop, one of our vice-presidents, who is also vice-president of the woman's board for foreign missions of the American Christian convention. This closed with the noontide prayer.

The afternoon meeting listened to the review of the year's work, by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Antoinette H. Clevenger. The number of reports received from locals was smaller than usual, owing to the Columbian diversions, but the year's record is one of earnest and undiminished effort for the advance of our cause, and shows clearly that our forces have gone forward and not backward; that they are looking to Christ as our leader and pushing forward the battle. The increase in the number of unions and members is not so great as is usual, but we rejoice that in this difficult year we have increased at all.

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. Estelle J. Purdum, showed our membership to be above ten thousand, although our year is six weeks shorter than usual, and consequently not all the returns in.

Mrs. R. J. Trego conducted a thank-offering service, giving in the most forcible way the Bible's teaching in this regard. The collection was a generous one. Reports of infirmary work and the literature department were given.

The evening meetings were held in the spacious opera house, which was filled in every part. Mrs. Abigail J. Hadley led the devotional exercises. Rev. John W. Simpson, D. D., president of Marietta College, gave us a welcome in behalf of the college and city, Rev. R. F. Bishop, in behalf of the ministerial association, Miss Belle O. Brown, in behalf of the Marietta W. C. T. U. Responses were given by Mrs. M. G. Townsend, of Holgate, and Miss Frances H. Ensign, state superintendent of the Y Branch. All were exceptionally fine. The address of the evening, which was our annual address, was given by Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, of Springfield, and was highly appreciated.

On Thursday morning the devotional exercises were conducted by our beloved Crusade leader, Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, of Hillsboro, who was unable to reach the convention until the previous evening. This was a memorable occasion and enjoyed by all. Several prominent Crusaders were then introduced and spoke briefly. Mrs. Gregg, of Steubenville, whose mother, Mrs. Sterling, had led out seven hundred Crusaders in that city, was also presented.

Rev. Howard H. Russell, of Elyria, was given one-half hour to present the Anti-Liquor League, a new organization of temperance men in northern Ohio. The convention did not indorse the movement but wished them success in their efforts to overthrow the liquor traffic and invited them to come and work with us.

Social purity, evangelistic work and Bible readings, legislative work, Sabbath observance and mercy, were presented. Two minute speeches from our vice-presidents were a new and pleasing feature. Mrs. H. E. Hammond gave an excellent Bible reading, taking for her subject the Lord's prayer.

On Thursday afternoon Miss Charlotte Boyer ably conducted the devotional exercises. Miss Frances H. Ensign gave an interesting report of the Y Branch. The revision of the constitution was taken up, but after proceeding with it for a time, upon motion, the consideration was deferred for two years.

The report of the board of trustees showed the presentation to the state of the Lakeside W. C. T. U. home and chapel, by the Lakeside Building Association. The property is valued at three thousand dollars. A bequest of five hundred dollars had also been received from Mrs. Catharine Vinal, of Toledo.

Thursday evening was Y evening. The city hall was filled with an appreciative audience. The platform was beautifully decorated with nasturtiums. The Y's and honoraries entered in a body and took seats on the platform.

The devotional exercises were led by Miss Ensign. Miss Clara Parrish, of Illinois, National Y organizer, gave the address of the evening. She held the closest attention of her audience as she eloquently plead for a deeper realization upon the part of the young women of their opportunities in philanthropic work.

The state banner was presented to the Zanesville Y's, as they had more than trebled their membership within the year. Mrs. Barnes' picture will be shared by the Toledo Y's and the West Side Y's of Cleveland. Each of these unions has one hundred paid members. The music throughout the evening was excellent.

On Friday morning Miss Margaret J. Peebles led the devotional exercises very acceptably. Mrs. Lilian Cole Bethel, of Columbus, gave a practical parliamentary drill, as she had done on each preceding day.

The reports of the committees on finance and credentials were given, the latter showing one hundred and sixty members present. Work among railroad employes was reported and was followed by the election of officers. In the latter no changes were made and the old officers have taken up again the unbroken thread of their work. After the election a very practical and helpful Bible reading was given by Mrs. R. J. Trego.

On Friday afternoon Miss Florence Savage, of Akron, led the devotional exercises. Miss Savage is a young evangelist of much promise, who will be heard from in future. Having no copy of the plan of work or resolutions committees I can give no summary of those reports. After miscellaneous business, the twentieth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state of Ohio was formally adjourned.

Friday evening's meeting was the crowning feature of the convention. Dr. Anna H. Shaw gave her lecture on the "Fate of Republics" to a vast audience, that was charmed by her wit and stirred by her logic. Dr. Shaw is a great favorite with Marietta people and her address did the cause much good. The music on this occasion as that of every evening meeting was very fine.

This, our twentieth annual gathering, was a success in every particular, harmonious, prompt in the dispatch of business. Indeed, Ohio's president is a presiding officer of whom any deliberative body might be proud. The order throughout the convention was highly commended by representatives of other state unions. Many departments were not reported because of the absence of their superintendents, but all reports will be found in our state minutes.

May the influence of this convention for good to the cause we serve be felt throughout our state.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

INDIANA will hold her first Demorest diamond medal contest at Richmond, October 10. There will be ten contestants. This interesting exercise will occupy the last evening of the state convention.

THE address of Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, corresponding secretary of the Maryland W. C. T. U., will be hereafter 2231 St. Paul St., Baltimore, Md., instead of Mt. Washington, as heretofore. Correspondents will please note the change.

MAJOR AND MRS. SCOTT are speaking in Ontario, Canada, for the plebiscite, which comes before the people in January, 1894. Mrs. D. A. Maxwell, of Essex county, conjointly with resident ministers, make their appointments. They have had large and appreciative audiences. Sunday, September 24, they began a week of meetings at Windsor.

Why is CHOCOLATE not more used in America?

1st. People do not know how to properly prepare it.

2d. Americans are still bound by the inveterate habit of using Tea, Coffee and Cocoa, which create stomachic debilities and are not in the true sense stimulants.

Cocoa and Chocolate ARE NO MORE TO BE COMPARED WITH EACH OTHER THAN Skimmed Milk to Pure Cream.

Two Years for $1.
The regular price of the St. Louis Magazine is $1.50 a year, but in offering it to you at $1 for two years (which is less than cost) we hope to in that time get you so interested in our Monthly that you will continue taking the Magazine always. The loss to us in sending it to you two years for $1 we consider as so much money spent in advertising our Magazine and creating a permanent and enormously increased circulation. Hence if the monthly visits of the St. Louis Magazine to your family for two years are made, we flatter ourselves you will become a permanent subscriber. Rev. Eugenia F. St. John was reappointed by her annual conference to Gordon Place M. P. Church, Kansas City, and her address is 805 Troup Avenue, Kansas City. She will still continue, as in the past, to do some field work for temperance. Her husband, Dr. C. H. St. John, is still presenting strong temperance truths from the lecture platform.

Ulster county, N. Y., convention reelected all its former officers and held a profitable session at Highland, September 13 and 14. It was the largest convention ever held by the county, numbering one hundred and twenty-one delegates. The memorial service was a particularly tender one, as eleven active and five honorary members have "passed on" during the year. Col. Bain gave one of his excellent lectures at the evening session.

Word comes from Miss E. Murray, president of the colored W. C. T. U. of St. Helena, South Carolina, for help for the sufferers from the recent fearful storms in the vicinity. This was a farming community and the high tide swept everything away, so nothing for a support can be done before spring. Temperance sentiment in the place is very strong and these people are most worthy of help. Clothes may be sent to J. R. McDonald, St. Helena, chairman of the relief committee, and money, if preferred, to Miss E. Murray.

Mrs. E. Norinne Law, who is now accompanying Mrs. Dr. Blakey, Provincial president, in making a tour of Manitoba, in the interest of organization and franchise, is meeting with great success. They are making large additions to the membership, and are circulating petitions for full franchise to women which will be presented to the legislature at the next session. Mrs. Law's sweet, refined manner, with her strong, forcible arguments and eloquent appeals is winning many to our cause wherever she goes. She is just the right type of a woman to employ in a suffrage campaign.

The Evanston, Ill., W. C. T. U. observed Harves tHome day in a very charming manner. On behalf of Miss Willard, Miss Anna Gordon invited the union to meet in Rest Cottage, and to welcome home Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, whom Evanstonians, and the W. C. T. U. in particular, are proud to claim as their own. Dr. Delano, pastor of the Baptist church, and a stanch white-ribbon brother-in-law, as all Union Signal readers know, voiced the greeting of the citizens, and Miss Gordon spoke warm words of welcome for the union. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell responded beautifully, giving in brief outline the history of their three years' mission, and speaking particularly of the way in which they had been led to go out into such untried paths, trusting in God and His messengers on earth to supply the needed means. Those present will never forget the lessons of trust and self-abnegation which these brave and unselfish women unconsciously teach, and a blessing upon their noble work was the prayer of every heart.

An eloquent and hearty tribute to the loving labors of Mrs. Hester T. Griffith, comes from a soldier at Fort Douglas, Utah, who says: "Eighteen months ago no effort was being made here at the Fort to seek to draw the men away from the saloon and other places of sin which many of them haunted, simply because they had no place to go to. But God opened a way and this noble woman took up the work her heart had long yearned for, and most earnestly has she labored in our midst in the behalf of temperance and righteousness, and her labor has not been in vain. Men who months ago were living in the vilest kind of sin, and some of whom even cursed the work she was doing here, are now living manly, upright lives. And not a man in Fort Douglas but that respects and reveres the name of Mrs. Griffith. Over a hundred men have signed the pledge, some have broken it, but many have kept it. Among those who have been converted a number have given up, unable to stand the scoff and ridicule, but many have stood firm and true to their convictions and have united with the various churches near the Fort. The majority of the soldiers think that the citizens do not care whether they are saved or not, but this noble woman's work in our midst has caused that thought to perish and in its place a more beautiful and truthful one to spring up, that truly the heart of this devoted woman beats in loving sympathy for every man in the garrison. Her beautiful, lovely home is ever open to the soldier boys, and many pleasant hours are we permitted to spend in that truly hospitable home. Meetings are held every week in the chapel and we are permitted to listen to some of the best talent of the city, as Mrs. Griffith spares no pains to make every meeting so entertaining as to win the boys away from the saloon and other places of sin, and every Saturday afternoon she conducts a Bible class at her home for the boys in blue."

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Board of National superintendents will hold their first meeting in Art Palace, Saturday, October 14, at 10 a. m., to continue (with exception of recesses) the entire day and evening. Each will receive notice, by mail, of the special topics to be discussed. These with the necessary business will constitute a very busy session. All the superintendents are hereby urged to be present.

STATE SUPERINTENDENTS.

So few of you have been sending me in your annual reports that I fear you have overlooked my letters in The Union Signal. If you desire your state to have any credit whatever in my report please send to me at once at 1116, "The Rookery," Chicago.

Will not the state presidents take the responsibility of seeing that these reports are sent in or else prepare them for me themselves?

RAILROAD RATES.

To White-Ribboners of the United States:

Your secretary of railroad rates for the approaching National Convention to be held in Chicago, October 18 to 21, has been investigating the matter of reduced rates for those who wish to attend that and the World's Convention.

The World's Fair excursion rates are the only rates, and the best, also, that can be obtained—are better than in previous years. These are:

On all western roads, one fare for the round trip, plus $2. This rate is good on all days and all trains and until November 15.

All eastern roads give a one fare rate, tickets good for ten days. This fare is only given on certain days. The dates are different on different roads, and must be ascertained from your local agents, as it is impossible to announce them all through The Union Signal.

As it is desirable and more pleasant for delegates from the same state to come over the same road, you are requested to write the presidents of your respective states for information concerning the route selected for your state delegation.

Mary G. Hay,
Secretary R. R. Rates.

Indianapolis, Ind.

HOTEL RATES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION.

It is impossible this World's Fair year to secure special concessions from hotels for the National Convention, but the following schedule is presented from those within two or three blocks or less of the Art Palace. These are for rooms only. All have restaurants connected with the house except the Grand Union; there are many others at reasonable prices at convenient distance, and there is an excellent one in the Art Palace itself.

PER DIEM.

Palmer House, Monroe street and Wabash avenue, two in a room, $1.50 each and upward,

Brunswick, Michigan avenue and Adams street, outside rooms, one in room, $1.50; outside rooms, two in a room, $2.50; outside rooms, three in a room, $3; court rooms, one in room, $1; court rooms, two in room, $1.50. These rates are to be divided by the number of persons in the room.

Windsor Hotel, Dearborn, between Monroe and Madison streets, two or more in a room, $1 each person.

Continental, corner Madison and Wabash avenue, two or more in room, 75 cts; and one dollar each, according to room.

Grand Union, Dearborn, between Madison and Monroe streets, $1 each person.

As the Brunswick Hotel does not adhere to its promise of special rates for a large number of guests during Convention, it will not be necessary for any one to engage rooms in advance through me. The rates remain as they have been published.

Room for one or two during Convention at Oak Park, eight miles out on Northwestern road. Bus from depot to Convention hall. Cost, including fare, $1 per day, two in room; breakfast 35 cents.

Mrs. M. F. Allen, 4247 Calumet Ave., can accommodate ten or twelve ladies for Convention, 50 cts. to $1 each per room, near elevated station.

Mrs. Marion Skinner and Mrs. L. A. Burm, North Harvey, can accommodate ladies at 75 cts. per night; this includes two meals.

Esther Pugh.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

Patrons and lecturers are invited to visit the headquarters of the Woman's Lecture Bureau in the organization room of the Woman's Building at Jackson Park. We will be pleased to see you and talk over the work for the winter for which we are now arranging. It is necessary to urge upon all the necessity of coöperation in this line of the work and we trust that each union will do all that is possible to place the lecture work upon the footing it deserves.

Owing to the difficulty of unions in assuming the responsibility of raising money to compensate speakers for their lectures, Mrs. Marion B. Baxter has decided to devote a portion of her time each year to a special plan of work, particulars of which may be obtained by applying to the Bureau.

We wish to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available for woman's clubs in the East until February, and in the West for the remainder of the winter.

The following lecturers are under the management of the Bureau and will be available during the fall and winter.

Frances E. Willard.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw,* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall, and New Jersey in November.

Mary T. Lathrap, Illinois and Missouri after the 25th of September.

Helen M. Gougar,* Pennsylvania and Western New York after the 22d of September.

Miss Anna Gordon, the World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of juvenile work.

Carrie Lane Chapman, Ohio in November.

Clara C. Hoffman, Wisconsin in September and November.

Lillie Devereux Blake, calls in the vicinity of New York City.

Elizabeth U. Yates, Maryland first of October and Michigan the second week of October.

Mary Sparkes Wheeler, calls in Pennsylvania.

Rev. Eugenia St. John.

Rev. C. H. St. John.

Frank Dwight Denny.

Lou J. Beauchamp, calls for lecture courses.

Mary Seymour Howell, September and October in New York.

Messrs. Wolfenbarger and Huckins.

Eva M. Shontz, elocutionist, Michigan from October 25 to November 25.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens.*

M. Naomi Trimmer.* Vocalist.

Josephine R. Nichols, Maine in September and Canada in December.

Caroline B. Buell, Illinois and adjoining states.

Fanny Zampini Salazar, for woman's clubs during the fall and winter.

Marion B. Baxter, Pennsylvania and Maryland in September and New Jersey in October.

For dates, terms, etc., address

BUREAU NOTES.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau wishes to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available in this country during the fall and winter. She will lecture on the arts, habits and literature of her own country.

We wish to call attention to the talent displayed by Frank Dwight Denny in his recitals and lectures. Unions desiring to make arrangements for this class of entertainment in lecture courses for the winter will secure all information by addressing Lucy E. Anthony, Manager.

ELI BROWN.

FREE.

The following remarkable statement to which we direct special attention, is from a Tenn. farmer.

My age is 63. I suffered intensely from catarrh 10 yrs., dry scabs formed in nostrils, one or both sides stopped up continually, dryness and soreness of throat, hoarseness, intense headache, took cold easily, and had continual roaring, cracking, buzzing, and singing in my ears. My hearing began to fail, and for three years I was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Every thing I had tried, failed. In despair I commenced to use the Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of catarrh.

The Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co., of Quincy, Ill., have a very fine exhibit in one of the live stock buildings at the World's Fair, and for the last few days their space has been crowded with curious and interested people. The first hatch from their machine on exhibition there has proven a wonderful success. Two hundred eggs were placed in their machine of that capacity, and from it came one hundred and eighty-six chicks. This is more than has been hatched by all the other incubators put together, and the Reliable people are rejoicing in their great victory. If they do not receive first honors, it will not be because of a lack of merit in hatching qualities. Their incubator and brooder combined is the admiration of all poultry men, Not only is their machine first-class, but they are justly entitled to the name they bear—reliable and responsible, and worthy of confidence and patronage.

BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH.

A Singular Story of a Detroit Molder—A Terrible Battle Which Lasted Months—One of the Remarkable Incidents Bordering on the Romantic.

(From the Detroit Free Press.)

Thomas Hagen was seated in a comfortable rocking chair at his cosy home, 1289 Russell Street, yesterday morning, when a visitor was announced. The gentleman arose and greeted the new-comer with the grace of a diplomat, and as he opened up a conversation it was evident that Mr. Hagen was a person of more than ordinary intelligence. To his visitor the remarkable changes and peculiar career of this man was a source of much interest. The wonderful transformation in his appearance within the past two years is itself worthy of the study of a scientist. Mr. Hagen, a couple of years ago, was so weak and emaciated that to-day he does not seem the same individual.

Rheumatism was the cause of his terrible sufferings.

He is a Detroiter by birth, having first seen the light of day in this city 36 years ago. When quite a boy he was apprenticed to the molder's trade, and ever since he has followed this avocation. He is quite a prominent member of the local Stovemolder's Union, and can be found nearly every Saturday night in attendance at the meeting of the order. About two years ago Mr. Hagen became seriously affected with rheumatism, the result of working in draughts of cold air.

"The shooting pains of rheumatism are actually, I believe, the most horrible penalties that can be inflicted on mankind. I cannot begin to tell you of the agony I suffered. I had a thorough experience in the art of torture, and no matter what I used to ease the pain, it seemed as though I was doomed to greater suffering. I had a number of friends who took great interest in my case, and recommended numerous remedies, which I tried without avail. Nothing seemed to do me any good. I was under the care of several well-known Detroit physicians, but their services were absolutely without favorable results. I was bedridden. Why, I could not move from one chair to another without assistance. Some days I would feel a little brighter than others.

"But presently another attack of that dreadful rheumatism would strike me, leaving me a veritable wreck on the barren shores of humanity.

"By accident I read two years ago a Canadian paper containing a remarkable story of a miracle at Hamilton, Ont. It was that of a man who was tortured to death by rheumatism. He was induced to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He was immediately cured. I doubted the truth of the matter at first, but thought I would try it. I had my people hunt all over town, but they could not find the pills at any of the drug stores. The only place they were then sold at was over in Windsor. Well, my relatives went over there and purchased a few boxes. Great Christopher! but my mind goes back in ecstasy to the change which immediately came over me after using the Pink Pills. I began to improve, and in a few weeks rheumatic pains left me, and in a short time I was able to be out and around. From that time I have been at work.

"It was not long after I secured the pills over at Windsor that I found they were for sale here in Detroit, at Brown & Co's, corner of Woodward and Congress, Michell's and Bassett & L'Hommedieu's, Woodward avenue. I purchased them for fifty cents per box. I guess you can buy them now at almost every drug store in Detroit.

"I have recommended the Pink Pills to several of my friends around town, and although their cases were similar to mine, they have all been cured. There is nothing on the face of God's earth equal to them for rheumatism and other diseases. Until my dying day I will praise the pills for being the cause of my present happy and contented condition."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is usually understood, but are a scientific preparation successfully used in general practice for many years before being offered to the public generally. They contain in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood, and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade-mark and wrapper, at 50 cts. a box, or six boxes for $2.50. Bear in mind that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are never sold in bulk, or by the dozen or hundred, and any dealer who offers a substitute in this form is trying to defraud you, and should be avoided. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company from either address. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

LOVELY CHRISTMAS CARD

Designed by Lady Henry Somerset.

For Christmas, Lady Henry Somerset has drawn a lovely card, which has been engraved in colors at Nuremberg, by Nister & Co., the most celebrated art publishers in the world. It represents a mother and child of whom it might be said, "In the whole city full, home they had none," and bears the name, "A Nineteenth Century Nativity." It has a quotation from James Russell Lowell, and bears Lady Henry's autograph. The price, post free, is 25 cents, and it is a large-sized card.

Orders can be sent from now on, and specimens will be on view at the World's and National Conventions.

A DEFENSE OF THE JERICHO ROBBERS.

This booklet, by W. W. Satterlee, is a bright bit of irony under the guise of a lawyer's plea for the robbers mentioned in the parable of the good Samaritan. Its application to the arguments urged in favor of licensing the liquor traffic will not need to be pointed out to any one that reads it.

The death of Dr. Satterlee, the author of Jericho robbers, gives a sad interest to this pamphlet. One near to him writes: "I am certain that he was the noblest and purest man that I have ever learned to respect. There is no encomium to great and good men that would be unfitting to his great soul."

The "Defense of the Jericho Robbers" is published by the W. T. P. A. Price 20 cents.

Signal Notes.

THE Jews of this country have a committee at work to devise a plan for the revision of the Hebrew Bible.

A RULER in India has opened a home for the education of widows of all classes to be trained to earn their own livelihood.

THERE were two thousand three hundred and fifty-three suicides in the German army, exclusive of Bavaria, in the past ten years.

THE Anglo Indian Temperance Association, in India, of which Rev. Thomas Evans is agent, numbers eighty thousand members.

GEORGE W. CHILDS himself is authority for the statement that the best work upon his paper, the Public Ledger, is done by women.

THE Silver Cord League, of England, pledges those who join not to purchase goods of any grocer who holds a beer, wine or spirit license.

THERE are to-day twenty-eight Protestant theological seminaries in India, with three hundred and fifty students undergoing training for Christian service.

THE remnant of the ancient Maori race in New Zealand numbers thirty-eight thousand of whom over half are under the care of different missionary societies.

A GOSPEL push-cart, lighted by electricity, containing organ and chairs, one side to be let down and used as a platform, is coming into use in Australia. It is a portable chapel, and can be pushed by men or drawn by a horse.

A BRANCH of the White Cross Union which was started in Berlin in 1890 has been started among the German young men in London. The membership of seventy-seven is mostly waiters. The object is social purity.

IN England the school scheme of the Band of Hope is a great success. Able lecturers are engaged to visit the elementary schools of the country and present the scientific aspect of the temperance question. During the four years of its work, nearly three thousand schools have been visited.

THE hop-growers of England have had to spend enormous amounts this year in combating with blight, drought, mould and moth. As the consumption of beer increases the deficiency in the English hop supply must be met by the American market. Unfortunately, no disease has appeared in the American hops, so far at least.

THE convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, which is to be held November 2 and 3 in New York, promises to be of great interest, as the brotherhood has gained fifty chapters the past year, making a total of one hundred and twenty-five, with a membership of three thousand five hundred in this country.

DISTINCT progress is being made in female education in India. The report of the director of public instruction, Madras, for 1891 and 1892, shows an increase of 5.4 per cent in number of pupils attending girls' schools. Including those attending boys' schools the number increased from 87,715 to 98,147. The policy of the Madras Educational department is to replace men inspectors by women inspectors for girls' schools, and this they are rapidly accomplishing throughout the presidency.

A REGULATION to prevent infant marriages in Mysore has just been drafted by the legislative department of that state. By it the minimum age of a girl has been fixed at eight years and a boy fourteen. Any person causing or abetting the marriage of an infant, and any person under eighteen marrying a girl under eight years, is to be punished by imprisonment or fine, or with both. Any man over fifty marrying a girl under fourteen will also be punished.

THE Judson memorial Baptist church of New York has erected a drinking fountain on a prominent corner of a cosmopolitan neighborhood. The water is filtered and cooled by packing the pipes through which it runs in ice. In the afternoon the demand for the cool water is very great, and although the crowd is often dense and composed of French, Irish, Italians and negroes, there is never any disturbance, but each waits patiently his turn and moves quietly home—a marked contrast to the crowds that congregate in a liquor saloon!

RED-LETTER DAY CALENDAR.

October 16, 17—WORLD'S W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, Chicago.
October 18–21—NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, Chicago.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

All is quiet in the Argentine Republic.

Children are now admitted to the World's Fair at a ten cent rate.

The silver debate in the United States Senate drags its slow length along.

The Young Men's Christian Association congress gathered at the Art Palace, Chicago, October 6.

Preparations are being actively made for the great World's and National W. C. T. U. Conventions, October 16 to 21.

The most important religious gathering of the Northwest, the Rock River Methodist Episcopal conference, has been in session at Dixon, Ill.

Pallas, the anarchist of Barcelona, Spain, who made the unprovoked attempt upon the life of Captain General Campos, was executed October 6.

The Pan-American bimetallic convention which was attended by one hundred and sixty-six delegates from eleven states, closed its sessions at St. Louis.

Four hundred Indian youth from the government school at Carlisle, Pa., which now numbers fourteen hundred graduates, have been in attendance at the World's Fair.

A great storm swept the coast of the Gulf of Mexico from the Mississippi river eastward last week, leaving a scene of ruin in its track on land and sea, and a death list of over two thousand persons.

Monday was Chicago day at the World's Fair; 713,000 people were in attendance and the day was magnificently observed by pageants, fireworks, illuminations and the ringing of the new Liberty bell.

The International Christian Conference, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, commenced Sunday at the Memorial Art Palace, Chicago, Rev. James McCosh, Bishop Hurst, Bishop Fowler and others participating.

Wars and rumors of wars comprise the foreign telegraphic news of the week. A desperate battle between the ancient enemies, Spaniards and Moors, is reported from the north coast of Morocco. Rio de Janeiro is still beleaguered by the rebel fleet which bids fair to win the victory. The Matabeles, in Africa, have attacked British troops.

FOR the benefit of the hundreds of W. C. T. U. delegates and visitors who may come to the city next week unprovided with lodgings, we want to call further attention to the Woman's Dormitory, which, because of its immense size, has a number of unoccupied rooms that may be secured for fifty cents a day each. The Dormitory is located at the corner of Ellis Avenue and Fifty-second street, and may be reached by the Cottage Grove avenue cable cars, and by special omnibuses from the Fair grounds.

A NUMBER of correspondents having referred to that part of Mr. Stead's character sketch of Lady Henry Somerset which speaks of the providing of alcoholic drinks to her son's guests, it behooves us to state that Lady Henry's son usually occupies a separate house, and while we cannot say what he may furnish to his guests, we can emphatically deny that his mother furnishes any intoxicating liquor to them, and can also gladly testify that he sympathizes with his honored mother's pronounced temperance principles. It should also be stated that Lady Henry did not see the sketch in question until after it was published, contrary to general inference, and so is not personally responsible for any of its statements.

THE World's Petition was received with marked favor at the Religious Parliament, several hundred important signatures being obtained during the two days on which it was presented. It was present at all the sessions of the Mission Congresses last week and will doubtless be indorsed by scores of active missionaries whose labors in the Orient have been weakened by the influence of the strong drink introduced by the new world.

SEVERAL of the distinguished foreign delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. have arrived in Chicago. One is Mrs. Sakurai of Japan, vice-president of the Tokyo W. C. T. U. and representative of the Japanese union. Mrs. Sakurai is an educator in her own country, having eighteen years ago started a school for girls, the first in Tokyo. She has also taught in government normal schools. Eight years ago Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt visited Japan and organized a W. C. T. U. at Osaka. Mrs. Sakurai was living there at that time and became president of the union, so she may be properly regarded as a pioneer in Japanese temperance work.

ON the receipt of a promise from one saloon-keeper to close his place of business on Chicago day, a leading Chicago daily is moved to felicitate thus: "It would be a wonderful piece of news to send abroad over the wires on the night of the 9th, that 'all business stopped for the day. Even the saloon-keepers locked their establishments and sent their employés to the Fair.' We can think of nothing that would so emphasize the devotion of Chicagoans to the city in which they live." To us it seems that to close the open pits in their community every day in every year would be a test of devotion on the part of Chicago's citizens far more wonderful and enduring in its effects.

THE city of Chicago and the month of October are being taken for Christ. The wonderful evangelistic movement, under the direction of Mr. Moody, has at present twenty-three well-known evangelists, besides the hundreds of resident ministers, most of whom are active aids in this great work. Never was there a time in this city, and perhaps in any other, when churches were so in demand. All the conveniently situated edifices are mortgaged weeks ahead for this gospel mission and many down-town theaters and music halls are preëmpted for Christ. We believe it will be said of Chicago in looking back upon this wonderful Columbian year, despite all of its selfish and misguided zeal, that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

ANOTHER martyr to the drink evil is Harrison B. Thornton, a missionary connected with the American Society and government agent of the Eskimo Indian schools at Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska, whose tragic death there, supposably at the hands of drunken Indians, was announced by telegram from San Francisco during the week. Mr. Thornton was a nephew of Judge Thornton of San Francisco, and a graduate of the University of Virginia, of which his brother, William H. Thornton, is president. He had enlisted upon a determined opposition to the liquor traffic among the Indians, having entered complaint at Washington against the commander of the revenue cutter, Bear, for conniving in the business, and thereby earned the hatred of the traders and dissolute Indians. This is only the natural outcome of a system of protection to a traffic which is prohibited from selling to government Indians, but whose avarice and malice are such that it seeks and obtains the death of a government officer who is faithfully executing the duties of his office. "How long, oh, Lord, how long" must we submit to this body-killing, heart-breaking, soul-polluting traffic! Answer, distant echoes, Until Christian voters do their duty, or God's avenging angel strikes his righteous blow.

MISS DEBROEN, president of the W. C. T. U. of France, is in the city and will remain until after the World's Convention, to represent her country upon that important occasion. Miss DeBroen is well known for her extensive medical mission in Paris, and has been president, at intervals, of the French W. C. T. U. since 1888. Other representatives to this world's gathering will be Lady Henry Somerset; Mrs. Magnussen, of Iceland, whom we have previously noticed in these columns; Miss Groendyke, of Rotofunk, West Africa; Miss A. E. Bliss, of Wellington, South Africa; Mrs. M. M. Love, formerly president of Victoria W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, president of Canadian union; Mrs. Cunningham, of British Columbia; Mrs. Mary S. Whitney, of Hawaiian Islands; Mrs. Z. A. M. Locke, of Bulgaria; Miss Alys Whitall Smith, representing the Y's of England, and Dr. Kate Bushnell, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew and Miss Jessie Ackermann, our world missionaries. With such a representation, our World's Convention will be an unquestioned success.

A MOVEMENT has been inaugurated in Chicago that is world-wide in import. The present form of the movement is a petition to Congress and President Cleveland asking all civilized nations to enter into a peace league, that shall eventually emerge into an international court of arbitration. The petition calls first for the hearty indorsement of the United States Congress, and an invitation for Great Britain to join with our government in forming a court of arbitration, to which shall be submitted all questions of dispute between the two nations. Afterward other nations will be invited to come into the compact, and from the cordiality with which the foreign representatives at present in our country have received the proposition, there is little doubt about their countries accepting the invitation. Almost every foreign commissioner at the Fair has signed the petition, as well as many of the delegates to the recent Parliament of Religions. This idea originated with Mr. William E. Blackstone, of Chicago, and is the first fruit of the great Religious Parliament. If such results are to accrue, surely every opposer of the Parliament will be won over.

NOTHING is more absurd than the regulation reply of women who wear their waists unnaturally, than that they are perfectly comfortable and that for them this is an entirely natural condition; but we often see a girl of ten or twelve with a larger waist than her mother. What would be thought if a boy approaching his teens had a larger waist than his father? The fact of the case is that women with small waists are deformed and everybody knows it who has an eye to science or to art. To lace the waist is but a senseless relic on the part of unthinking women of past barbarism, and it is a part of the work of the W. C. T. U. to prove this by example, which is far more convincing than precept. The fashion plates set up the vilest standard possible in these days, and we are glad that in the year 1886, upon the suggestion of our President, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Nation petitioned fashion papers to let artists draw their plates, and to make the pictures true to life as distinct from artificiality. The suggestion was duly carried out, and back came courteous answers from the fashion magazines that they would gladly act on the suggestion except for the fact that they should speedily become bankrupt, for the reason that the artificial standard so long maintained had degraded the eyes of women and men, too, for that matter; that to undertake such a reform would be practically hopeless. We then decided that nothing but the "slow lift" of steady teaching through generations would ever make women's waists what God meant them to be. But nowadays we congratulate ourselves that small waists are so rare that unfavorable comment is universal when one is seen upon the streets.

TRUE SERVICE.

BY EDITH J. ARCHIBALD.

"And when she saw him she was troubled at his saying."—Luke 1:29.
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to Thy word."—Luke 1:38.

Master! the fields are white, the workers few;
The shadows lengthen, there is need for haste,
My hands are feeble, yet my heart is true—
There is no time to waste.

Thou gavest in mine hand this work to do;
Scarce have I touched it, scarce my lesson scanned;
Yet I had hoped to render service true,
At Thy command.

"Come, thou my child, apart, and rest awhile."
Like Mary, I would answer, "Lord, behold
Thy handmaid! so I have Thy smile—
Thy plan unfold!"

And now, I needs must answer to Thy call,
A call to service higher, work more blest
Deep in my woman's heart I yield Thee all.
Thou knowest best.

Make Thy way plain, dear Lord, before my face.
Whate'er Thy will for me, 'tis sure to bless.
Uphold me with the spirit of Thy grace
And faithfulness.

Resting upon that grace Thy servant see,
Oh, Son of Mary! ever loving Lord.
Behold Thy handmaid. "Be it unto me
According to Thy Word."

Cape Breton Island.

"THE BIGGEST SIGHT."

BY ELIZABETH CUMMINGS.

"The biggest sight!" echoed Silas Wetherbee. "Mm!—Wall, you'd a-thought Elnathan Peck was, if you'd seen him run as I did when it come up a suddin rain on Wooded Island." Here overcome by retrospective amusement, he closed his eyes and chuckled, as he rubbed the wisp of beard on the peak of his chin. The circle of listeners gathered in "the store" watched him impatiently by the light of the smudging coal oil lamps, while without the crickets and katydids kept up a cheerful din, for the cold is slow to invade the depths of southern Illinois. "Harbottle's Emporium and Boston Store" was blazoned on the sign. But Coffinville called it with more distinction, "The Store."

The news that Silas Wetherbee had returned, had run through the hamlet like a sudden fog, and the male population had gathered in force at the center of news and gossip, eager to hear what he had to say. The minister with no little effort had been presented with twenty dollars, and a ticket for Chicago, and he had told what he saw at the White City in six lectures, but the practical men like Pete Carpenter, the blacksmith, and St'm Wright, the butcher, were conscious of a want unsatisfied. Dr. Dickerman had been, but what he saw he could not tell beyond the fact that it was a "right smart," and that the World's Fair was "powerful." But Silas Wetherbee was something of a talker, as became a church officer, and a retired farmer with a snug house in town, and time on his hands. A smile slowly lit up the faces of the listeners when Elnathan Peck's name was mentioned! Coffinville men were for the most part lean and lank, and had the contempt of leanness for extreme fatness. But Mr. Peck was brother-in-law to Squire Coffin, the great man of the place, and had an income suited to his weight, which was over three hundred pounds.

"I've been told a good deal about the flowers an' grass around the buildin's," said Mr. Harbottle, who was as withered and dry as one of his own raisins, and who felt a slight shock that one of his very best customers should be laughed at. "Now, I'd desire to know how with folks a-traipsin' all over the canopy, grass and flowers could stan' a mite o' chance. It's askin' too much for me to believe."

"Wall, the grass and flowers are there," said Mr. Wetherbee, leisurely crossing his lank legs. "The trouble is you can't get it through you how big the show is. My! the walks are wide as the road, and folks keep off the grass."

"And there's anywhere from seventy-five to a hundred thousand every day!" cried the storekeeper, incredulously.

"Jus' so," said Mr. Wetherbee, calmly. "And there's room enough for 'em all to sasshay 'round. Tell about the biggest thing on arth! Thur's a p'int whur men hev got to stop, an' Chicago's got thur. An' I do believe thur ain't no city anywhere that had the place an' th' sand ekal to sech doin's, 'ceptin' only Chicago. The fust thing the buildin's an' the scene takes your breath away. Mis' Wetherbee, she went in for dee-tails. An' I used to say to her, 'M'ria, take in the scene!' La! I useter feel sometimes so full o' pride seemed like I could fly, I was that glad at bein' raised in Illinoy. Of course, the whole country's in it, but the Fair's at Chicago!"

There was an instant's silence broken only by a tree-toad's gurgling call for rain, and an emphatic sneeze by Abram Wright. "I don't wonder folks just say, 'Oh, my!'" resumed Wetherbee. "When you've took it in that the diff'nt states has their buildin's, an' Illinoy at the head o' the heap for size, an' that there's Machinery Hall, an' th' Mines Buildin', an' the 'Lectricity Buildin', an' the Gover'ment Buildin's, an' a Women's Buildin', an' a Children's Buildin', an' a Hottercultural an' an Agricultural Buildin', an' the Lib'ral Arts Buildin' could be set down over all Coffinville an' leave as much land around the aige as would wear out any one man to take care of, say in beans, you ain't no ways through. Thair's a mons'ous buildin' full o' picters, an' another buildin' full o' fish an' fishin' things, an' another full o' cars, an' wagins and boats, an' all sorts o' furrin buildin's, not exceptin' Injy's coral strand where live heathen in nice white clothes 'll give you a cup o' tea for nothin', an' a Japan house as neat as wax work, though not what I'd think comfortable, an' all a-makin' you think there ought to be a glass shade over it to keep it from the rain."

"An' that thur Playzunce, or whatever it is," interposed the blacksmith gruffly.

"I went there," said Mr. Wetherbee quickly; "ye see it's sort'er like the side shows to any fair on'y bigger an' you can't help a-havin' your summizins now an' agin. I went to see the Feegees, always bein' interested in 'em on account of my mother bein' named Cook. Wall, I see 'em dance probably just as the band did around the captain while they was roastin' him for dinner, but they ended up their show by singin' 'Home, Sweet Home' neat as a meetin' choir, an' it kind o' rattled me like. But, sir! I got my money's worth in the Street o' Cairo a-ridin' a live camel, for I just saved myself from a broken neck a-fallin' back-'ards as he knelt down by fallin' straight over his head as his front section come down. And as for the Ferris Wheel—wall, the first time I went round I told myself the Old Feller himself tempted me to dast it, an' I wondered how on arth M'ria would get along if the thing bust or hitched, for you couldn't no ways shin down for a meal of victuals, nor get a bite unless it was by balloon, but when it went round the second time, I just wanted to spend the mornin' a-careerin', for it was like lookin' down on the kingdoms o' the arth."

"Wall, of all the things you see, what was as you may say of all on 'em the tip-toppin'est an' biggest sight?" demanded Mr. Higginbottom, usually known as Doc Higginbottom, because in addition to collecting rags, for which he dickered cheap tin, he treated cows and horses with some success, and occasionally pulled teeth. "Jes' tell us what kind o' bit into yer vitals th' most of all the sights ye see."

"You wouldn't a-thought it much o' a sight, Doc, thur sight that hit me closest," said Wetherbee sawing his head up and down in a hectoring way; "folks is consider'ble diff'ent in their feelin's, an' what hit me ain't no ways likely to be the biggest sight in th' Fair to ary other man. I met urp with one man, I guess it was among the Japanese things in th' Agricultural Buildin', an' he was all fur studyin' beans, an' he sez, sez he, 'Blamed ef here ain't goose beans jes' like grows in my wife's gayrdin', an' he told me thur was eighty sorts o' beans from one county in the Californy buildin', an' I don't know how many other places; an' thur was another feller I see as was all took urp with guns, an' he told me he spent most 'is time in with the Krupp guns, an' enjoyed himself a-thinkin' how turrible expensive an' outdacious it has got fur to be to hev a war, for he was a peace man like the Quakers. But ef you all'd really like to know what I thought was the biggest sight"—

"Of course we would," said the blacksmith slapping his knees; "what are we here fur?"

"Wall, I seen 'em the last day," resumed Mr. Wetherbee shifting his legs about in a way that disclosed that one was shorter than the other and bent at the knee. "Mis' Wetherbee she was turrible took urp with the jewelry an' the women's fixin's, so I left her to take a good look at 'em an' I sot off to browse around like, an' after seein' 'em at work on di'mons, and then a-goin' over the ship Columbus come over in—which must have been a pretty tejus boat to venture a long voyage in, not to speak of the men getting all out of whack—I went over to the Illinoy buildin' to register. I was kind o' sorry our time was urp, an' the money spent, an' I don't know just how I went in; but fust I know'd, thur I was, a-tween the battle-flags. Yes, sir, them dusty, spotted, ragged battle-flags we fit under way back in the sixties! Lord, what a sight they was in all that splendor o' peace! It come afore me like a picter o' th' night Billy Price an' me 'listed. The drums had been a-rollin' straight along through the week, in spite o' th' deacons, Sunday too, an' Lincoln was a-callin' fo' more men till it seemed like we folks on P'simmon Creek could hear him. Th' drums kind o' wore on ye; an' it seemed like you must go; but I'd kind o' hung back 'count o' mother, an' Davy bein' dead she didn't have nobody nor nothin' but me. But that night there was strange doin's o' northern lights. Streaks o' light goin' acrost the sky, an' Billy, he said 'they was marchin' soldiers!' An' small wonder, for it was just after the second Bull Run. Billy's father was lone and lorn, an', like me, he'd sort o' hung off. But, wall—that night we 'listed, an' I can tell you, we was 'fraider to go home 'n we ever was to meet Rebs. An' a lookin' at them flags, an' the battles they'd been in in black letters under 'em, I seen old Uncle Makepeace Price and my mother, in my mind, plain as printin', when a long, lank, grizzled feller touched my arm, an' sez he, 'You thar'?' and he pointed at the name 'Chickamauga.' An' sez I, 'Yes;' an' he put out his left hand, his right arm was gone, an' we shook hands. An' sez he very quiet like, 'I was on the other side. I was under Longstreet,' but he kept close holt of my hand, and looked me straight in th' eyes—an' me a-thinkin' o' how Billy fell at Chickamauga, and his blood dyed the flag he was carryin'—an' sez he, a-comin' a bit nearer, 'I lost my father an' twin brother an' every dad-burned cent, an' I useter think it was all wrong. But I've lived to see it was all right.' Jes' then the nib o' the whole great show was plain to me. I ain't no o-rater, an' I don't reckon I can be quite plain, but—I see how peace an' blessin's go straight along together, all in a flash, right thar a-twixt the battle-flags o' Illinoy, an' how we're all brothers an' bound to help each other, an' make the best o' things, an'—well, sir—that sort o' vision like was the very best and biggest thing I got a peep at in the World's Fair."

There was a slight scraping of feet, and then it was discovered that Doc Higginbottom was gone. "What's the matter o' him?" demanded the butcher who had a nice sense of the respect due a speaker at the store.

"Nothin'," said Mr. Harbottle, flourishing his counter brush, which was somehow become the signal for dismissal, "Doc is as he is, an' he's allus been so. He was that tore up in wa' time he jes' couldn't collect hisself enough to know his opinions, so he went to Canada, an' he hain't never voted 'cause he couldn't settle down to nothin'. Reckon I'll go up an' see them flags myself. I served durin' the wa'."

The moon was at the full. The night had become chill. Silas Wetherbee felt the cold in the wound in his knee as he started homeward, so he began to whistle. It was an old tune, "We'll rally 'round the flag, boys, rally once again, Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom!" Other voices joined his, each one keeping his own time; but the storekeeper who could not whistle listened. When he closed his door softly all was still, and as he crept into his shabby little bed in the room back of the store, he promised himself he too would see the battle-flags of Illinois. "Lord, Lord," he sighed in the darkness, "'Manda an' our boy died, an' I was marchin' through Georgia. I'll go urp an' see the flags an' mebbe I'll feel what all that strivin' an' sufferin' wos for,—an' rightly sense the great Fair."

WHAT IS THE TRUE BASIS OF MONEY?

BY HARRIET RUSSELL-STRONG.

It is plain that money is the basis of business, but what is the basis of money? The financiers of the world who are in power say it is gold. But business demands silver money also as there is not enough gold for the business transactions of the world. These same financiers say silver must no longer be a precious metal, but sink into the ranks of commodities. Theory and sentiment and laws have their values, but certain underlying practical facts will tell the truth in regard to money.

We are told by men that money is the medium of exchange; it is that which represents the value of commodities to be exchanged and by means of which commerce is carried on; this is theory. In practice its position is contradictory; money was first coined by individuals and its basis was personal property and is to-day personal property. When governments deprive the people of the privilege of making money to represent their property, what do governments give in return to the people? Do they insure to business any substantial guarantee or do they pledge any security that business shall at all times be provided with a medium of exchange? No. And it is a long way from miner through speculator, middlemen to United States mint and again through another set of middlemen to the people. Money is still claimed to be representative of real values.

The first property rights were vested in flocks and herds; trading was the first business engaged in. It became inconvenient to exchange and actually drive about the animals, giving horses for sheep or cattle for goats. It was then that people took bits of metal and made a picture of an animal to stand in place of the animal. These substitutes were used and accepted of equal value to the animal pictured on the metal, as it was understood that any time the holder of the coin could claim the animal. Two leading ideas or facts are herein shown. First the representative character of money, its artificial value; and second, the honor of the one issuing it and using it.

This redemption of money that has always been an underlying sentiment, and the use of money with no redemptive feature, has caused largely the present state of affairs. There has grown to be a tacit understanding that gold embodies in itself all that is requisite in money. This is foreign to the spirit and letter regulating money. Gold, as a commodity, has intrinsic value, but should not have such value as money, and to consider it the only commercial article that has value is to dismember society and bankrupt our country—as it seems in a fair way to do. The commerce of the world is the exchange of commodities through the medium of money or its equivalent, which equivalent is credit. We have then three elements: Values, money, credit. As money is one step removed from real values, credit is a second step. Money is of less value than its antecedents so credit is of less value than money, and is subject to discount and its use must be paid for.

The exaltation of gold to represent a combination of the three factors in the medium of exchange (namely, real values, money and credit) is the anomaly of the present business condition, and gold needs to be demonetized. The currency of the country is acknowledged to be its credit, and should be expressed by a stamp of the government placed upon whatever substance the government may choose, whether paper, aluminum, gold or silver. But the present standard is saying to the people that about one-sixteenth of an ounce of gold, stamped, is the only basis, and upon this basis all our money and values must rest. Credit of government is a promise to pay; our gold money is then the credit or promise of the government to pay, coupled with the immediate discharge of the obligation. The credit and its redemption are united; this transaction, this discharge of obligation is too rapid. There should be in every credit system the element of time, here totally wanting. The thing of value, gold, is in itself valuable, and is made to represent itself, and when gold money is withdrawn from circulation business is chaos, and the credit of the government is locked up in safe deposit vaults. Gold money is at once a pledge and the fulfillment of that pledge; originally when money came back for redemption, there remained values in the possession of the issuer.

Our government makes the attempt by a reserve fund of not less than $100,000,000 in gold. Has the government no ownership in anything of value but a minimum sum of gold money? If it has no basis, no possessions but gold money for its currency, it has outlived its usefulness as a base of money supply for the people. It would be safer for the people to buy their own gold and silver from the miners and put their own stamp upon the metal; this would become the representative of the valuable property of the individual and be an honest pledge.

If gold is our only government product of value, it is too valuable to remain in circulation. It should be hoarded and its representative should be something of little value, bearing the stamp of our government. The coin of the realm should have a value because of a substantial basis, and carry the weight of the stamp of the United States mint backed by our land values, our great national wealth, our labor product, our army and navy.

Practically the business of the world needs silver money, and even our friends who make the gold standard would be pleased to-day if the people of the United States had plenty of silver money. There is an abundance of silver; as long as gold is money, silver will stand side by side with it in use, if not considered of fixed relative value, They began their career together, long before there was any money in the world, standing in the same relation that they do to-day—gold more valuable than silver because of their dedication, respectively, to the worship of the sun and moon.

Metal money is after all a remnant of barbarism. Our advanced civilization requires a simpler method of exchange. A perfected system of fiat money must be developed, based upon the real values of our country, and the question for the American people to answer is this: What are real values? Until it is answered there will be no restoration of confidence or safe adjustment of monetary affairs.

In our two great conflicts of the past our paper money was made valuable by the victories of our armies. The money stamp and the flag are closely associated. It would be well to adopt the flag as the symbol for one side of our coin, and on this side could be engraved appropriately, "In God We Trust." A great republic should seek simplicity in its coinage, in its business methods, and establish honesty as the fundamental principle. Free coinage of silver is objected to as giving miners or silver speculators more than the silver is worth. This must be so if silver is to remain demonetized, or else the government will pay the fraction of a dollar for its silver to coin, and pass it on to the people as worth one dollar. Our two metals can safely be used, gold one-sixteenth of an ounce and silver one ounce to a dollar. Gold is virtually withdrawn from circulation in the East; it is used in California; but why could not America with advantage have silver, one ounce, the basis of estimate, and buy gold from our own people for foreign import? Europe will keep the gold standard. Silver could be preserved so long as precious metals are used as money, which should not be long. There is much thinking to be done in this direction.

Our laws denominate as real property, the lands, real estate, and movable property is personal property; yet our medium of exchange is based upon the most fleeting and mercurial class of personal property, gold money, and this property is limited in quantity. Fifty dollars per capita is needed in circulation to transact our business; there are only eighteen dollars, possibly not more than ten dollars, and for this ten dollars there are one hundred dollars of credit; when there is a panic it is caused from fear. Our people withdraw their money and leave a credit which no one will respect. The people at large demand their money from the bankers. The government issues the money of the country, and the bankers are the helpless go-between, with no power to control either the people on the one hand or the government on the other. The government is so unwieldy, being "of the people," it takes a long time to act or come to the rescue. No man is wise enough to-day to point a way out, or has the power to restore business confidence and business values. Men are without work, women and children are without food.

"No man is wise enough?" Then may not women think and study this great question of finance? There is something wrong that sends our money across the sea to pay for imported luxuries and leaves our people without money. The question of money is the most important one, from a material standpoint, before the American people to-day, and they wait with cruel anxiety on Congress to bring relief to the wealthiest nation of the world. With products of the soil never more abundant, with mines of gold and silver the richest in the world, with peace and prosperity, and the whole world for our guests, with storehouses filled with money, neither famine nor pestilence within our borders, we cry for help. We are poverty stricken and panic stricken in the midst of plenty.

NEED OF AGREEMENT OF PROTESTANTS AND CATHOLICS ON ETHICS IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY REV. N. D. HILLIS.

The International Sunday-school Association reports eleven million children and youth in Protestant Sunday-schools, while the Catholics have four millions under religious instruction. This leaves ten millions practically outside of all church influence. This fact is big with peril. It represents dangers portentous. The need is urgent. The opportunity is strategic. The sole remedy is plain. Ethics and morals must be re-enthroned in the public schools. Protestants and Catholics have been at variance. The expulsion of the Bible from schools has led the Protestant to place his children in private schools, and the Catholic to found parochial schools. Thus the common schools have suffered on two sides. The time is ripe for compromise. Dr. John Henry Barrows, with representatives of all the Protestant churches, and Cardinal Gibbons, with his prelates, have found common standing ground for religious conference. Surely they can also find common ground for the instruction of the youth of the land in good morals. If the Parliament of Religions is not mist and moonshine, conference should be had and agreement reached as to certain common principles of ethics to be taught in our schools. As for example the Ten Commandments, teaching the youth how to carry himself in the home, the market place and the forum; the Sermon on the Mount, presenting the positive virtues bearing upon conduct and character; the supremacy of conscience, individual responsibility for influence, and the Lord's prayer, called the "Universal Prayer." On these ethical principles hang all the law and the prophets. They contain moral leaven for raising and lightening the dead social lump. Obedience to these laws is liberty; disobedience, slavery. They concern all men as men. They are as binding upon every child as the law of food, air, exercise. Let President Barrows call a conference of these assembled delegates to confer and agree now and here, upon some common, ethical principles to be taught in the common schools. The people of this nation through their school boards have been eager for such a conference and agreement for the last ten years.

No church, Catholic or Protestant, will prove itself an enemy of the public schools by refusing coöperation. Having proclaimed our fraternalism from this national housetop, let us also proclaim our practical plans for lessening the nation's want and misery through moral illiteracy. Doubtless there have been some mistakes upon both sides. If so, let the past perish save as it guards us against future blunders. The crying need of the hour is agreement upon the part of Catholics and Protestants to reënthrone ethics and morals in the public schools.

The largest wastes of the nation are through ignorance and sin. Failure is stupidity. Success is always knowing how. Engineers tell us that 80 per cent of the coal goes through the chimney. Chemists tell us that 60 per cent of food is wasted through improper cooking. Agricultural experts prove that the yield of fields and vineyards can be doubled by wiser methods of husbandry. Wealth is not in things of iron, wood and stone. Wealth is in the brain that organizes the iron. Pig iron is worth $20 a ton; made into horseshoes, $90; into knife blades, $200; watch springs, $1,000. Pig iron, $20—brain power, $980. Millet bought a yard of canvas for one franc; paid two more francs for colors; upon this canvas he spread his genius, giving us the "Angelus." Now his intelligence carried sixty cents' worth of raw material up to a value of $105,000. The first attempt to make watches by machinery failed, because the workmen were ignorant. They broke the delicate machines, and wasted the valuable materials. Twenty years later a second attempt was made, and successfully, because the average intelligence of the workman had increased. It is believed by wise students that one-half of the models in the patent office are impracticable to-day, because the mass of the people are not educated up to the point when they can economically manufacture these mechanisms or properly use them. The average value of each man to the nation is $650. The illiterate man who cannot read digs ditches at $1 a day. Now, teach him the first reader, and he is worth $1.25; the second reader earns him $1.50; when he can read the fourth reader he produces $2 a day. Of much higher value is moral knowledge. Conscience in the bookkeeper has a cash value. Integrity is a commodity. Untaught workmen punish their employers by seeing to it that the machines break and the materials are wasted. A manufacturer recently told me that the morality and justice in employés toward his machines would add 20 per cent to profits to be divided between himself and his men. The average productive value of each citizen in 1890 was $650. That is, he represents a steam engine, costing about $10,000, and yielding returns at six per cent. One hundred and fifty thousand of these wealth-producing engines either burnt out or blew up through collision last year, or were laid aside because of moral ignorance touching intemperance. The nation's wealth is now sixty-five billions. Its chief wastes are through moral ignorance. The great tools to be invented in the future for increasing these billions are intellectual tools and moral instruments.

In view of the nine million untaught youth, and of thousands of godless villages and country districts there are reasons for believing we are passing through a crisis in our history. Our forefathers met their crisis hour, and founded their institutions on God's Word. That was a grand and noble work. Our fathers, during the late war, sought to lay anew the old foundations, broader and deeper and mightier for the world. That was a grander and nobler work. To preserve and strengthen the foundations our fathers laid, to bring our institutions to the point of highest efficiency, to solve the intricate and perplexing problems of this age, this—and nothing less than this—is the sublime task of our generation.

The history of our country has largely been the history of men sustained by their sublime faith in God. From this belief in God has streamed invincible courage into the will, and from it have sprung those magnificent enthusiasms that have matched and mastered the giants of despotism and slavery; and not only has this belief given our soldiers their heroic courage, our scholars their stainless lives; it has given our commanding American society its conquering courage, and been the spring of its noblest impulses, its most energetic forces.

And so long as our children are trained in these truths and our youth hold to this surpassing belief in God's Word, so long as we continue to connect man with God, and holding fast to His eternal Word, maintain the superlative supremacy of man's soul above mere brain and nerve tissue, so long will our commerce extend; so long will our literature and the arts advance; so long will our institutions continue firm as the mountains and stars. But whenever this belief in God and this knowledge of His Word shall depart from us and we play false to our fathers' faith, an immense calamity will befall our commanding American society. Without it republican institutions will lose their efficiency. Generous liberties without it will lose their consecration. Eloquence without it will lose its dignity. Universities without it will lose their glory from library and chapel. Its fall would be the most disastrous moral wreck the world has ever known. Its victory is to be the sublimest in the annals of time.

WOMAN'S DRESS FROM THE SOCIOLOGICAL STANDPOINT.

II.

BY HELEN GILBERT ECOB.

Man's dress is too much in need of reformation to serve as a model, notwithstanding the coarse and hackneyed affirmation that woman's desire is toward an assumption of his fashions. She only asks for a costume which does not exhaust vitality by unnecessary weight, so loose as to give every part of the body freedom of action, and so short as to obviate the necessity of using the hands to keep the skirt clear of filth and dampness. The desire is certainly not unreasonable. Every man who scoffs, and every small boy who derides, would be put to silence if compelled to take a half-hour's walk on a stormy day, equipped in those highly extolled skirts which "clear the ground." Equally efficacious would be the experiment of going up stairs "carrying the baby and the bowl of bread and milk," tripping and twisting at every step.

A practical and definite aim in the movement for better dress is to introduce a costume which shall allow the free and healthful use of the body in exercise and labor. Surely, every woman, from the grand dame of the drawing-room to the humble kitchen maid, is in need of such a costume. The duties which in the natural division of labor fall to the lot of women, the new responsibilities and occupations which are opening to them, the great stress which educators put upon out-of-door exercise as a means of physical culture, make evolution along the dress line imperative with all classes. With higher education and broader views of life, women of all ranks are beginning to recognize a kinship of needs and interests. They cannot expect those who lead sheltered lives, whose housework is done by proxy, and who may stay at home or order a carriage on a stormy day to fully appreciate the great need of freedom in dress. Moral conviction must be reinforced by a sense of practical need before definite results can be secured.

For this reason the call for freedom and common sense in dress does not come from those dilettante ladies who inaugurate the novelties of fashion. The demand comes from the truly cultured, noble-minded and intelligent women who are rapidly taking a leading place in the great reforms of the day. The work assumed the proportions of an organized effort under the direction of the National Council of Women which met in Washington in 1891. A committee was appointed to study the needs of the problem and suggest a design which should embody the principles of rational dress. The report of the committee was adopted at a business meeting held in Chicago, December, 1892. It is as follows:

As the Executive Board and the Committee on Dress agree in deprecating anything in the nature of a uniform for women, our recommendations will allow large liberty for taste and judgment. Our hope is to deliver women from certain hard and fast lines, within which fashion has so long confined them.

(a) It has been customary to clothe the head regardless of comfort. Our recommendation is to relieve the head from unnecessary weight, and furnish a proper protection from sunshine and cold.

(b) We take pleasure in recommending the union underwear of varying texture, price and style, the equestrian trousers, and any properly adjusted waist, or none, as forming a very perfect system of underclothing, which is a necessary condition of freedom and comfort. Utility and beauty, of which proportion is an essential element, demand freedom of outline, and outside dress should conform to this principle.

(c) Numerous beautiful designs, some of them including the short waist of the Empire period, have been offered to us by artists and others, which each may adapt according to her individual needs. Among these are three costumes in which the principles named are practically applied. These costumes are:

The Syrian dress, suggested by our English sisters; the Gymnasium dress, which is acknowledged to be graceful and beautiful; the American costume, consisting of a short-skirted gown with leggings.

Recognizing these different designs as merely suggestive, great latitude and variety are possible in general effect. . . The dressing of the neck should be loose and easy, whatever style of collar may be preferred; and the sleeves, however cut, should give the greatest possible freedom to the arms. The best authorities agree that the hands and feet require as much freedom as any other parts of the body; therefore, easy fitting gloves and shoes loose across the balls, with room for the toes, and with low, broad heels are recommended.

The outside wrap should be loose enough to permit unrestrained motion to every member of the body. The above is respectfully submitted as outlining, at least in essentials, a reasonable dress for all women who are engaged in the activities of life.

The bodice usually adopted in this style of dress is a loose or blouse waist, worn with or without some form of jacket. There is no attempt at tight fit. The trunk of the body is as free as that of men. Another feature worthy of mention is the pocket. This important auxiliary is not adroitly tucked away under folds and gathers. Pockets occupy a place of honor. One woman who spoke at the recent Congress of Representative Women, a professor in one of our well-known colleges, was the proud possessor of fourteen pockets.

The essential feature of the costumes suggested by the National Council is the form of the skirt. The Syrian, adopted by the English Rational Dress Society, has already become a favorite with Americans. The skirt is gathered at the bottom and this fulness is caught around each leg and fastened to a lining of drawers. The skirt is therefore dual only at the bottom and the division is scarcely noticeable. The advantage of the Syrian over an open skirt of the same length is that it follows the leg in walking and, being lifted with it, is not soiled, wet, or bedrabbled. For the same reason the wearer can mount or descend a stairway without tripping on or dragging the skirt; she can step from a street car, or other conveyance, without danger of catching the clothing and falling headlong.

The Gymnastic suit is made on the principle of the Syrian and resembles full Zouave trousers. It is a costume especially desirable for housework. In such a costume the housewife would accomplish her duties with the minimum of inconvenience and fatigue. The Gymnastic suit is also recommended for young children. A teacher of physical culture tells us of her little nieces who wear the Gymnastic suit during play hours. They climb trees, jump and run as freely as their brothers. Who can estimate the advantage which would accrue to coming generations if everybody's daughters could grow up under such conditions?

The costume described as "The American" is another form of short skirt. It falls below the knees and is met at this point by gaiters made of the same material.

There can be no question as to the convenience of a costume constructed after these models; and in utility we find an element essential to beauty. Indeed, considered artistically, the short skirt meets all the demands of the critic. It offers the same opportunity for color effects, choice of fabric and study of ornamentation as the long-skirted gown. The only sacrifice is that of "long, graceful lines," and this sacrifice is only seeming. No one proposes a wholesale condemnation of flowing draperies, but their character limits the occasion of use to hours of leisure, when the movements of the body may be slow and sinuous. "Long lines" are beautiful for the woman who is posing on a pedestal, but when this woman descends from the pedestal to go to market, wash dishes, take care of baby or play lawn tennis, they are inconvenient and burdensome. The short skirt retains the effect of good lines better than the long one which must be pulled, twisted, pinned or dexterously kicked out of the way in the exigencies of labor and exercise. It is said that a customer once asked of Worth, "Why do you not design a costume expressing your ideal of the beautiful?" "I have," replied this distinguished modiste, "but you will not wear it." "What was it?" pursued the interested inquirer. "Madame, it resembled the Turkish."

We sometimes hear it said that skirts are a badge of inferiority. This is not true, for originally both men and women wore skirts; they are still worn by men in the Orient. Skirts simply indicate a lower stage of evolution. The epoch at which a people emancipates itself from such inconveniences marks a period in the metamorphosis of intellectual and moral development. Only a few centuries have passed since men of the Anglo-Saxon race were prepared to put personal comfort before personal vanity. A similar evolution will doubtless occur in the Orient, as Eastern manhood advances to higher civilization. The fact that women are beginning to think seriously of rational dress, is therefore interesting from a sociological point of view. The costumes suggested by the National Council indicate an intellectual and moral metamorphosis similar to that which has been wrought in the dress of men.

The propriety of a costume conforming to the divinely ordained laws of locomotion cannot be gainsaid. That woman, the weaker vessel, should be compelled by public opinion to cripple the lower part of the body in garments to which no right-minded man would submit, is an indication that our theories of modesty are false in principle. The veiled face of our Oriental sisters is another example of false modesty. It means that society is degraded. With education and Christian civilization the veil is cast aside. Our standards of modesty vary with climate, hours and occasions. We want a law universal in application, equally binding on man and woman. It is obvious that some kind of a two-legged dress is the only one adapted to two-legged beings. Women cannot, in the name of modesty, afford to put aside this profoundly normal, because divine order.

The designs suggested by the National Council are the best which can now be devised, but it is probable that the ideal dress for human beings is yet to be evolved. This dress would necessitate also a reconstruction of masculine attire. This much may be prophesied of the ideal dress: It will not emphasize distinctions of sex. Miss Frances E. Willard comments on this phase of the subject in the Hygienic Review of June, 1893:

A lady missionary and physician in China once told me that there was less immorality in that country because the dress of the sexes was less distinct, and I have a theory that the emphasis placed upon sex by differences of attire in Occidental countries makes an appeal to the imagination that is most harmful. The more we can [illegible] relate the appearance, interests, tastes, pursuits and aspirations of men and women, the more rational will be their sense of companionship and the greater their consequent happiness. The woman question is really the human question.

The general structure of the body is the same for men and women. Each is blessed with a muscular system, each has a trunk, arms and legs, which act according to the same general laws. Because women have essentially the same life with men, because they enter into the same activities, we ought to throw off all conventional disabilities.

No reform is born fully fledged. The improvement of dress is yet in the "long clothes" stage. Before fruition there must be a season of seed sowing and tentative endeavor. We see now only the preliminary symptoms of an evolution which must come as men and women are more and more possessed with aspirations to fulfill the highest possibilities of life. We cannot hasten these great cycles of progress by impatient agitation or precipitous action. Already women strong of heart have adopted the short-skirted costume, believing that "the way to resume is to resume." A number were worn on the streets of Chicago during the Woman's Congress and awakened no passing criticism. United effort would make the adoption of the short costume easy of accomplishment. In our opinion the best place to introduce it is in the home and on the street on rainy days. The work of preparation is going steadily on through the spoken and written word. There is no reason for discouragement if there are backward as well as forward impulses, since this is the way of progress in all lines. When the fullness of time is come we shall find that all is ready, costume, wearer and public opinion.

AN ALL-ALIVE GOSPEL.

BY REV. R. F. HORTON.

We must look at the substance of the messages we are delivering, and the very form of the gospel we preach. Does it not sometimes strike you, when you have the New Testament in your hands, that there is a strange difference between the gospel in the nineteenth century and the gospel in the first? This theological gospel; this ritual gospel; this controversial gospel; how strangely different! Does it not strike you that the whole mode of reducing the Christian gospel to a number of logical propositions, even through so excellent a formula as a creed, is quite un-Christian? Does it not strike you that you cannot present the gospel to the heathen in the formula of Geneva, Westminster or Canterbury? If that had been the way, these formulas would have been made at the beginning. The gospel moved to its victory without them, and they hinder rather than help its victory now. The faith of the gospel is like a beautiful and simple strain of music which floated down from the heavens centuries ago, entered the world, and took captive the spirit of man. At first the strain was echoed in the hearts of those who heard, and all wanted to hear it for themselves. But little by little men began to think it necessary to write down the score of the music, and as they wrote it down there were certain variations in its notation, in its harmonizing, in its orchestration, and when the differences were observed they began to dispute about them, and each declared his notation was the notation, and as the conflict grew louder, men ceased to play the music at all, or to listen for it; they were entirely engaged with the scores. When it occurred to them they must take the message to the heathen, they took their score books, and each assured the heathen that his was the rendering of the music which came down from heaven; and then your Uganda is torn with the conflicts of the men who have two scores of the music, and who try to persuade the heathen that they are each right, and the heathen do not care, nor do I, nor you, but they say: 'Why do you not play the music?' Give them the symphony; let it ring out the same glad sound that came into the world centuries ago; and all men will hear and be glad; they will listen and be ravished by the music that fell from heaven. 'The peace on earth, and good will to men,' and the coming of the Lord of light, and life, and peace; this music of the risen Christ as one who lives for evermore; this gospel from His lips and from His heart; a gospel unstereotyped, unfrozen, all-alive; this is the preparation for the highway of our God.

NOT failure, but low aim is crime.—Lowell.

GOD does not deceive us, even amid the most distressing perplexities of life; and it may be filled, not with passing illusions, but heaven's realities. If men sometimes become no better than sheep or goats, having a blind life; no better than tigers in their rage, serpents in their malice, or insects in their meanness, it is because they do not recognize that we are eternal beings, and that heaven commences on earth.—Archdeacon Farrar.

LAUS DEO.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I trust no one who has THE UNION SIGNAL will fail to read, in the issue of September 14, Mrs. Ingalls' inspiring report of the action taken in regard to the quarterly temperance lessons at the recent International Sunday-school convention at St. Louis.

It is but just to say that I was invited to give an address at this convention, and that the time assigned was all one could desire. It was a source of deep regret that owing to the ill-health of my sister in my eastern home, requiring my presence there, it was impossible for me to be present. Mrs. Woodbridge was also invited and unable to accept. Mr. B. F. Jacobs, chairman of the executive committee, wrote me, August 25, that if I could not be present he should telegraph to Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, inviting her to speak. This telegram, if sent, failed to reach Mrs. Hoffman.

And thus the absences referred to in Mrs. Ingalls' report are explained. At the time this was cause of much concern to me but now no one can say that it was a victory secured by "the undue influence of the women." It has been said both in state and international conventions that under the white heat of enthusiasm aroused by the appeals of our representatives, votes have been cast and action taken which "a sober second thought" has not sustained. While this is an implied acknowledgment of an influence for which we give supreme thanks, it is a larger assurance of progress to have the issue decided entirely on its merits as an outcome and expression of the conviction for which this department has prayed and worked unceasingly for sixteen years.

This decision was the "sober second thought" of the Pittsburg convention of 1890, and a greater victory than that since it is an emphatic approval of a tested plan. For a year and a half we have had the quarterly temperance lessons by themselves. While there have been much opposition and disparagement from high sources which sought at the convention to set aside the action at Pittsburg, the great army of earnest Sunday-school workers, the world over, has expressed most grateful thanks for, and appreciation of this open door for Bible temperance teaching.

To all those good friends who have sent me adverse articles and paragraphs, asking if I would not reply, and what I was going to do to prevent backward steps being taken, I desire, first, to express my thanks for their interest and solicitude and, second, to say that it seemed to me best to avoid newspaper controversy and instead to spend time and strength in pressing the practical work of making these lessons and this opportunity, as effective as possible. If those opposed to our plan choose to deal in negations, to emphasize what cannot be done, we prefer to deal with the positive side, and by all wise means prove what can be done and that "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," is the most effective weapon in this battle with intemperance.

It gives pain unspeakable that any one of our good and wise and, no doubt, sincere brothers should or could use such a phrase as "limited by the poverty of Scriptures," when these are so gloriously overflowing with an inexhaustible supply of principle and precept against intemperance.

While this intimation of the paucity of Bible as well as other opposition has been a heavy burden during the year there have been such other positive assurances that no backward steps would be taken at this convention that the result was reasonably expected.

Secretary Stanton once said: "The United States government never redresses a wrong till the people demand it. Reach the heart of the people and that wrong will cease." This is exactly the effort of all temperance reform—to reach the heart of the Sunday school people.

Most sincere thanks are due Mr. B. F. Jacobs, chairman of the executive committee. When in Chicago last June I had a conference with him in regard to the convention and its probable action. His assurances were most emphatic that no backward steps would be taken. Again he wrote me under date of August 25: "Personally, I am thoroughly satisfied with the plan as it is. If anything different is proposed at St. Louis I will stand with you and oppose it." He kept his word grandly. A minister who was present at the convention said that Mr. Jacobs brought many wavering ones to the affirmative side by saying that he had pledged the preservation of the temperance lessons to certain women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and if the convention receded from its position on that question he should resign his place as chairman of the executive committee. We give thanks, that, while so much of reproach rests upon Chicago, at the present time, for the violation of human and divine law in regard to temperance and Sabbath observance in connection with the Columbian Exposition, that as the Chicago memorial was potent in securing the decision for quarterly temperance lessons at Pittsburg, so her chief representative at St. Louis was a most powerful factor in the recent victory. That the Sunday-school people honored him for his positive conviction and the brave utterance of the same was evinced by choosing him as president of the permanent World's Sunday-school Organization. Of his address upon that occasion the Sunday-school Times said: "It riveted attention and swept the convention with a holy fervor, which found expression, not so much in applause, as in earnest ejaculations and prayers on all sides."

To Rev. W. F. Crafts, who has always been a true friend and helper of the W. C. T. U., we are greatly indebted for his masterly handling of the resolutions; to Mr. J. J. McLaren, of Quebec, whose strong speech I am told, stirred the convention greatly; to Rev. Dr. Milner, of Kansas, for his "thrilling appeal"; to Rev. John Potts and many others, who gave their words and prayers and action to secure a decision so nearly unanimous that there were but three dissenting votes. Last, but not least, I desire to express my deep gratitude to Mrs. Ingalls for her interest and effort and prompt report. It is not often that one National superintendent has such an opportunity to aid another; but if it ever falls to my lot to be able to aid her department in the royal way she has mine, it will be most gladly improved.

This victory means much for the world as well as for America, since it is estimated that some seventeen million are reached in this and other countries through the International Sunday-school lessons. How distant lands are influenced through what is done in the United States, finds illustration by a single incident. Last March an article by the National superintendent on "The Present Status of the Sunday-school Temperance Work," appeared in the Advance, of Chicago, and soon after the following communication was received by her from Rev. L. S. Crawford, of the American Mission, Broussa, Turkey, in Asia: "Your article in the Advance of March 23 has made a great impression upon us here. We are working along the same lines among the Greeks, especially of this region. Is it persuming too much upon your kindness if we ask you to send us some of the temperance leaflets of which you speak? We want to keep in touch with the newest thought, and should like to translate some of your tracts into Greek. May God's blessing rest upon the good work in which you are engaged."

I trust that all those who have helped make these facts possible will take their share in this victory along with those, who at the convention, so nobly stood for practical, aggressive and continuous gospel temperance. Every effort, however small, has helped to hasten the day which Isaiah foretold when "all Thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of Thy children."

A VISIT TO THE MINNEAPOLIS W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Any man or woman who doubts the business capacity of woman should take a trip to Minneapolis, and stop at the W. C. T. U. coffee house, as a guest of the Central union. I spent a week or more there, and I wondered more and more. The building is several stories high, and the front is about a hundred feet. On the first floor are the large dining rooms, three in number, seating four hundred. As I sat there through the dinner hour watching the flow of people in and out for two hours, I was seized with a desire to tell the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL of it.

Twelve to fourteen hundred meals are served daily, about four thousand napkins washed daily, and from top to bottom all goes like clock-work. Eighty are employed in the place; the waiters with white jackets and aprons and the waitresses in spotless dresses fill orders with wonderful dispatch, and the kindly eye of the manager, Mrs. S. V. Avery, always beams a welcome.

The most interesting part of all is that the profit of this business is all used in missionary work. Mrs. Avery meets the help every Sunday morning in the Assembly Hall where a Sunday service is conducted. On week days this hall is furnished with small tables and chairs, and young men and women who work in stores or elsewhere can come here with their lunch, sit down to a clean table and order hot tea, coffee or milk or, if they prefer, a most inexpensive lunch. Papers are scattered about, and a nice piano in the room makes this truly a place of rest for many a working girl. Meals are served on Sunday only to the family. Let me say to unions in large cities, "Go thou and do likewise."

A Loyal Temperance Legion, and a kindergarten, and a regular missionary are supported by this work, and beside the employés are raising one hundred dollars for the Temple.

One of the ladies has had charge of a branch of work known as outings for children; this summer they sent about two hundred and fifty children of poor families into the country for two or three weeks. I spent some days at a farm where two of these children were being cared for, and I wish more of the unions could give a like joy to the poor little children who hardly know what fresh air or a full meal means.

On the Wing.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

He (Abraham) staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God: and being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform.—Romans 4:20, 21.

A most interesting article in regard to the Temple appears in the Attica, N. Y., News, from the pen of Mrs. A. M. Wickes. We are sorry we have only room for a short extract from it. She says: "There are several reasons why it would seem that every woman visiting Chicago at this time should feel it her bounden duty and great privilege to seek out and look upon this immense and beautiful structure (the Temple). In the first place, it is the conception and achievement of a woman. This being, as Victor Hugo has said, woman's century, we are all eyes and ears to see what woman will do next. That she has not fallen below expectation in this undertaking is certain, for the Temple is admittedly not one of the most beautiful, but the most beautiful building of the kind in the city, and when one has seen Chicago this means a great deal. In the next place, it stands for a grander idea than any other building in Chicago, with the exception of the churches. It stands for the principle of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, insisted on as it never has been before, that the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, and no one has the right to defile it or injure it by the use of liquor or anything else. In the next place the Temple is the grandest monument on earth to the heroic and triumphant faith, courage, enterprise and executive ability of women. The event has proved that the unparalleled attempt was not a chimera or a mistake. It stands completed and occupied to-day in the heart of the city of Chicago, on a corner which business experts consider the best in the city for an office building. It is not yet fully paid for, and is not yet in the entire possession of the women, but the faith that projected it and the powers that have been behind it from the beginning, are unchanged. The monstrous aggregate of rents, already $170,000 yearly, is rolling in, and sooner, we mistrust, than the Sanballats and Tobiases, the much-afraids and the ready-to-halts imagine, there will be a doxology going up from the unions all over the land, which will not, to say the least, bolster up the courage of men who are making their living off the vice and the weakness of their fellows."

In Temple receipts in THE UNION SIGNAL, Aug. 17, $4 was credited to Miss Jennie Clark; it should have been credited to Mrs. Bell, Matawan, N. J. It was money found among the effects of her only darling little son after his death. Miss Clark writes: "Mrs. Bell could think of no place she would like better to send it than to the Temple." "Some people," adds Miss Clark, "are saying that this money should be put directly into temperance work instead of a costly building, but these dear children's money and that of many others would never be given to any other object than one tangible, lasting and beautiful."

Mrs. M. F. Emerson, superintendent Temple work for the W. C. T. U., of Parsons, Kas., sends a check for $40, which completes a $100 pledge; of this amount, her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Emerson, secured $10.20 by forming a Baby Band. Two of the names on the list are the twin babies of Mrs. Briggs, a most faithful white-ribboner, who shows her loyalty by naming her baby boys for the two great temperance leaders, Clare Willard and Clive Somerset. Bearing such names they surely cannot become other than temperance men. Mrs. Emerson writes: "Some of our ladies returning from the World's Fair say that no Kansas unions were represented on the walls of the beautiful Temple. If this is still the case we would like to head the list." This is a mistake, as the Lawrence W. C. T. U. heads the tablet. The Parsons union will have the honor of second place on it. We hope more names will soon follow, as several unions in Kansas have pledged $100.

The Florence, N. J., W. C. T. U. sends $5 toward a tablet for Mrs. Thacher; the W. C. T. U. of Grangeville, Cal., sends $20; Westmoreland county, Pa., W. C. T. U. sends $30 on $100 pledge; $8 comes from Salina county, Nebraska, W. C. T. U. on its pledge; $10 has been received on Wright county, Minn., W. C. T. U. pledge; $6 comes from Raymore, Mo., union, making $25 paid on its pledge.

***

The Massachusetts tablet in the Willard corridors in the Temple records the following list of unions which have contributed $100 to the erection of the building: Maldon union, Dorchester union, Leominster union, Cambridgeport union, Boston union, Bristol county union, Jamaica Plain union, Adams union, North Adams union, Brookline union, Upham's Corner union, Boston; Wollaston union, Armory Hill union, Fall River union, Worcester union, No. 1; Fall River Y. W. C. T. U., Dorchester Y. W. C. T. U., Charlestown Y. W. C. T. U.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"LIVE IT DOWN!"

Has your life a bitter sorrow?
Live it down.
Think about a bright to-morrow,
Live it down.
You will find it never pays
Just to sit, wet-eyed, and gaze
On the grave of vanished days;
Live it down.

Is disgrace your galling burden?
Live it down.
You can win a brave heart's guerdon;
Live it down.
Make your life so free of blame,
That the lustre of your fame
Shall hide all the olden shame;
Live it down.

Has your heart a secret trouble?
Live it down.
Useless griefs will make it double,
Live it down.
Do not water it with tears—
Do not feed it with your fears—
Do not nurse it through the years—
Live it down.

Have you made some awful error?
Live it down.
Do not hide your face in terror;
Live it down.
Look the world square in the eyes;
Go ahead as one who tries
To be honored, ere he dies;
Live it down.

AFTER AUNT PATIENCE WENT HOME.

An Infant Class Lesson.

II.

BY MRS. MC VEAN-ADAMS.

It made some confusion to have Aunt Patience return so suddenly after having planned to spend the winter at David's, in Kansas.

John's wife told me all about it. At the Corners they had long been trying to grade the Sunday-school. But the great boys and tall girls who had been in Aunt Patience's infant class for five years, made such lament when placed in other classes, that the only way to keep them at all happy in the school seemed to be to let them all stay with the wee tots who had just become old enough to be in the infant class,—and Aunt Patience did have a wonderful way with children.

When she was safely away for a few months the superintendent made up a class for the new minister's wife from the larger ones, and left the rest of the infant class to his daughter who was just home from college. But when Aunt Patience returned more than half of them swarmed back to her, and the very first Sunday there was trouble.

Just what Aunt Patience taught them no one else heard, but she read some newspaper slips aloud, and there were tears on several little pink cheeks, and boys' fists were doubled ominously. The children could scarcely wait for the closing prayer before they began excited comments to any who would listen, particularly the mothers.

On the way home great plans were unfolded to astonished parents and older sisters, of how they were going to have a society all their very own—"an L. T. L."—at Aunt Patience's house, and it was "to keep little babies from being killed by the dreadful liquor." "No, it was to vote the liquor away just as soon as we boys can vote," said one man of six. "And girls vote it away too," chimed in his sister.

John's wife was a little startled that week to receive a visit from Mrs. Masters. They had just moved to the Corners, and was from New York. John's wife had not called, feeling in awe of the fine lady. Now she made her welcome as cordially as possible.

Mrs. Masters wanted to see Aunt Patience, and when that dear soul came in she began very graciously: "Please tell me, Miss Parsons, just what you said to the children on Sunday that has excited them so much. I am sure they must have misunderstood you. My Dollie was nearly ill; she is a very susceptible little thing; and Rex, our boy, said that you read a piece out of a paper about a man's throwing a glass dish and cutting his baby's head so that it died; threw it, while drunk, at his wife, and missed her and hit the baby, and the man was placed under arrest, without bail."

"Yes, that is what I read to them. Rex has remembered it wonderfully well," said Aunt Patience.

"Too well," said Mrs. Masters. "I must say, Miss Parsons, that I fail to see the object one could have in harrowing up those tender little hearts over such blood and thunder stories. They will learn the evils of the world all too soon; we ought to keep such crimes from their knowledge. Mr. Masters is quite indignant."

As Mrs. Masters paused to take breath, Aunt Patience began, rather abruptly, on another subject.

"When I was coming home we had to wait at Junction City and I walked around to see the new school-house. The children came dancing out, seemed as if the yard and both sidewalks were just full of them, for the new-fangled Kindergarten is in that building. All at once I heard a queer noise behind me, and around a corner came a little dog, running fast, with foam flying from his mouth, and snapping and snarling right towards the crowds of children."

"Oh, horrors! a mad dog! What did you do?" said Mrs. Masters, growing pale.

"Well," answered Aunt Patience; "what could I do? If I screamed 'mad dog!' some of those children would have been dreadfully excited, and would have cried and run. They would have to learn about such things soon enough anyway, without my shocking them."

"But—why—the danger!" stammered Mrs. Masters.

"Yes, I know that," said Aunt Patience. "A few of them might be bitten and die, but it wouldn't do any good for the rest to know it, because they could not prevent it. However, I did not have time to do anything before a tall young man came whirling along on a bicycle, and I heard a sharp crack, and there lay the poor little dog, feebly kicking its last, while the young man rushed on, a smoking pistol in his hand."

"Oh, I'm so glad," said Mrs. Masters; "but you puzzled me, I must own, by your line of reasoning just now, and I wish to resume the previous subject, if you have any explanation to offer."

"This is the previous subject, and this is my explanation," said Aunt Patience. "While children are daily dying from the terrible effects of strong drink, and grown people do not prevent the traffic, I am called, clearly, to organize a children's crusade against their worst enemy. Before we realize it, our baby boys will vote—yes, and our girls, too—and even now they can make public sentiment. 'Out of the mouths of babes,' you know, the blessed Book says. Last week Mrs. Grey's Bessie was run over by a drunken driver. None of our babes are safe. I tell you I am called to this work, and I hope to organize these little ones to learn how to fight their worst foe."

"You put the matter in a new light to me. I will think it over," said Mrs. Masters.

WOMAN'S QUEERNESS.

BY ANNA C. BRACKETT.

I once knew an old New England woman, who used to comfort her soul with the frequent exclamation:

"Well, most folks in the world are mighty queer, and I am glad I'm not one of 'em."

This used to be to me in my childhood rather a mystical saying, but I have since found some meaning in it.

A few days ago I was in the "ladies' room" of a railroad terminus, and the official had just announced the departure of the next train.

A throng of women and children was surging through the door to take their places, when one woman in the midst of the crush suddenly said to her companion: "Let's wait for a little while," and, turning round, the two stood immovable there, forcing twenty or thirty other women, many of them with small children, to stop, to turn, and to find their way around the obstacles.

As I walked round them I thought of my old friend's saying and wondered why they did not see that they were directly in the way of many others.

I went down the muddy street in a hurry, but when I came to the crossing there were three women there waiting, and they had stopped directly upon it, blocking up the way. They were entirely forgetful of the fact that the crossing was intended for any one else than themselves, or, indeed, that any one else was in the city.

Every one who came up had to walk around them in the dirt, push them one side, or wait patiently behind them till their car, which was half a block off, should arrive and take them on board.

Finally I did succeed in crossing, and was about at the door of my destination when a young woman pushed by me and hurried in through the heavy swinging door, never looking to see whether there might be any one behind her and letting go of the door as soon as she had entered. Released, and under the force of a newly-tightened spring, it came flying back against the luckily stiff brim of my hat and nearly knocked it off my head.

I thought that "mighty queer," too.

When I had safely passed the ordeal of the doors, on my exit I hailed an omnibus nearly filled with women, taking the seat next the door, the only one vacant.

The pavement was not of the best and the vehicle not at all steady. I had my fare in my hand and hesitated whether to wait for a stop before venturing the length of the passage, and not one of all the women offered to pass up the fare, though I never saw men in an omnibus fail in this little courtesy to women or to each other.

This also would have struck me as "queer" had I not learned, after many years' experience, that no one woman has any rights which any other woman is bound to respect unless, indeed, she has been introduced to her.

At a notion store the other day there were many would-be purchasers and but few saleswomen. Many of the women had been waiting patiently for a long time, and one little woman was just beginning to state what she wanted when another, clad in all the habiliments of the deepest affliction, came in from her carriage, and sweeping up behind the little woman, announced:

"I must have some one wait on me immediately or I must leave. I was here yesterday and couldn't get waited on."

There was a silence for a space and the saleswoman hesitated, till she was released by a glance and "I can wait," and then the lady of sorrow was served with some insignificant article and swept loftily and self-satisfied to her carriage.

It is a pity that sorrow makes some people hard instead of soft; but I suppose they cannot help it, if they were made "queer" to begin with.

Here is another incident related to me by a friend:

"I was coming down town last winter," he said. "A woman, beautifully dressed, ordered her handsome carriage and horses directly upon the crossing—she on the sidewalk speaking with the coachman.

"Coming upon them I hesitated, but she made no motion, so I walked around twenty feet out of my way—a very dirty place on one side of the crossing and rough ice on the other. I went over the ice. Then I waited to watch. A man came, then hesitated, and walked around; then a woman ditto, apparently very fearful of the ice.

"At last the 'lady' got into her coach, still on the crossing, and drove off.

"Some folks are queer," I said. He paused for a moment and then went on as if addressing an audience:

"There seem to be women that the sense of justice has just been coddled out of! They have taken a different form of manners—what is called feminine manners. They act as if they were free from all the consequences of their own acts. Their manners are surely bad, contrasted with those of men to each other, even in the freedom of club life. In fact, there is no sweeter courtesy than at a club.

"Women seem to have no idea that they have any duties to anybody but their own people. They follow nothing but their own feelings. It seems as if women had no sympathy for women as such, no fellow-feeling for their kind."

I suppose what makes people seem so "mighty queer" is their thoughtlessness more than it is their hard-heartedness.

Sometimes it is an unfortunate lack of imagination, so that they are unable to put themselves in the place of others or to realize that there are any others but themselves.

I saw an elderly lady once refuse a seat which was offered to her in a crowded street car by a courteous young man and persist in standing, greatly to his confusion.

And I heard her then say to her companion that she never accepted seats from strangers, for fear that they might make her action the pretext for claiming her acquaintance.

The self-respect must be very small which can be endangered by a kindly word or look even from a fellow-woman.—The Independent.

"HATE will sharpen observation to the point of microscopic vision, affording opportunity for many a shrewd guess, and revealing facts for the construction of the cleverest and falsest theories but will leave the observer as blind as any bat to the scope of the whole, or the meaning of the parts which can be understood only from the whole; for love alone can interpret."

HE who acts right will soon think right; and he who acts wrong will soon think wrong. Any two persons acting faithfully upon opposite convictions are divided, but by a bowing wall; any two, in belief most harmonious, who do not act upon it, are divided by infinite gulfs of the blackness of darkness, across which neither ever beholds the real self of the other.—George MacDonald.

"WANTED:—TWO MILLION BOYS!"

BY MRS. E. E. C. GLASIER.

[The saloon must have boys, or it must shut up shop. It is a great factory, and unless it can get 2,000,000 boys from each generation for raw material, some of these factories must close out and its operatives must be thrown on a cold world, and the public revenue will dwindle. "Wanted, 2,000,000 boys," is the notice. One family out of every five must contribute a boy to keep up the supply.—FERNALD.]

Two millions! Now may heaven
Be merciful to me
That never in that company
My own dear boy I see!

My boy! so brave and loving,
With eyes so clear and true,
Can these accursed pitfalls,
Be set for such as you?

One out of five! Thorne Terrace
Is bright and fair to see.
Five happy homes are builded,
Five families are we;

Safe seems our street and sheltered;
All danger far away;
Under the budding maples
Our little children play.

But round the second corner,
Where tides of traffic flow,
And jarring echoes clamor
As men rush to and fro,

There is a place all gilded,
Where fiery draughts are poured,
As tender youth joins blear-eyed age
Around the drunkard's board.

My boy in reach of peril?
And will it come—the day
When his young feet, lured thither,
Shall o'er that threshold stray?

When his hand shall be lifted
The fatal cup to drain
Until the drunkard's madness
Shall fire him, heart and brain?

So help me, God in heaven,
The son Thou gavest me,
Light of my eyes, shall never
Such ghastly ruin see!

God gives the mother courage
To cope with beasts of prey,
But here is monster deadlier,
Than all that rend and slay.

Help, Lord! Our babes deliver,
Strike for them swift and soon,
Avenge the fallen, sweep from earth
The thrice-accursed saloon!

POLLY'S SHORT JOURNEY.

It was rather a sour-faced little maid who got on the train by herself, or, rather, was put on the train by a tall brother, at Glenburn station. She had on a nice little brown suit, brown hat and gloves, and carried a brown basket that suggested a delightful lunch. But she didn't look half as pleased as you would expect a little brown sparrow of a girl to be, who was going on a journey in a nice plush-lined car, through a beautiful country of woods and streams and wild, leafy gorges.

The car was very full, and Polly Imboden flopped herself down in the first seat she came to, which was occupied by a sweet looking old lady in Quaker bonnet and gown. The Friend eyed her with quiet amusement, noted the clouded brow, the listless air, the lowered eyes, and presently asked, gently:

"Is thee going far to-day?"

"Only to Midvale," answered the little traveler, shortly, without looking up.

"Then thee will not have time to grow tired; but I am going a thousand miles."

"A thousand miles!" exclaimed Polly; and as soon as she forgot Polly, and began to be interested in somebody else, the ugly look took itself off somewhere, and you began to see that Polly had a sweet, bright face, and actually two dimples.

Her companion soon found out that Polly was pouting because mother had gone to Philadelphia for a week, and instead of taking her along, as she had expected, had sent her out to Midvale to stay with Aunt Mary till she got back. Mother did not seem to be much to blame, as there was some fear of scarlet fever in the square to which she was going; but that did not keep Polly from being cross about it.

"This is a patience lesson set thee, child," said the old Friend. "There are many more waiting for thee to learn, but if thee skips this one, the next will be harder."

But Polly wasn't listening to this little sermon. Having once got her eyes up from the toes of her boots, she was making them acquainted with the people in the car, and to her surprise, there were rows upon rows of little girls and boys about her own age.

"Is thee looking at my children?" said the old lady, smiling. "They are all going with me that long thousand miles to find homes in the West."

"Aren't they coming back to their fathers and mothers?" asked Polly, her lip beginning to tremble a little.

"They have no fathers and mothers on earth," answered the Friend, "but their Heavenly Father takes care of them."

Little country-bred Polly had never seen an orphan asylum. Perhaps she had never realized that children could live without mothers. Why, who heard their prayers and kissed them good-night, and buttoned the top buttons, and heard their spelling for fear they'd be "trapped," and —but by this time the tears were beginning to run down Polly's cheeks at the thought of all that these little children had to do without. The Friend laid her hand lightly on the little, brown gloved fingers.

"Has thee ever seen a lesson book?" she asked.

"Yes, ma'am," answered Polly, in surprise.

"What are the pictures for?"

"Why," said Polly, still more surprised, "why, to show things."

"Yes, that is it. Now, the great Teacher wants my little friend to be contented with her lot, to be so glad she has a dear mother and father, a home, and friends to take care of her; but she wasn't learning that lesson very fast, so He puts her on this train for a little journey, and shows her all these little ones of His who have to do without these blessings. Will this picture make thee learn faster?"

Polly pulled out her little blue-bordered handkerchief, and scrubbed away the teardrops. "I'd like to give one of them my basket," she said eagerly; "it's got a lot of good things that mother put in it for me."

"Thee will have to hurry, then," said the Friend, well pleased, "for Midvale is in sight."

Hastily Polly slipped off the plush seat, and, picking out a pale, grave-looking child, she put the heavy basket in her hand, smiled a good-by under the Quaker bonnet of the old lady, and here was Midvale.

And for a long time to come, when mother felt Polly's arms close round her so tight that she could hardly breathe, she knew she was thinking about the old Friend and her rows of motherless children.—Child's Hour.

CLOTHES-LINE REEL.

Here, children, is something you can make almost without tools—a clothes-line reel and pulleys. At any rate, we will use those names. Of course, the best way is to have a reel indoors, with a pulley at every post. But I dare say most of you have no reel, no pulleys, no posts and no whole line. This plan is a makeshift, quickly made, and is for use on trees and nails. For the "reel," as we will call it, take a ½x6x18 and cut a circular notch in each end, two inches deep, and as wide as the board. Now a piece of broom-handle or chair-round nailed across the middle and projecting to the left, six inches, for a handle. Another handle, five inches from this one, and projecting to the right, for a crank. So much for the reel; now for pulleys. Take a stick about the size and length of a man's forefinger, cut a notch around the middle, taper the ends a little, and call it a toggle. Then a piece of rope two feet long, and tie its middle into the notch and its ends together, making a long loop with the toggle at one end. Pass this around a tree limb or fence rail, or anything, and slip the toggle through the other end of the loop—and that is our "pulley." Make as many pulleys as you need and put them in your right coat pocket.

To put up the line, have it wound on the reel, attach one end (by a loop, not taking time for a tie), hold reel by handle, and march proudly to second point of attachment, secretly hoping that some of the neighbors are seeing your reel revolving like a windmill. Pass a pulley around a limb, and don't forget to include the line. Go on in this way to "place of beginning," as surveyors say. When you take the line down, go over the same ground in the other direction (so as to have the loop end of the line outside), winding as you go—and this is where you use the crank. Yes, you could wind by hand, but it would twist the line and make it kink. You can make this if you have no tools but a pocket knife and hammer.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Now that the days are getting longer, I am reminded of the promise I made you some weeks ago, which has not yet been kept. Do you remember it? Well, Mabel, tell. Yes, it was how to organize an L. T. L. social club for winter. And briefly this is how:

Get, first, some mother or father or older person who loves children to be your chaperone or superintendent.

Then let two or three get together and make out a list of names for membership.

Invite these to meet at some pleasant home, and ask the superintendent to act as chairman at the first meeting and help you to organize.

At this meeting elect officers, a president, secretary and treasurer. Also appoint a program committee to prepare the program for the following meeting, and a committee on rules who will write a constitution or set of laws for the society, giving its object, and the rules which shall govern it.

Who will be the first to form an L. T. L. Social club?

If you like, I will tell you in a later letter what such a club might do, what to have on the program and how to spend a happy winter evening.

Yours for a good time,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

Will you admit me to the Cozy Corner? I am so interested in it. I send answers to puzzles.

St. Croix Falls, Wis. SIDNEY J. DOROTHY.

Walk in, sir puzzler; can you give our countersign?

We, sister and I, have wanted to write to you for some time, and to-day grandma said we may. We would like to belong to the Cozy Corner; we are always glad to read that column, but have never seen a name in it from Delaware, but there are a good many little temperance folks in Delaware, and a good many that are not.

ETHEL HANNUM.

Sister and I are nine years old. We belong to the Loyal Temperance Legion. Grandma takes THE UNION SIGNAL, and brother the Tobacco Gem, and he is eleven. The W. C. T. U. meets at our house this afternoon; we live with grandma in the country. EVELYN HANNUM.

Nassau, Del.

Greetings to these Cozy Corner sisters from the Diamond state who are enrolled in our circle.

Although older than most of your nieces, I would like admission to the Cozy Corner. My father is a first cousin to Frances E. Willard and I am very proud to think that such a person as she should be related to us. We have taken THE UNION SIGNAL for three or four years and I enjoy reading about my "temperance cousins." I should like to correspond with some of them. Yours for success in temperance, ANNA LUKE ROBINSON.

That's a just pride, Anna, and we white-ribboners may well be proud of our "relations."

"Have a puzzle to work on to-night;
Let's see how many words that are made
From the name of this month each can write;
I am sure you all know how to spell."

So here are the words, half a score,
That they made: Bert, rob, bet and coo,
With boot, cob, cot, tore, toe and core.
And now, my dear reader, will you
The name of the month please tell?

As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.—John 9:5.

THE IMPORTANCE OF CONVENTIONS.

We once knew of two women in a small town, average members of an average foreign missionary society of one of the leading denominations. It chanced, in the course of time, that these two women were sent by their organization to an annual meeting of the society of which their own was an auxiliary. When they returned home, they could talk of nothing but missionary work. They denied themselves kid gloves, flowers on their bonnets and sundry other things, which in the light of their new purpose seemed to them superfluous luxuries, and devoted the money thus saved to missions.

This great and sudden change was simply the result of more light. Two conscientious Christian women had obtained, as from a mountain peak, a view of the situation which they had but dimly seen before. For days they had been closely associated with those who had a deep interest in and thorough knowledge of the missionary work. There had been brought vividly before their minds the terrible need of the work. As never before, they had come to realize the misery and degradation of heathen women, the sufferings of helpless children, the descration of home. And more, they had seen that they could do something to relieve all this woe, that Christianity contained the balm and that upon Christian women it largely depended to bind up the broken-hearted and proclaim liberty to the captives. They had listened with kindling enthusiasm to the accounts of women and children rescued from lives of wretchedness and rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free. They had also heard with heavy hearts of the many open doors, which the missionaries could not enter, of the cries for help to which they must turn a deaf ear because there were not enough reapers in the field. They had learned, too, that other laborers were waiting to enter the whitened fields, but, alas, there were no funds with which to send them. And so these women who had thought heretofore that they were fulfilling all the requirements of duty in the missionary cause, went to their homes never again to labor perfunctorily, but henceforth, gladly and eagerly, seeking not how little but how much they could find to do.

This is no fancy sketch nor is it an isolated case. The majority of earnest laborers along all lines owe their interest in their work to just such experiences. All that is necessary to arouse the interest, enlist the sympathies and inspire the devotion of conscientious people in any good cause is to show them first the need of doing something and second the possibility of doing it. There is no place where these two facts are so strongly and clearly brought out as in the conventions of the workers along the various lines of work. Conventions are the fountain-head from which comes the enthusiasm which inspires a great enterprise—the Corliss engine which runs the great and varied machinery of the movement.

Dear sisters of the white ribbon, what is true of other lines of reform work is equally true of the one in which we are engaged. You cannot afford to miss any convention of our white ribbon army that it is possible for you to attend. Every such convention has in greater or less degree the elements which you need for your encouragement and instruction. The greater the convention, the greater its helpfulness and inspiration. Hence, our National and World's Conventions are of supreme importance. We cannot too strongly urge every one, especially every member of the W. C. T. U., to be present at the great gathering in Chicago this month.

Do you think that in your little corner there is nothing you can do to help on this cause? Come to the conventions, learn what other women are doing and how they are doing it. In some one at least of our forty-two lines of work you will find something that can be done successfully and with profit in your part of the harvest field. Are you working in a perfunctory way under the stern behests of duty? Come to the conventions and our word for it, you will go home so filled with enthusiasm that your tasks shall be a delight and you will eagerly seek for additional work to do. Are you discouraged, does the little that you can do seem to amount to nothing? Come to Chicago the 16th of this month and you shall feel that it is a great thing to hold even the most obscure and unimportant position in so great an army. You shall learn that thousands of others are working with you and so your little work is multiplied a thousand fold because it is done in connection with a great organization. You shall find your own labors returned like bread upon the waters. You shall recognize with grateful heart that the little you have done along this line or that has made possible the grand work being done over all the world. Come, faithful, patient, but disheartened laborer, and learn that it is your efforts and that of thousands like you that make up the grand total of the work of the W. C. T. U. Then go away and set your little home union on fire with your own enthusiasm. The fire will not cease to spread until the whole community is ablaze.

UNDER ONE BANNER.

The Michigan Liquor Dealers' Association held a convention recently at Grand Rapids. Two hundred and fifty delegates were present in response to a circular letter sent out some weeks in advance. The following is a paragraph from said circular:

"The last session of the legislature in this state by giving to the women a franchise with an educational restriction struck a blow directly at our interests and rights. The opposition to us and our business is united and working in harmony to legislate us out of business and rob us of property and rights. We are divided. It is only a question of time as to what the inevitable result will be to us, unless we promptly get under one banner and fight shoulder to shoulder for our interests. The time for apathy in our business is past."

It is cheering to temperance workers to know that the president of the Association spoke of "the drift and march of public sentiment against all persons engaged in the liquor business" as a well-known, unquestioned fact. Opposers of woman's suffrage will undoubtedly take comfort and hope from the fact that the Association passed a resolution to oppose the law which gives Michigan women municipal suffrage.

In this entire action of the enemy there is much of practical interest to temperance workers. It is not long since we had occasion to comment upon an article in a religious paper which deplored the waning interest and enthusiasm in temperance reform and laid the blame at the door of those who advocate any methods which give offence to anybody who can be counted on the temperance side. We showed at that time that it was the opposers of these methods not the users of them who were responsible for whatever unfortunate consequences resulted. That we were willing to work along any line with them, only asking at other times to be left free to use whatever methods seemed to us best. But that those who should be our helpers refuse us all sympathy and support because at some times and places we use methods with which they do not agree. We also strongly denied the statement that there has been in these last years a decrease in temperance interest and temperance work. It is therefore encouraging to us to know that on this point the liquor dealers agree with us and recognize that there is a steady "drift and march of public sentiment" against them. It is also cheering to know that they consider that the opposition to them is "united and working in harmony" while they themselves are divided. We have been accustomed to look upon the situation as just reversed. We do not propose to allow ourselves to be deluded with a false optimism, nevertheless it is quite possible that we have exaggerated the divisions among ourselves and overlooked those among the enemy.

We desire to call the special attention of the Christian ministers and editors who consider woman's suffrage the greatest evil that can befall the race to this added proof that the liquor-dealers are of exactly the same opinion. This is not the first time that liquor men have expressed themselves, and whatever divisions there may be concerning the subject among temperance people, there is none at all among the advocates of the other side. Always and everywhere liquor men oppose woman suffrage. Repeatedly they have expressed their hatred of the movement, even going so far as to say that they would fight it more bitterly than prohibition. Gentlemen, the whisky host is a unit against woman suffrage. Do you think they are more likely to be right than one hundred and fifty thousand Christian women? And our friends who are so anxious for harmony among the temperance ranks that they seem to want us to lay aside all methods, do you really think it the part of wisdom to spike the guns of the very battery which calls forth the hottest fire of the enemy? So did not the great generals whose names are the synonyms of victory.

A CRUCIAL TEST.

To every character of force and depth, there comes a crucial test of some kind—a test between conscience and expediency. Such a test has come to a Minnesota brother, and so well does it represent the condition of hundreds of honest Prohibitionists that we herewith give it wider publication.

This brother has been traveling recently in Northwestern Iowa and has noticed with pain the open disregard of the prohibition law in many places. On viewing this repeatedly, a wave of discouragement swept over him and bore him far out on the sea of doubt. He saw nothing to do but to return to the party of his early love and in that frame of mind he wrote the following letter:

"My deflection from the Republican party seven years ago was in hopes that enough more might do likewise to compel that party to adopt prohibition as a national issue and create a public sentiment, which should make its enforcement as possible as that of the laws prohibiting gambling and arson. While the Republican party did not make prohibition a national issue nor stimulate public sentiment in the direction of enforcement, it did, whether from policy or principle is not for me to determine, make it a state issue in the states of Iowa and Kansas, and died then and there, as a party—died with its face to the enemy. The public sentiment of Iowa and Kansas is not strong enough to keep the saloons from opening their doors daily, and conducting their business openly in all of the larger and most of the smaller towns in constantly increasing numbers. This condition of affairs is an educator in the direction of bad morals and disregard of law. Its logical result is anarchy. Its graduates are criminals and drunkards. I have an intense interest in the welfare of my country, as every veteran of the war should have—and am loth to occupy a position longer where I am barred from participation in the struggle of great principles for ascendency; and since the democratic party has so fully developed its tendency and willingness to combine with all of the worst elements in the country, but more particularly with the saloon element, in a war upon the nation's prosperity, welfare and sobriety, and since I clearly see there is no hope for the party of my adoption, the vital and central principle of which is right, 'eternally right,' I have concluded to again cast my lot with that party the views of which most nearly accord with my own, in which, from my point of view, resides the greater intelligence, the better judgmont and the higher ideal of citizenship. When, in future, the Republican party is right, it will be my pleasure to assist in maintaining that right, when it is wrong, in my opinion, it will be my duty to the extent of my ability to aid in setting it right."

Having "slept upon his wrath" he felt less hopeless over the situation the next morning, and resolved that discouragement should meet with new resolution, not cowardly retreat, so his letter bears a postscript which shows that he saved the day for his conscience and principle, rather than expediency, was conserved. He says:

"I tremble to reflect that I was about to desert that noble band of women, who are belting the earth with the white ribbon of peace and temperance and altering the constitutional laws of the nations. No, from the crest of the wave which swept me out upon that ocean of doubt, I saw my duty as I saw it in 1861, and the recession of the billows left me standing amongst the mountains of Faith upon the continent of Hope. While the W. C. T. U. bears the banner of God and Home and Every Land, I will, with pride and determination, follow to the end."

All honor to this brother's brave stand, and glad is the W. C. T. U. that there are so many like him "to follow."

A SPECIAL APPEAL FOR MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER'S MISSION TO ITALY.

[So important is this appeal that we place it prominently on this page, confident that many will not only read and ponder, but generously respond.]

The past year has witnessed increased activities along the line of purity work throughout white ribbon ranks. Our South African and Australian workers are giving increased attention to this work, especially in Cape Colony and Queensland, where the C. D. Acts exist, while in England a deep interest for India has been created through evidence brought to light by our two round-the-world missionaries, Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, who have given evidence, through a committee appointed to receive it, to the fact, that in the military cantonments of India, the regulation of vice continues, in defiance of distinct instructions to the contrary from the House of Commons.

For two years past Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, most revered of all workers for the abolition of state-regulated vice, has stood at the head of the department for the promotion of social purity of the World's W. C. T. U., and in connection with other organizations she has been doing valiant service for abolition on the Continent, especially in Switzerland; but lately, to our intense satisfaction, she has signified her willingness to go, as superintendent of the social purity department of the W. C. T. U., and do all she can for our cause in Italy, in the course of the coming winter.

Many to whom this appeal will come have read the record of her Continental work in various reports, and will recall the interesting account of her labors in the past for Italy, and all will realize the immense gain it would be to the introduction of our W. C. T. U. work in Italy to be able to secure for it the services of Mrs. Butler, who has no peer in her special line. She is personally acquainted with Italy's foremost workers for reform, and is able to speak their native tongue. It would seem clear that God Himself has called Mrs. Butler to this Italian work. A few years ago there stood in the front ranks of the abolition cause in that country a young, God-inspired Roman gentleman, Guiseppe Nathan. After working a few brief years he died, worn out with grief and conflict. He had preached the crusade throughout Italy, and brought the humble populations to the side of right and justice. On his death-bed he asked to be lifted up that he might say some last words to his mother. In an agony of breathlessness he gasped out his dying message, at intervals, in broken sentences, and they were these: "Mrs. Butler—tell her, tell her"—"Yes, my son," his mother replied, "I will tell her your message, and it will be most sacred to her." "Tell her that for Italy's salvation—for that of the women of Italy—my last word—my dying wish is—that she come to the women of Italy—my countrywomen—and meet them face to face." It will be a joy, indeed, for our white ribbon women to see the fulfillment of the dying request of this noble young brother of women, who gave his life in the cause that is so sacred to us all. In no portion of the world has the W. C. T. U. found it so difficult to gain a foothold as on the continent of Europe, and yet the social condition of both England and America is profoundly influenced by the social customs prevalent there. For the most part it seems at present practically impossible to get the ear of the people for the total abstinence question, accustomed as they have been for generations to use wine as freely as we use water. Our only hope seems to lie in the establishment of a personal acquaintance and heart affection, created by a united effort in some sacred cause kindred to the central thought of our white ribbon movement. The women of Italy are longing for freedom from the galling yoke of state-regulated vice. Let us encourage them to rise and throw off this hated yoke. When their work wrought along this line shall have taught them the strength of woman's influence for good, and the force of woman's protest against evil, then this strength and this force can readily be aroused and utilized along many other lines of Christian effort included in the plans of our world-wide association.

The cause of the abolition of state-regulated vice in Italy seems to be to-day at very much the same stage as in India. The regulations were abolished by Signor Crispi, when Prime Minister, after debate sin the Chambers, but owing to the retention of the same police, the same doctors, etc., to look after hospitals and barracks, the whole system has been revived under another name. There have been many appeals to Mrs. Butler from the Italians, beside the touching one from young Guiseppe Nathan, but hitherto she has been unable to meet these calls in an adequate manner. God has appointed this noble woman, and we believe that He Himself has struck the hour for her sacred mission to be fulfilled.

The sum of about £100, or $500, will be needed to bear the necessary expenses of this work for Italy, and to meet such additional secretarial help as Mrs. Butler might require in a foreign country. We are sure it will be subscribed quickly and gladly by our friends everywhere. There is reason for promptitude, so that we can give positive assurance to Mrs. Butler of hearty financial support of the work she proposes to forward.

Let all subscriptions from American friends be sent to Miss Alice Briggs, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., and be carefully designated as for World's purity work in Italy.

Friends in England and British Colonies are requested to send their subscription to Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, 44 Grosvenor Road, Westminster, London.

A NOTABLE WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE MILESTONE.

Reference has been made in these columns to the Woman's Suffrage Bill which passed the parliament of New Zealand, September 9. We have every cause to congratulate our sisters and brothers, too, in this great triumph. The measure is one which has long been contemplated and has received careful consideration from all sides. For three consecutive years the lower House has passed a Reform Bill, which gave women the right to vote on exactly the same conditions as men. Last year the upper House agreed to the bill provided that women should vote at home, using "voting papers," which should be sent to the polling place. By that act our New Zealand brothers once for all disproved the charge that "women are not well enough informed to vote." The direct representatives of the people, or lower House, were true to the bill and this year sent it for the third time to the upper House or Council. This time the measure was passed by the bare majority of twenty to eighteen. The bill has met with the governor's signature and is now a law. The first opportunity for the equal franchise thus afforded will be in the general elections in December.

POINT OF PINES, a popular summer resort on the coast of Massachusetts, has been the scene this season of a splendid temperance gathering, in which many notable advocates of the cause have participated. "The Old Man Eloquent," as Gen. Neal Dow was termed, presented temperance truths with all his conserved fire and force. Said he: "This question of temperance is one of public policy. It must yet be settled by the ballot box. It demands our immediate attention. If we do not put the rum shops down the rum shops will put the country down. Every year we are spending eighty million dollars for liquor. It is all wasted. When you go from here, go determined to work as you have never worked before. Remember that the day of doom has been set for these traffickers in human souls. I will not live to see that grand day when right and temperance shall prevail against the curse of the iniquitous liquor trade. Massachusetts is not so large as Maine. It is easier to canvass. Go, work as we have worked, accomplish what we have accomplished, teach the liquor dealer as we have taught him in Maine that his trade is a blot and a blotch on public decency, and public morality; say to him, 'Go,' and he will go. And in every effort of your body and mind remember that only harmonious and concerted action may win." The Nestor of the temperance reform can well look with pride upon his ten years' toil in canvassing the Pine Tree state. What one state has done another can do.

THE women's societies of the West are asked to come under one general organization, to be called the Social Science Federation. Working in friendly relations to the General Federation of Women's Clubs, it proposes to follow a more detailed plan as to small and obscure organizations, and desires "to extend to those who live in new settlements and remote farming districts, its genial friendship and the mental stimulus which springs from community of thought and feeling." There are to be seven general heads of research: Education, history and civil government, literature, natural science, domestic and sanitary science, philanthropy and reform. Reference books will be furnished to auxiliary clubs at a nominal rental. We heartily welcome this federation as a notable step towards the union of women's interests.

It is a beautiful talent to turn words of unpopular or common meaning into a truer and deeper significance. This talent is shown by a correspondent in the following paragraph:

"Words are tell-tale things when the veil of time and daily usage is lifted from them. They call up the history of the past, while the present day meaning often conceals it. It is so with the word Knight. One pictures to oneself a man in armor, titled in name, idle in habit, galloping off on his war-horse to the fight—an aristocrat of feudal times. But the word-root dives deeper. It means 'a servant, one who serves.' The title 'Knights of Labor' takes on a new significance. The war-horse notion, adopted from the old French rendering of the word chevalier, is put aside in these peaceful days. All men are born to serve their common brotherhood to-day, even if the task be up-hill and difficult. For the old word labor means, 'putting forth an effort that is difficult in the execution.' When capital and labor are each governed by God's law of love, arbitration will be easy and equalization will follow naturally in its train."

The churches bewail the deadness of the people, they want a resurrection time in the shape of a revival, and they do well to want it; but now as in other days when He stood before the sepulchre the word of Christ is, "Roll ye away the stone," and the legalized, vote-protected liquor traffic is that stone. We must enter the temple of law through the gateway of politics,

Could there be a more comprehensive definition of happiness than that given by a lady: "My ideal of happiness is the helping of somebody up."

A very wholesome rule in regard to amusements was recently given by a speaker: "No man had a right to be a spectator of any amusement at which he would be ashamed to assist."

This question has come to On Duty: "A W. C. T. U. woman, tired and thirsty from sightseeing at the World's Fair, stopped at a café and ordered and drank a bottle of ale. Did she not violate her pledge?" Of course she did. It makes no difference where the ale was drank nor under what conditions. It was a violation of "I promise to abstain from all alcoholic liquors."

"When trouble is brewing, keep still. When slander is getting on its legs, keep still. When your feelings are hurt, keep still, till you recover from your excitement, at any rate. Things look differently through an unagitated eye. In a commotion once I wrote a letter and sent it, and wished I had not. In my later years I had another commotion, and wrote a long letter; but life had rubbed a little sense into me, and I kept that letter in my pocket against a day when I could look it over without agitation and without tears. I was glad I did. Silence is the most massive thing conceivable sometimes."

"I was interested," writes a friend, "in an item which appeared recently in the Watch Tower concerning the women who petitioned for a saloon nearer home, fearing more the railroad track which must be crossed to get to the distant saloon, than they did the accursed stuff, which is sure to destroy sooner or later. But I was more indignant when the next morning after reading of these women, to read that six ministers had petitioned for a license for a park owner who was refused last year, said park being but a few doors from 'The Rosine Home' for fallen women. These ministers remarked that it 'would be a fine, gilded saloon and not a shabby, low dive.' Late in the winter, a load of provision was sent to this home by the owner of the park; when the matron found from whence they came she went to the man and told him she wished him to remove them, for, she said, 'We do not accept any bribe against the free use of our conscience; we intend to fight you still harder on your license than we did last year,' and they did, but to no effect, for the license was granted. I had decided to resign all active work for a time, but was so incensed when I read of these two cases, that I said 'No, I will continue to labor on while this state of affairs exists.'"

DOMINION TEMPERANCE MOVEMENTS.

The Maritime Provinces (eastern) have just issued "Health Readers" for use in the common schools according to the Act of 1892, which provided for the "more thorough study in the public schools of the effects of alcoholic drinks on the human system." The books are neatly bound in cloth, printed in good type and suitably illustrated, being largely reprints of the Pathfinder Series Nos. 1 and 2, but adapted to Canadian statistics and sold at about half the price the Pathfinder would cost with the necessary duty added. The simple and accurate style in which much useful and interesting knowledge is conveyed cannot fail to arouse thought in young people, and the books might with great advantage be used in Band of Hope and Sunday-school work. Although the Province of Ontario first secured the Act, April, 1887, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island have taken the lead in getting it put into execution. However, Ontario expects to have a text-book ready for use this autumn.

The Maritime Provinces are reaping the benefit of a lecturing tour by Miss Lilian Phelps. Old unions are being quickened and new ones organized. Among the latter, in Amherst, has been established the first one for colored women. That is, the first in Nova Scotia, there are already several such unions in Ontario.

A temperance camp has recently been held by the Royal Templars at Centre Island, Toronto. One day was given up to the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Youmans, affectionately called "The Mother of the Union," though she has been an invalid for years, was there in her chair, to the great delight of the audience, who insisted upon hearing her voice once more. She spoke on the Plebiscite, concluding with the expression of her belief that the Dominion of Canada was on the verge of a moral revolution. Mrs. Annie Parker, of Toronto, Dominion superintendent of suffrage, read a long and excellent paper on "Citizens, Who Are They?" summing up her arguments to Tennyson's conclusion:

"The woman's cause is man's;
They rise together, or together sink."

Mrs. Youmans' prediction of a "moral revolution" seems borne out by a step of much significance just taken in Ontario by the heads of the various temperance societies. Working in concert, they have issued a "call" for a general provincial representative convention of friends of temperance and prohibition. The Council of the Dominion Alliance will meet in Toronto at the same time, early in October. This is expected to be the most interesting gathering of moral reform workers ever held in the Province, and great results are hoped for.

September is the month of fairs, and there has been a decided increase of interest in that department. Winnipeg reports good work done, also Montreal. Ottawa has special facilities for this work, having secured good accommodation in the main building, with kitchen, pantry and sink room. Adjoining is a ladies' parlor, fitted with comfortable chairs and lounges and made a veritable haven of rest, for here tired mothers can leave their little ones carefully guarded, while they do the sights with an easy mind. It is a pleasure to know that such work can be made to pay, though that is the least of the good accomplished. It is to be hoped that the new Governor-general, Lord Aberdeen, who is to open the fair, will have his notice specially drawn to this "exhibit." This department is of the utmost importance. There are two ways of fighting an evil, by direct, aggressive attack, and by crowding it out. The latter is perhaps the more effective, as it leaves no empty space for the seven devils to take possession. The work is hard but the reward is great.

One superintendent with the natural eloquence of earnestness told how her heart swelled when one and another, anxious fathers, mothers, and friends, came to her as they left the grounds and said: "God bless the W. C. T. U." Forgotten then were the long days of toil.

Of conventions, there seems no end. Lanark county, Ont., has just held a most successful one in the prosperous town of Smith's Falls. All manner of flowers, fruits and tempting eatables pleased the eye and palate, while the "feast of reason" was equally well catered to. Steady progress characterized the reports of the secretary and treasurer. Among those of superintendents, the flower mission and that on narcotics were noticeable. It was stated that the new law prohibiting the sale of tobacco to minors was in some way evaded as boys were still found smoking on the streets, although they refused to tell from whom the cigars and cigarettes were obtained.

A parliamentary drill was given by Mrs. C. T. Williams of Montreal, the Dominion president, who also spoke at the evening meeting, as did Mrs. Gordon of Ottawa. Five clergymen expressed their sympathy and desire to help, and not even the sudden extinction of the electric light could mar the harmony and good feeling which prevailed.

Lachute was the gathering place for the annual convention of Argentenil county. Four unions are comprised in this county, reporting a paid-up membership of ninety-four. The report on scientific temperance instruction showed that there were forty-four schools and nine hundred and twenty-six scholars in the county, nearly all of whom were receiving teaching in temperance physiology. Unfermented wine was used in all but two of the Protestant churches. Flower mission work was taken up by all the unions. A great deal of literature had been sent to the lumber camps. Much regret was expressed at the resignation of Miss Davis as president. Mrs. F. Mc Martin was elected in her place. An evening meeting closed this successful convention. Mrs. Williams, Dominion president, Dr. Christie, member for Argentenil, and others gave addresses.

The Province of Quebec will hold its annual convention at Danville, from October 24 to 27 inclusive. It is the first time that the Provincial union has met in this strong prohibition county, and unusually interesting meetings are expected.

EASTERN WASHINGTON.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION.

The temperance workers of East Washington met at Oakesdale, Sept. 5, to hold their eleventh annual convention. Though in the midst of a grand harvest, quite a large delegation was present, including several state and county officers. The meetings were held in the new and pretty Cumberland Presbyterian church. On Tuesday evening Dr. Allen of Spokane, gave an earnest and practical temperance address to a full house. The thanks of the convention, and of all lovers of our cause are certainly due him. Wednesday was occupied with regular convention work, reports, etc.

Though great efforts have been made during the year by our indefatigable treasurer, to raise our state debt, she reported still a deficit of some $137. She urged the unions to make a last strong pull together and throw off the burden. A number of pledges from unions and individuals were taken, and we are almost certain to get rid of the troublesome debt this coming year. The utmost economy has been used in our state work for several years on account of our financial condition. Indeed, we feel that we have not been lavish enough for the highest good of our work, so we all rejoice at being on the threshold of more prosperous times.

Wednesday evening the convention was most cordially welcomed by Miss Winona Selfridge, of Oakesdale, in behalf of the local W. C. T. U. and the town; response by Mrs. Nellie E. Cort. Our president, Mrs. Jennie L. Green, followed with an exceptionally good address. Beautiful and appropriate songs were furnished each evening by the Oakesdale choir.

On Thursday a memorial service was held in which loving mention was made of Madam Willard, Mary Allen West and Jennie Casseday, beside several local workers, called from the trials of earth to the glories of heaven. A tribute was also paid to the lately deceased president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, who was a warm friend of our cause.

The hour devoted to the praise service was full of interest. A number of unions who were unable to send delegates to the convention sent in their offerings and verses of Scripture to be read. The offerings were devoted to state work.

The interest of the convention culminated Thursday evening in the Demorest gold medal contest. The contestants were six young ladies from as many towns. The contest was held in the town hall which was filled to overflowing. Though each did herself and her friends great credit, the medal was won by the youngest, Lucy Hogobaum, of Oakesdale, to the intense satisfaction of the people of the town. All seem to feel that these contests are surely reaching the end desired by their author. A determination prevails to do more in this line this year. Special effort will be made to interest the boys in them, as well as the girls.

The officers chosen for the ensuing year are as follows: Mrs. Julia B. Cole, Walla Walla, president; Mrs. Nellie E. Cort, Sherman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Jennie L. Green, Medical Lake, recording secretary; Mrs. Lucy R. Berry, Walla Walla, treasurer.

On Friday morning the members of the convention took their leave on the morning trains with hearts inspired and spirits enthused for another year of unrelenting warfare against the destroyer of our nation and our homes.

NELLIE E. CORT,
State Corresponding Secretary, Sherman.

VERMONT'S STATE GATHERING.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Vermont Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Bethany Church, Montpelier, September 13 and 14. Montpelier, our beautiful capital, seemed a fitting place for a convention of Christian women to meet, to discuss the leading topics connected with their great work. And it was the town in preference to all others, where our convention should meet this year, it being the twentieth anniversary of the great Crusade.

The real beginning of the Vermont W. C. T. U. was in Montpelier, in June, 1872. Fresh from the Hillsboro Crusade came Dio Lewis, and in accordance with his advice, Crusade methods were employed, the women going out in twos and threes to petition saloon keepers to give up the traffic in strong drink. In Rutland, St. Albans and other large places in Vermont, the women were stirred to similar actions, and on February 17, 1875, at the call of Mrs. J. M. Nuven, National W. C. T. U. vice-president, the Vermont W. C. T. U. was organized at Montpelier with seventy-five delegates in attendance, representing eighteen towns. So Montpelier being the birthplace of the temperance movement in Vermont was a most fitting place for us to assemble.

The morning of the first day dawned bright and sunny. The convention was formally opened by our president, Mrs. Ida H. Read, of Shelburne, by reading of the old Crusade psalm, the 146th, singing "Give to the winds thy fears." Words of welcome were spoken by Mrs. E. M. Denny, of Montpelier. She greeted us warmly, saying they had looked forward to our coming with pleasure, and that every woman looked beautiful to them. A few words of welcome were from Miss Bertha Chamberlin, the county president, and from the pastors of the different churches. We are glad the pastors are in sympathy with our work. Rev. J. Edward Wright, of the Unitarian Church gave the women wearing the white ribbon a warm welcome. He said he was happy to say, the beautiful village of Montpelier was cleaner and purer than it was several years ago, and that it owed this change to the W. C. T. U. and the drink cure. Hon. Joseph Poland made a few remarks, in which he spoke of woman's influence, and that a woman's finger was more powerful than a man's whole hand. The response was by Mrs. E. S. Farr, of Bristol.

A song followed which was composed for the convention by Mrs. M. E. Hastings, Townshend:

With grateful love and reverent fear
We lift our hearts above,
That safely through another year
We're brought by God's great love.

We praise His Name, that here to-day
We meet these friends so true;
God bless you all, we humbly pray,
And fill your hearts anew.

For greetings kind, accept our thanks,
Your welcome gives us cheer;
We gladly come to swell the ranks,
And join in work so dear.

The rest of the morning was devoted to reports of superintendents. After noontide prayer, we adjourned to meet around the ample tables prepared by the loving hands of our Montpelier sisters.

Wednesday afternoon promise meeting was led by Mrs. F. A. Richardson, of Randolph. Treasurer's report, and reports of the various departments were read. A violin solo was rendered by Master Fred H. Whittier, of Montpelier, which was a rare treat.

Wednesday evening Mrs. Reed gave her annual address, which was fine, and listened to with marked attention. During the past year she has traveled eight thousand miles, and lectured in many places. Mr. Lord and Mr. Nutt spoke of the benefits they had received from the drink cure. The choir of the Unitarian Church rendered several beautiful selections.

Thursday morning a vote of thanks was tendered to commissioners of World's Fair for a place for literature, also to parties in Burlington for a revolving bookcase. A silken bannerette hangs on the bookcase with apple-blossoms painted on it, and Mrs. Housh's beautiful poem:

"Oh, rose and white
Of apple tree!
The year's long night
Kept faith with thee.

"Thy heart of gold
With matchless care,
The germ does hold
Of fruitage rare.

"Chalice and censer swung to the breeze,
Oh, rose and white of the apple trees!
We call thee, call thee divinely fair,
Oh, pearly blooms in the sunny air.

"Divinely fair and divinely sweet!
Fitted art thou for an emblem meet,
Of the woman's heart, so faithful, true;
Watching and waiting and willing to do.

"With our ribbon white we twine thy flowers,
Dear perfumed blooms of the sunny hours,
And pledge to be pure and sweet like thee,
Oh, rose and white of the apple tree!"

We hope every W. C. T. U. woman that visits the great Exposition will read these lines written by Vermont's honorary president.

follows: President, Mrs. Ida H. Read, of Shelburne; secretary, Mrs. Gratia E. Davidson, of Newfane; treasurer, Mrs. E. M. Denny, of Montpelier.

Thursday afternoon Mr. M. S. Stone, state superintendent of schools, made a few pleasant remarks. Mrs. Wilbur, in behalf of the unions of the state, presented Mrs. Read with a small gift. Mrs. Read responded, showing how highly she valued it. Mrs. Harvey, of Kong Pore, India, gave a short account of her work there. She would like to have W. C. T. U. literature sent to Mrs. McBurnie, Kong Pore, India. The postage will be the same as if sent to any part of this country, only be sure to have packages well secured.

Railroad report was read by Mrs. E. B. Lund, of Burlington, and was very interesting. She urged the importance of caring for and sympathizing with men employed on railroads. Mrs. N. E. Purinton, of Starksboro, superintendent of social purity, reported a large increase in interest in this direction, and much good accomplished in holding mothers' meetings and distributing iterature. Addison county reports sixteen mothers' meetings. The thankofferings were brought in amounting to one hundred and thirty-three dollars. The treasurer here announced that Vermont W. C. T. U. was now free from debt, with money in the treasury. At this point the doxology was sung twice, and we feel sure every loyal white-ribbon woman thanked God. Mrs. L. N. Franklin, of Rultand, spoke in a decided and energetic manner of law and the manner of enforcing it. A letter was read from Mrs. Housh, in which she asked that Hebrews 13: 20, 21 be read.

Another letter was also read from our own Frances Willard in Switzerland to Mrs. Davidson, our much esteemed secretary. Miss Willard feelingly referred to Vermont as being the birthplace of her sainted mother, and that she loved all the women as sisters. Thursday evening, recitations, with a short address and singing, closed the exercises. The White Ribbon Quartette furnished very acceptable music through the convention.

Dear sisters, let us work with a stronger determination to put down this terrible evil, and at our next convention be able to see larger results from our labor. "For I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee."

VIRGINIA.

A SUCCESSFUL STATE GATHERING.

The eleventh annual convention of the Virginia W. C. T. U. was held in Staunton, September 20–22, in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. There were seventy-one officers and delegates present. As they arrived in groups on the evening of the 19th, they were met at the stations by a committee from the union, and the warm handshakes and cordial greeting made all feel that tney were indeed welcome to the picturesque city of Staunton. Many were too tired to attend the consecration meeting that night, but those who did go, felt that it was good to be there.

The convention proper was opened at 10 a. m. on the 20th, devotional exercises being conducted by the Rev. W. E. Cox, of the Baptist church. After the routine work of appointing committees, the president, Mrs. R. H. Jones, of Norfolk, read her annual address which contained many suggestions for the advancement of our work.

Next came a review of the year's work by our corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. M. M. Fultz, of Staunton, which gave evidence of growth in the work and showed that more of our women than ever before are wearing their white ribbons. This little emblem can preach a strong sermon wherever seen. Next year we hope to hear that all wear it.

In the afternoon Rev. Wm. Cummings, of the Presbyterian church, extended a most cordial welcome to the convention in behalf of the ministers of Staunton.

He welcomed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, first as a union, because there is strength in union; as a temperance union, because intemperance is the arch enemy of the church of Christ; as a Christian Temperance Union because of one Lord, one faith, and one baptism; as a Woman's Christian Temperance Union because the Bible indorses woman's work, and the Lord Jesus Christ commissioned a woman to first tell of His resurrection.

The convention was also welcomed in behalf of the city by the mayor, in a humorous address referring to the good done by the W. C. T. U., and contrasting this convention with the one held nine years ago in the same place, when there were only twenty officers and delegates in attendance, and only one had confidence enough to say aye out loud when a question was put by Miss Willard. He humorously said, "You must not discuss suffrage, because we men want to do all the voting and hold all the offices."

A brief, but beautiful and cordial welcome was then extended by the president of the Staunton union, Mrs. A. M. M. Fultz. Mrs. Atkins, of Onancock, who was on the program for the response, being detained at home, her response was read by the secretary.

Wednesday evening Rev. J. H. Waugh preached the annual sermon from the text, "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Mrs. J. W. Newton, state organizer, gave her report Thursday morning, showing that she had traveled one thousand six hundred miles, organized several new unions, and in all added about two hundred members There were many testimonies from the unions she had visited of the good she had done, not only in adding new members, but in explaining the work and in strengthening and setting to work those willing but not "knowing how." She was reëlected organizer.

Of the nineteen department reports, those of prison and jail and flower mission deserve special mention. Both were so full and showed so much done to cheer and up lift the unfortunate and afflicted.

The health report showed that at last the Virginia women are doing something in this line. The superintendent presented an essay, "Why has the W. C. T. U. a Health Department? Why as Women? Why as Christians? Why as Reformers?" An essay on physical culture in its relation to temperance was also read.

The report on scientific temperance instruction showed that in many schools temperance physiologies are used and in some others charts are used, but we have yet no compulsory law that we need so much.

This is the first year that contests have been held to any extent. A superintendent was elected a year ago and this year she reported thirty-nine silver and two gold contests held.

There was a contest for gold medal the last evening of the convention. Five unions and Y's were represented. The successful contestant was Miss Lambert from Atlantic City union. Miss Kearney presented the medal.

Thursday evening Miss Belle Kearney gave an eloquent address upon young women's work.

Memorial services were held for Mrs. C. G. Nichols, state financial secretary, who died in May.

The election of officers resulted in the reelection of Mrs. R. H. Jones of Norfolk, for president, Mrs. Howard M. Hoge of Lincoln, recording secretary, and Mrs. J. W. Newton, of Staunton, treasurer. Mrs. Fultz declining to serve as corresponding secretary again, Mrs. M. P. Frestoe, of Riverton, was elected her successor.

Resolutions expressive of our loss in the death of Miss Casseday and Miss West and of sympathy with Miss Willard were passed.

It was also resolved to petition the legislature to raise the age of consent for girls, to place women physicians in asylums where there are female patients, for scientific temperance instruction law, to separate boys in our jails and prisons from the old and hardened criminals.

The Staunton Daily News says: "Those who attended any of the sessions must have been struck with the earnestness and business capacity of the ladies participating. While perhaps not such sticklers for the minutiæ of parliamentary procedure, the ladies, nevertheless, manage to dispatch business with a vigor, intelligence and harmony that might be emulated by the 'men folks.'"

Recording Secretary, Lincoln.

COLORADO.

ANOTHER YEAR

Is numbered with the past, as we record the proceedings of the fourteenth annual convention held in the quiet, beautiful city of Boulder, bounded on the one side by the towering, noble Rockies, and on the other, by the limitless, fertile plains, each vieing with the other to lure us from things earthly to those of life eternal. Nothing was left undone by the loving members of the unions and friends thereof, for the comfort and entertainment of the one hundred and thirty delegates assembled; and this marks an era of the largest representation ever held in our Silver state. If we cannot have free silver, we may boast of free, unbounded, open hospitality on the part of the denizens of this western country.

Our hearts were also full of gratitude to the "Father of Lights in whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," that our beloved president, Mrs. Eva C. Higgins, who was an invalid so many months of the year, was able to preside through all the session, including the executive meetings.

The First Congregational church, in which the convention was held, was tastefully decorated with banners, appropriate mottoes and potted plants with beautiful bloom, and many choice cut flowers for the president's desk and the different tables for the use of the secretaries and reporters.

The first business was the recommendation of the state superintendents as follows: Evangelical, Mrs. E. F. Leonard; prison and jail work, Mrs. S. M. Likens, Denver; mothers' work, Mrs. E. K. Reynolds, Pueblo; purity in literature and art, Mrs. Dr. Walters, Pueblo; railroad work, Mrs. A. J. Fairbanks, Pueblo; work among miners, Mrs. M. L. Meredith, Montrose; franchise, Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, Denver; flower mission, Mrs. Helen Babcock, Colorado Springs; opium and narcotics, Dr. Genevieve Tucker, Pueblo; kitchen garden, Mrs. A. B. Sinclair, Denver; press, Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor, Denver; legislation and petition, Mrs. J. B. Belford, Denver; unfermented wine, Mrs. S. J. Corbin, Fort Collins; foreign literature, Mrs. J. A. Temple, Denver; parliamentary usage, Mrs. Nellie Hewitt, Colorado Springs; young woman's work, Mrs. R. R. Webb, Longmont; state and county fairs, Mrs. J. T. Irvine, Rocky Ford; juvenile work, Mrs. Maude L. Greene, Manitou; relation of temperance to labor, Mrs. Anna Steele, Denver; English literature, Mrs. H. Balcomb, Colorado Springs.

The revision of the constitution was considered and it was recommended to continue the district unions and retain the superintendents on the executive committee.

Committees were appointed on credentials, resolutions, plan of work, courtesies, auditing, and awarding of prize banners.

The report of work in Arapahoe county was given by the president, Mrs. M. A. Cassell, of Denver: Number of unions, twelve women's unions, five specials and ten Loyal Legions; number of membership, three hundred. Eighteen different lines of work were carried on. Three new unions were organized during the year.

Pueblo county, reported by Mrs. Patterson, of Pueblo, has six unions, and good work is being done in the various departments.

Larimer county was reported by Mrs. Tanner, of Fort Collins. The number of members was eighty-eight. There is neither a saloon nor a billiard hall in Larimer county. Special attention is given to franchise.

Noontide prayer was led by Rev. Ella F. Leonard, of Denver.

"Superintendents of Scientific Temperance Instruction" was discussed by Mesdames M. E. Wiley and E. M. Craise; "Sabbath Observance," by Mrs. J. M. Wiley, of South Denver.

The work in Boulder county was presented by the president. Nine departments of work are taken up here.

Miss Winifred Spaulding, corresponding secretary, made the following report: There are seventy-three unions in the state, about one thousand six hundred members and two hundred and fifty honorary members; eleven thousand dollars have been expended for the different departments.

Mrs. Ella F. Leonard gave a report of work done in the evangelistic department.

A vocal duet with guitar accompaniment was rendered by Misses Henderson and Gregg, of Boulder.

The work of purity in literature and art was ably presented by Mrs. Dr. Walters, of Pueblo.

Legislative and petition work has been carried on by Mrs. Frances Belford, of Denver, and her report was read by the recording secretary.

State Senator Lockwood, of Boulder, was introduced and spoke warmly on purity in politics.

The Temple was reported by Mrs. A. J. Gilbert, of Colorado Springs. English literature has been distributed in large quantities by the superintendent, Mrs. H. Balcomb, of Colorado Springs.

Railroad work was reported by Mrs. A. J. Fairbanks, of Pueblo, superintendent. She has been enthusiastic and worked well among railroad employés, distributing two thousand five hundred and thirteen pages of reading matter.

Press work was given by the superintendent, Mrs. S. L. Teetor.

The work in the Western district was reported in a paper sent from the president, Mrs. S. B. Pickett, of White Water.

The work among miners was presented in a paper sent from the superintendent, Mrs. M. L. Meredith, of Montrose.

Addresses of welcome were given by the mayor, Hon. James Cowie, Miss L. A. Dwight, president W. C. T. U., Mrs. A. A. Reed, president Y's, of Boulder, and Rev. R. A. Chase, pastor of the M. E. church, where was held the evening meetings; response by Miss Winifred Spaulding, and after delightful music, furnished by a quartette from the Presbyterian church, Mrs. Higgins delivered her annual address, that was a most thoughtful production, the finest she has ever given, and was received with great applause and approval. By unanimous vote it was decided to have it printed in pamphlet form.

The treasurer, Mrs. Myra R. Sprague, reported total receipts, $4,098.42; expenses

CONSUMPTION

$3,646.76; cash balance, $451.66, of which $300 is tied up in one of the National banks of Denver, a deplorable fact, when we realize the "fields are white unto the harvest."

Reports of Southern districts were read by the recording secretary. Mrs. Bradley, of the Colorado Suffrage Association, was introduced, also Drs. Yoakum and Holmes, of Denver, and Mr. J. T. Bailey, of Cripple Creek.

A paper, on "Opium and Narcotics," was sent by Dr. Genevieve Tucker, of Pueblo, and was read by the recording secretary. "Mothers' Work" was presented in a most comprehensive manner by Mrs. E. K. Reynolds, of Pueblo. "Relations of Temperance to Labor" was given by Mrs. Anna Steele.

A letter of sympathy was sent to Mrs. C. D. N. Thompson, of Longmont, who was unable to attend the convention because of a severe illness. Rev. S. R. Wheeler, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church of Boulder, was introduced, and spoke approvingly of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

A carefully prepared paper on "Divorce," by Mrs. E. K. Reynolds, was listened to with interest.

Dr. A. M. Holmes' paper, on "Heredity and Environment" was highly instructive, and the subject was well handled. Dr. Kate Lobingier, of Denver, gave a most practical talk on "Scientific Instruction the Foundation of Purity." This was followed by Dr. F. Yoakum, of Denver, on the subject of "Social Purity." A vote of thanks was tendered these physicians for their valuable papers.

The children's hour, conducted by Mrs. Maude Greene, National W. C. T. U. lecturer, was participated in by 150 children, mostly members of the Loyal Temperance Legion, who sang rousing temperance songs. A duet, "Drink Water," was sweetly sung by two little misses, Edith and Gracie Davis, daughters of Rev. Davis of Boulder. The chalk talk was a delight to all, greatly enthusing the youthful listeners.

In the evening an attractive program was rendered, consisting of addresses by Miss Winifred Spaulding and Mrs. Wrigley. A pleasing chorus was well sung by eight young ladies, entitled "We Are Daughters of a King." Other musical selections were a solo, "Ave Maria," by Mrs. Dr. Parsons and a male quartette, "Jesus Only." A temperance recitation was given by Miss Bertha Pettingill of Boulder.

On the last day Mrs. J. A. Temple, superintendent of foreign literature, reported good work done, especially among the Italians and Germans. Greetings were sent to the Idaho State W. C. T. U. convention, assembled in Pocatello, Idaho. Titus 3:15.

The Crittenton Home was next discussed, and it was decided to make it a state W. C. T. U. institution, hoping for an appropriation for its support from the Legislature and combining the Cottage home for foundlings under the control of the union.

Mrs. S. M. Likens was made superintendent of rescue work.

The revision of the constitution of the Cottage home was presented by Mrs. E. M. Craise, chairman of the committee. It was adopted.

The Bulletin was reported by the editor, Miss Winifred Spaulding, and a proposition was made by Mr. William Trowbridge, of Colorado Springs, to unite with the Plaindealer on a fair basis, which was accepted.

Delegates sent to the World's and National conventions are: Mrs. Eva Higgins to the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention; to the National convention, Mesdames Howard, Hogle and Williams, and for the Y's, Mrs. Maude Greene; alternates, Mrs. M. E. Brazee, Mrs. J. B. Belford, Mrs. M. E. Wiley.

The Cottage home was reported by Mrs. S. M. Likens: Receipts, $1,753.45; expenses, $1,753.36; balance on hand nine cents.

A very interesting time was had at the election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Eva C. Higgins, Denver; vice-president, Mrs. Mary Jewett Telford, Grand Junction; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ella B. Gittings, Colorado Springs; recording secretary, Mrs. Sarah L. Teetor, Denver; treasurer, Mrs. Myra R. Sprague, Denver. A telegram was received from the Rocky Ford union congratulating Mrs. Higgins on her reëlection and inviting the convention to come there next year. An invitation was also sent from the Greeley W. C. T. U. These were left to the decision of the executive committee.

The closing exercises were held in the Methodist church where was gathered a large and intelligent audience. The memorial service for those "departed in the faith" was most impressive and was conducted by Rev. Ella F. Leonard, of Denver. Mrs. Higgins spoke feelingly of Mrs. Carrie M. Shapleigh, the former treasurer, and Miss Amy Gregg, for Mrs. T. M. Wallace, one of the foremost workers in the state. A solo was rendered by Mrs. S. L. Teetor, entitled, "Only remembered by what we have done."

The remainder of the program pertained to the suffrage question. The address by Senator Chas. H. Hartzell was forceful and to the point. Appropriate musical selections were enjoyed: Quartette, "Suffrage Bells," by Mesdames Davis and Wrigley, Messrs. Chase and L. Davis, and solo by Mrs. Teetor, "Our Women Must Help Make America Free."

The prize banners were awarded to the Y's of Boulder and the Loyal Temperance Legion of Rocky Ford and the Jennie Smith W. C. T. Union of Denver. The presentation address was by Mrs. E. M. Craise, of Denver. Convention closed with all singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

Having accepted the appointment of superintendent of press work for another year, before knowing that greater honor was to be bestowed, it would seem best that another shall assume these duties and carry forward aims and plans that may be perfected by abler pen and willing mind. We now say to the new year,

"Friend, come thou like a friend,
And whether bright thy face
Or dim with clouds we cannot comprehend,
We'll hold out patient hands, each in his place,
And trust thee to the end."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

VIRGINIA's state president, Mrs. R. H. Jones, of Norfolk, was reëlected to that office at the recent convention.

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN, the southern temperance orator, is located for the present, in Chicago, and is giving lectures in the vicinity.

AT the Demorest silver medal contest during the recent W. C. T. U. state convention, at St. Paul, Minn., Miss Phœbe C. Nicholas was the happy winner of the prize.

MISS CLARA PARRISH, National organizer, is in the East, having spoken most acceptably on the Y evenings at Ohio, Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey conventions.

ANY one desiring a number of religious papers, and back files of THE UNION SIGNAL for distribution can have the same by sending address to Carrie F. Boggs, Lovington, Ill.

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS was reëlected state president at the Illinois convention. No changes were made in the state officers excepting that of corresponding secretary, which on resignation of Miss Gregory, was filled by Miss Helen Walker.

ALTON, Ill., W. C. T. U. held a meeting, by invitation, in a beer garden, a notorious place, where several men have recently been killed. There was no town hall, no church, and the beer man offered his garden. The speaker stood on a dance platform, and addressed about five hundred people, most of whom had to stand all the time. Thirty-seven came forward and signed the pledge, several of them drinking men.

THE officers of the young people's church societies of Chicago and the members of their temperance committees have been invited to a reception which is to be given at the Kindergarten College parlors, 10 Van Buren St., Chicago, Saturday evening, October 14. This reception is in honor of visiting Y leaders and workers, and is given by the Y's of Chicago and vicinity preparatory to the conventions. Music, refreshments and short addresses will be the order of the evening.

NEBRASKA is solid for the Temple as witness the following resolutions which were passed at the annual convention of the Nebraska W. C. T. U. at York, Sept. 26-30:

WHEREAS, it appears that certain papers and documents containing grave and, we believe, unsupported charges against the Temple in Chicago, its management and the enterprise as a whole, have been circulated among the local unions of Nebraska, and sent to individuals, ignoring the general officers of the state, and in many cases the district and other officials; therefore

Resolved, that we disapprove entirely of such a method of entering our state for the purpose of creating distrust and discouragement, depressing a great work that has for several years received the endorsement of both the National and Nebraska unions, often recognized and named as one of the great affiliated interests of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and further,

Resolved, That we express our sympathy for Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president of the Temple trustees, in the attacks, personal and otherwise, made upon her and consider that they hinder a great cause and give aid and comfort to its enemies, and

Resolved, That as a state union and as individuals, we pledge a continuance and increase of financial and moral support to the "Taj Mahal" of America's womanhood.

The resolutions were adopted with enthusiasm and by a rising vote.

RAILROAD RATES.

To White-Ribboners of the United States:

On all western roads, one fare for the round trip, plus $2. This rate is good on all days and all trains and until November 15.

All eastern roads give a one fare rate, tickets good for ten days. This fare is only given on certain days. The dates are different on different roads, and must be ascertained from your local agents, as it is impossible to announce them all through THE UNION SIGNAL.

As it is desirable and more pleasant for delegates from the same state to come over the same road, you are requested to write the presidents of your respective states for information concerning the route selected for your state delegation.

HOTEL RATES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION.

It is impossible this World's Fair year to secure special concessions from hotels for the National Convention, but the following schedule is presented from those within two or three blocks or less of the Art Palace. These are for rooms only. All have restaurants connected with the house except the Grand Union; there are many others at reasonable prices at convenient distance, and there is an excellent one in the Art Palace itself.

PER DIEM.

Palmer House, Monroe street and Wabash avenue, two in a room, $1.50 each and upward,

Brunswick, Michigan avenue and Adams street, outside rooms, one in room, $1.50; outside rooms, two in a room, $2.50; outside rooms, three in a room, $3; court rooms, one in room, $1; court rooms, two in room, $1.50. These rates are to be divided by the number of persons in the room.

Windsor Hotel, Dearborn, between Monroe and Madison streets, two or more in a room, $1 each person.

Continental, corner Madison and Wabash avenue, two or more in room, 75 cts; and one dollar each, according to room.

Grand Union, Dearborn, between Madison and Monroe streets, $1 each person.

Room for one or two during Convention at Oak Park, eight miles out on Northwestern road. Bus from depot to Convention hall. Cost, including fare, $1 per day, two in room; breakfast 35 cents.

Mrs. M. F. Allen, 4247 Calumet Ave., can accommodate ten or twelve ladies for Convention, 50 cts. to $1 each per room, near elevated station.

Mrs. Marion Skinner and Mrs. L. A. Burm, North Harvey, can accommodate ladies at 75 cts. per night; this includes two meals.

ESTHER PUGH.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form, and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

Our Library Table.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE for this month contains a well adjusted proportion of instruction and recreation. One of the most valuable articles is that entitled "The Harvard Psychological Laboratory" by Herbert Nichols. A finely illustrated article by Francis Gribble is "Mountaineering Adventure." Other features go to make this an acceptable number.

S. S. McClure, publisher; 743 Broadway, New York City.

THE QUARTERLY ILLUSTRATOR this month makes complete the first year of its existence. It has been a unique publication, successfully combining the requirements of a high-class art journal and a popular illustrated magazine. The current issue contains nearly three hundred illustrations representing the work of over one hundred and fifty artists, and the accompanying reading matter is of fine literary quality.

Harry C. Jones, publisher, 92 and 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The October issue of OUR LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN is as full of timely and striking matter as the magazines designed for the older folk. The delightful little people in "A Little Columbian Grandpapa" go to the World's Fair and see Phronsie Pepper and some of their other favorites in the Children's Building, as well as many other interesting things. The instructive bit of natural history is made as attractive as a fairy tale. Clearly, the days have gone by when dull "primer" literature was good enough for the children.

THE CHAUTAUQUAN for October has for its opening number a richly illustrated article by Prof. H. H. Boyesen, entitled "Village Life in Norway." Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward has a complete story, entitled, "A Point of Order," in her most delightful vein. Bishop John H. Vincent takes his readers from Bremen to Christiania, the text being accompanied by fitting illustrations. The frontispiece of this number is an excellent portrait of Washington Irving, accompanying a finely appreciative article on Irving by the Rev. W. W. Gist, D. D. These are but a small part of the ever excellent contents of this valued periodical.

Published at Meadville, Pa.

Prof. T. Harwood Pattison, D. D., opens the October HOMILETIC REVIEW with a comprehensive article, "The Minister's Literary Culture," in which he pleads for a broader education of the ministry along literary lines. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts contributes an architectural paper entitled "The Model Church." Under the department of Living Issues, Rev. Samuel Schwarm, Ph. D., discusses "Lawlessness and Law Enforcement." The whole number is filled with practical suggestions for preachers of the gospel in their several capacities.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York City.

Hundreds of lads and lasses miss their old friend WIDE AWAKE which has been merged into ST. NICHOLAS, but the publishing house which has heretofore sent out both magazines to its hosts of young friends understands their needs too well to take any step not for their advantage and enjoyment. So it is in order to speed the departed and welcome the present guest and rejoice over the feast of fat things in the October issue of the young folks' "Saint." Two stories in this issue that will especially reach the boy readers are "A Seventh Son" by Margaret Johann, and "Two Bells," by Christopher Valentine.

The Century Co., Union Square, New York.

Easily first among the attractions of the October CENTURY is the account of "Taking Napoleon to St. Helena," from an unpublished diary of the trip, written by John R. Glover, Secretary of Admiral Sir George Cockburn, to whom this was assigned. The diary bears evidences of the most accurate record of the Emperor's unrestrained conversation with Admiral Cockburn. In this issue Miss Grace King concludes her series of balcony stories which have been so originally entertaining. The second part of Bret Harte's story, "The Heir of the McHulishes" is given, and also the final chapters of "Benefits Forgot." "The Cats of Henriette Ronner," the Dutch painter whose pictures are a feature of the World's Fair, is the title of an article by Thomas A. Janvier, which is illustrated by engravings of some of the best examples of Madame Ronner's work. "Walt Whitman in War-Time," is the title of a collection of familiar letters from the Capital, written to the poet's mother, and giving a graphic view of the events of those days. The letters are accompanied by a portrait of the poet.

Signal Notes.

A BOOK on famous women has been published in Italy.

"SATURDAY, pay day, drink day, crime day."—Lord Bramwell.

THE engraver of medals at the Royal mint in Stockholm is a woman.

FOURTEEN out of the sixteen viceroys of China are strong anti-opiumists.

THE California W. C. T. U. will employ no worker or speaker who uses tobacco.

To meet increased expenditure for military purposes, Sweden is to levy a tax on malt.

AMONG the most recent organizations is a temperance society among the Spiritualists of Switzerland.

WOMEN florists are achieving great success in their business, which seems preëminently adapted to them.

"THROUGH drink there are half a million homes into which happiness never comes." —A brewer, one hundred years ago.

IT is only very recently that the Russian Government has ceased to regard temperance societies with great distrust.

THE Indians of Eastern Washington have taken steps to prevent the sale of liquor among them by unprincipled whites.

T. D. CROTHERS, M. D., an American authority on the subject, states that alcoholism is on the decrease among women in this country.

THE Glasgow University Total Abstinence Society carries on work both in and out of the University, the latter being principally in a mission.

A WOMAN is one of the best veterinary surgeons in New Orleans. As she is a wealthy woman, she does her work for love of animals, not for pay.

THE governor of Moscow has increased the severity of his Jewish persecutions. This is having a ruinous effect on real estate and other interests, as fully thirty thousand lodgings are empty.

A CIVIL engineer in India, in writing to a brother in England, who proposed joining him, said that unless his total abstinence principles were well established he had better bring his coffin with him.

THE five separate branches of the Norwegian Women's Total Abstinence Union are now formed into a National organization in conjunction with the Young Women's Christian Association.

PROFESSOR LEVI has made a calculation that the wage earning classes of England spend eighty-five million dollars a year in drink, and to-day there are thousands of them houseless and starving.

A PETITION signed and sent by the women in a Norwegian town to the local board protested against the employment of girls in café and brandy shops, asking that the brandy shops be forced to close earlier. The result was a victory for the women.

IT is sometimes stated that none but low caste Hindus have accepted Christianity. This is combated by the Rev. H. L. Mukerjee, who gives a list of twenty-seven Indian men of position who within fifteen months have adopted the Christ of the New Testament.

THE gypsies of Great Britain live as ignorant of God as though in the darkest realms of heathendom. A gospel wagon mission is about to be started which will be sent to the centers where they gather, there to open schools and preach the gospel to them.

IN a recent graduating class at Amherst College, it was found that the non-users of tobacco had gained twenty-four per cent in weight, thirty-seven per cent in height, forty-two per cent in chest girth and had eight cubic inches greater lung capacity than the users of the weed.

A BILL has been reported in the Massachusetts legislature which provides that any person imprisoned before trial shall be released six months on bail, unless the government can prove that material witnesses have been enticed away or are unable to attend on account of sickness. This will prevent such long and unjust imprisonment as that undergone by Lizzie Borden.

SPECIAL!

From the Chicago press of October 2:

HARRISBURG, PA., Oct. 1.—At 12:30 tonight the Indian special, with 500 students and the entire faculty of the Indian Training school at Carlisle on board, steamed out of the Union station en route to the World's Fair. Capt. R. H. Pratt, the projector and superintendent of the institution, hopes to show to the world the advantages of his plan of making the Indians useful and self-supporting citizens. He favors the breaking up of tribal relations and herding of the aborigines on reservations. This trip to Chicago is unique in its way, and no school has ever attempted such an excursion at its own expense. The Indian boys and girls are paying all their own expenses from the earnings of the last six months, and they are looking forward with much pleasure to the week's sight-seeing.

The November number of The Advance Guard will be an "Indian" issue, containing the essay on the Indians of Wisconsin, written for the Wisconsin State L. T. L. convention, full account of this remarkable visit of the Carlisle school, the Carlisle exhibit at the Exposition, etc.

The Advance Guard is a magazine "in the interests of the young people who are soon to assume the rights of American citizenship." It contains the lessons, programs, etc., for the Senior Grade of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Are you supporting it as you should?

COMING!

Among the suggestions made in the letters lately received by our editor of the Leaflet Department, in response to the questions sent from this office, none occurs more frequently than the call for short, crisp, cheap leaflets, for children, mass-meetings, etc. This demand we shall meet in a few weeks with several new series, for which we prophesy a hearty welcome.

Watch the Publisher's column in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Of our children's temperance literature on the table in the library of the Children's Building, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates writes: "I will keep some of the cards and papers upon the library table as long as they last. They are certain to be carried off, which is probably what you wish. No one can tell which of the seeds strewn along the highway may grow and blossom. None of these, I hope, will be wasted."

Are you helping to scatter seeds?

If you come to the Convention you want the DAILY.

If you are unable to attend you want the DAILY.

Send 25c at once, and have the five numbers delivered to you daily.

TO THE MEMBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

We take pleasure in announcing that the Subscription Book Department of THE WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION has been re-organized under NEW MANAGEMENT, and a strong effort will be made to place it on a paying basis. As one of the objects of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the publication and circulation of temperance and religious books, we earnestly solicit the co-operation of every member and every Christian worker. If you are not in a position to represent us in your neighborhood yourself, try and induce some worthy young man or lady to take up the work. IF YOU CAN DO NO MORE, at least fill out and mail us the coupon, below, giving the names of several energetic persons in need of profitable employment.

The best season in the whole year for selling books is now at hand. Thousands of books will be sold during the next few months for Christmas presents alone, and, with your assistance, GREAT RESULTS may be accomplished. WILL YOU AID US, AND, AT THE SAME TIME, BENEFIT YOUR COMMUNITY BY THE INTRODUCTION OF INSTRUCTIVE and MORAL BOOKS?

We have the finest line of subscription books published, and WILL PAY ESPECIALLY LIBERAL COMMISSIONS TO AGENTS. Among our publications may be mentioned:

"FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND."

"GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS."

An Autobiography of FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Prepared by special and unanimous request of the National W. C. T. U.

In this work is portrayed the life of the most widely known woman in America, as well as THE ONLY COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION and Kindred Organizations. In this book is told the story of a prairie girl's career, far transcending in interest and influence that of any other modern woman. The work is splendidly illustrated. Among the illustrations are a FULL PAGE STEEL PORTRAIT OF MISS WILLARD, and a DOUBLE-PAGE LITHOGRAPH in gold and colors of the BATTLE FLAG OF THE WHITE-RIBBON ARMY. Miss Willard's popularity and the low price of this work, insures an immense and steady sale. The book is 9½ inches long by 6½ inches wide, and contains over 700 pages. It retails as follows:

Fine English Cloth, Marble Edges, - - $2.25

"CHILDHOOD: Its Care and Culture."

By MARY ALLEN WEST.

"THE CHILDHOOD OF TO-DAY IS THE NATION OF TO-MORROW."

There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual and spiritual. A WHOLE LIBRARY IN ONE BOOK. EVERY PARENT NEEDS IT.

The Standard.—This book is a revelation as to the duty of parent to child.

Toledo Blade.—It is a work that all true parents will gladly welcome in their households, for it breathes a Christian spirit through every page.

North American Review.—The subject is one of vast moment, and deserves the exhaustive treatment it has received.

Northwestern Christian Advocate.—Parents will greatly enjoy this book, and not a little of it may be used to the great advantage of children themselves.

This splendid book contains over 750 pages, with 16 FULL-PAGE illustrations and 13 PIECES OF MUSIC.

THE JUNIOR PARTNERS.

By ABEL M. RAWSON.

A WONDERFUL, POWERFUL AND REMARKABLY INTERESTING STORY

Of SOCIAL AND COMMERCIAL LIFE, THE SALOON AND THE INSANE ASYLUM. Its arguments are subtle, clear, comprehensive, convincing, and cover new ground in the relation of drink to insanity. It will command and enchain the interest of thousands of readers who consider moderate drinking as being without danger.

Denver Times.—"The Junior Partners" is a powerful temperance story, and has for its fundamental truth the theory that intemperance is a disease, inherited in many cases, and should be treated as such.

Philadelphia Inquirer.—It is a transcript of real life, and full of interest.

The Sunday Item, Philadelphia.—The descriptive powers of the author are of a high order, a delirium tremens scene being unusually powerfully drawn.

Brooklyn Eagle.—It is more than a temperance story. It is a notable compound, in true American style, of knowledge of the Western world, and its temptations for young men and old.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Cholera is abating in Russia.

This is children's week at the World's Fair.

Great crowds are flocking to the World's Fair.

The corner-stone of a new academy of sciences has been laid in Lincoln Park, Chicago.

The Earl of Elgin's appointment as Viceroy of India has been approved by the Queen.

Italy's day at the World's Fair occurred last Thursday, celebrating the discovery of America.

A terrible wind and rain storm has again destroyed life and property in Florida and Georgia.

Whether Brazil shall again become a monarchy is still undecided, but peace is looked for soon.

Some of the English collieries, which were closed on account of the great strike, have been reopened.

The American yacht, Vigilant, has defeated the British yacht, Valkyrie, in a series of three races for the American cup.

The visiting war fleet of Russia was welcomed with extraordinary festivities by the French people at Toulon, October 13.

A grand military fête was held and the Te Deum was sung in Buenos Ayres, October 12, to celebrate the end of the revolution.

The American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions held its eighty-fourth annual gathering in Worcester, Mass., last week.

Count Taaffe, Austrian prime minister, has introduced a bill in the Reichrath, which will extend the franchise to three million voters in that empire.

The eighth annual convention of the Nebraska Christian Endeavor Union was held in Omaha last week, with four hundred delegates in attendance.

Illinois Y. M. C. A. state convention met at Elgin last Thursday; that of Wisconsin and of Michigan gathered at Beloit and Battle Creek, respectively.

After a thirty-eight hours' session, a vote was taken in the United States Senate, October 13, on the free coinage amendment to the silver repeal bill which was lost. Compromise measures are being offered and the question is still undecided.

It is announced on good authority that the new Chinese minister has asked for certain modifications of the Geary law and an extension of time which, if granted by Congress, will result in a basis of registration acceptable to both governments. A bill to this effect was introduced in the House last week.

MRS. ELIZA J. THOMPSON wishes it stated that serious illness in her family and her own state of health have prevented the completion of "Crusade Sketches" in the manner intended. The remaining two chapters will be added when published in the volume which it is hoped will be ready for a holiday gift. The white ribbon heart will cherish this legacy from "Mother Thompson" as sacred history in the great inspirational movement of the century.

THE International cigar makers' union held its annual session in Milwaukee last week. Most of the sessions were secret, but two actions were given publicity; one was a petition for reduced tariff on leaf tobacco, so that more profit might accrue to the manufacture of cigars, and the other was an indorsement of Governor Altgeld's pardon of the Haymarket anarchists. So far as we know this is the first organization, except an acknowledged anarchists', that has indorsed the Illinois governor's high-handed act. It looks as though the cigar makers' union is willing to be known by the company it keeps.

NOT many people on the busy streets of Chicago know of the beneficent work of the Florence Crittenton Anchorage at 125 Plymouth Place, which has lately been greatly helped by Mr. Crittenton's generous gift of one thousand dollars. Aside from this donation, Mr. Crittenton has given over a thousand copies of his books, "Around the World with Jesus," to be sold for the benefit of the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago.

THE liquor dealers' protective association does not always protect the liquor seller from the evil effects of his nefarious business. A saloon-keeper of Leland, Ill., was defeated recently in all the courts in a suit brought by the widow of a man who had been killed by the cars after drinking in his saloon. The costs of five thousand dollars were assessed the saloon-keeper, a debt which the association was supposed to assume. A mutual deceit is now charged and a suit for ten thousand dollars damages is entered by the saloon-keeper.

THE Philadelphia Sabbath Association, 1224 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, has issued a call for prize essays on the question of Sabbath observance. The competition is open to all, the sole limitations being in the length of the paper and the date of its reception by the association, so that any essay not over one thousand words in length, sent in by January 1, may bring to the writer an award of seventy dollars, or a second prize of thirty dollars. Many whose work will not receive material compensation may, as an even better result, find themselves richer in strengthened conviction concerning the holiness of the Lord's day, and in ability to answer more readily when challenged to defend the faith that is within them.

THE charges made by Rev. E. A. Stone, a Baptist clergyman of Champaign, Ill., against the mal-administration of the municipal officers of that city have resulted in the calling of a grand jury before the circuit court, who are instructed by the judge to make a thorough and searching investigation and not simply a formal one, as "such startling allegations by a gentleman of repute" could not be passed without notice. If every city where "the saloons sell liquor to minors under the eyes of the police; where they run on Sundays without fear of interference from the police; where gambling hells are in operation, and women of questionable reputation parade the streets and ply their nefarious calling," could secure as fearless a complainant and as upright a judge, the results would be immeasurably beneficial to the community.

IT is a curious thing to notice the quiet way in which opponents of prohibition contradict themselves; for instance, take the statements of Police Superintendent Byrnes, of New York, in an article recently published in the New York Herald, in which he says, "There is not to-day a gambling house or race-track pool-room operated in New York City. Repeated raids on this class of resorts by my efficient assistants have broken them up in a most effective manner. But gambling at the race-tracks is securing a great hold on the people." . . A little further on, the same gentleman writes as follows: "The government has been asked to take measures still more Draconian in order to put down gambling, but experience has proved that when people have fallen into bad habits they are not to be brought back to the straight paths of virtue by legislation." We should think that the breaking up of gambling-houses and race-track pool-rooms to such an extent that to-day not one of them exists in New York City, was no small help in the way of keeping people from forming a gambling habit or continuing in it if already formed. However, reasoning in a circle is a part of the necessary logical outfit of those who oppose the principle that law ought to make it as easy as possible for people to do right, and as hard as possible to do wrong.

THE present political and economic conditions of our country have turned into more thoughtful channels the minds of women as well as men, who have hitherto thought that government could almost run itself. An interesting educational organization is the result of this awakening among the women of Los Angeles, Cal. An invitation read in one of the "Angel City's" churches a few months ago for a meeting of those interested in woman's political advancement was responded to by twelve ladies. The meetings have been continued weekly, and the interest has steadily grown. The object of the society is not purely political, but is for the purpose of developing means for self-support for women and to obtain concerted action from women for the amelioration of their condition, politically, socially and financially.

As many readers will doubtless look for some report of the great Conventions in this number of THE UNION SIGNAL, we desire to state that we are obliged to close the forms of this paper Saturday night, October 14, in order to prepare the way for THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL which will be printed by our regular composing force. As the editors will be so occupied with the daily paper, it is possible that the regular weekly edition of October 26 will be a little delayed, but we will do the best we can to get it out on time. Only those experienced in journalism can appreciate the hard work as well as good management required to issue six, instead of one, numbers of a paper in one week. If any mistakes are noticed, we know our kind-hearted readers will excuse them when they realize that night will be literally turned into day by THE UNION SIGNAL staff for the time being, and that meals and rest are necessarily a secondary consideration. The regular Convention number will be issued November 2, and will be, as formerly, a running account of the Conventions, necessarily omitting much that is in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL and adding such new material as will make it virtually a fresh account.

A CORRESPONDENT asks: "Why is it THE UNION SIGNAL has ceased to inform its readers in regard to the condition of affairs at the World's Fair? We have been unable to learn from any paper whether the Fair proper is now kept open Sundays or only the grounds are open to the public, and, if the latter, are those who enter on that day charged the same as those who visit the Fair on other days of the week?" We have said nothing very recently concerning this matter, because there had been no change in the situation. We hurled our invectives fearlessly when the question was first in dispute, and as each scene was shifted in the early summer we chronicled the fact as speedily and strongly as possible. Up to a month ago when the last disgraceful scene was enacted in Judge Goggin's court, which we fully depicted, scarcely an issue left our presses without a remonstrance to the World's Fair management. For the past month there has been nothing to record, and our "mind" had been "freed" so often, that there was nothing more to say. The present situation, as previously stated in these columns, is this: The gates to the Fair proper are open on Sundays, the same admission fee (fifty cents) as on week days is charged, but a vast majority of exhibits are completely covered and many of the buildings entirely closed. The directors claim that they have done all they could to close the Fair, and but for the injunction suit brought by a stockholder, the Fair would have kept the Sabbath two-thirds of the season. We are not attempting to excuse them. We cannot. But for their vacillating and law-breaking actions at the beginning of the season, the gates would have been closed during the entire time and the attendance from the first been as large as during the present month of October. Stockholders would have received a dividend, Chicago's reputation would not have been smirched and, above all, our country would not have posed as a law-breaking, Sabbath desecrating nation.

A DREAM.

BY W. O. FULLER, JR.

I dreamed a dream one autumn night, when all the world lay still,
And methought the streams of Nature had been turned, and ran up hill.
The trees that one time dropped their leaves before the autumn blast,
Bloomed forth as in the freshening spring and held their verdure fast;
The brooks that erstwhile rushing ran to swell the shining sea,
Now sent their waters gurgling back to join the mountain tree;
The clouds no longer wept in mist, the sun shone on serene,
And the tender true of heaven's blue bent ceaseless o'er the scene.

I drew my robe about me and descended to the town,
And took the old familiar streets and walked them up and down.
I saw a group of boys at play, and sadly thought to greet
The boyish curse and much that's worse, as I passed along the street;
But they sported in their fresh young strength, and their laughter rang out clear,
And never a word on the air was heard to offend the shrinking ear.
I well remembered on this street the station stood one time;
But it was gone, and from the spot I heard a church bell chime.

Beyond, the court-house and the jail had fallen in decay,
While moss had grown upon each stone all tumbled as it lay.
I ventured to the haunts of sin, those cess-pools of the vile,
But happy homes bloomed in their stead and made the spot to smile;
I saw no creatures slinking past, marked o'er with vice and sin,
And I heard no oaths commingling with the busy traffic's din.
I saw men buy and sell for gain, but they did it with the heart,
Nor did they drive and rend and strive to win the other's part.
Where were the poor, I wondered, and where the wicked men?
And why did I find things different from what they once had been?

I met an aged Pilgrim, whose beard swept to his knee:
"By thy long gray beard and mild blue eye now stand and answer me!"
I could not say how aged he was, but he was very old,
And on his round and wrinkled top were little flecks of mould.
He bowed him low with courtly grace, and gave me patient heed,
And the things he told me afterwards seemed strange to me, indeed.

I told him of the things I'd seen, how strange they were to me.
"I see no almshouse," thus I spake, "where the almshouse used to be;
Do men and boys no longer curse as they once were wont to do?
Are jails and lock-ups all closed out—saloons and court-house too?
Those open bars, where now are they and their reeling, drunken spawn,
That cursed the town and made it hell from evening until dawn?
Policemen by the dozen yestereve were all around,
But I have looked in vain for one, he is not to be found."

The aged Pilgrim raised his head, and he smiled, as pilgrims will;
"These words you speak, O brother, have caused my heart to thrill,
For they bear me back to other days, when at my father's knee
I listened to the elder tales that he would tell to me;
These things you asked for he recalled, and even in my day
Not all of them had been up-torn and passed from sight away—
'Twas the women did it, brother, by prayer and faith and tears,
And the hoping for the dawning that should come in after years.
The world was in a mighty grip of vice and sin and woe,
And it seemed as though the men were dead, and Hope had gone—below.

"Then came a great uprising of mothers, sisters, wives,
And the seeming dead of humankind were given back their lives;
I cannot say how it was done, or how they saved the town,
But before their prayers and patient works the walls of Sin went down;
Saloons went first, and with them went the evils of their reign—
Jails, courts, police, the almshouse too, and a long and costly train;
Peace is upon the nations, the drunkard drinks no more,
And the waves of a great millennium are beating on every shore."

Thus spake that aged Pilgrim in a voice both soft and low,
And gathered his skirts about him as he rose and turned to go.
"Study in patience," he murmured, "oh, brother of younger days,
And you will learn when the Sun of Peace first shed its illum'ning rays.
Pardon a homely saying, but the world 'has gone on swimmin'"
Since out of the night arose in their might the Christian Temperance women!"

MARK KEITH'S ESCAPE.

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

Lyman came slowly down the village street, if the grass-grown road deserved that name. But the steeple of a little white-painted church rose sharply from the crest of the hill; the smoke of a forge fire was already curling upward and, looking back from the low store whose windows showed a few ribbons and high-colored goods, mingled with packets of household necessaries, one saw farm lands stretching away, and heard the tinkle of sheepbells from the hillsides where they were beginning their eager cropping of the short, sweet grass. On another hill a mile beyond, other steeples rose, and the scattered houses, far more numerous than here, made up the town itself, of which this little offshoot shared only the name,—Preston there, West Preston here. Lyman had paused, but his eyes though fixed on the hill saw only his own thoughts. Troubled ones it was plain, for he frowned as he stood there, and his fresh, boyish face with its steady gray eyes and shock of red-brown hair, was perplexed and wrathful.

"I'll not believe it," he said; "I'll not believe it. If the sheriff and the whole church synod at his back swear to it, I won't! There's a mistake somewhere; but where? and where is Mark? If he'd show himself, I believe it would come right; or it would with anybody but Elder Simmons, hard as nails and cold as ice."

"Why do you linger without when work awaits within?" said a measured voice, and Lyman started, clenching his fist involuntarily, though it was his mother's brother who spoke, Elder Simmons himself, tall and inflexible, in long gray stockings and knee-breeches, the lingering remains of the old colonial dress. It was 1824, but old fashions held their place, and the Elder's wife knit these long-ribbed stockings, as she had knit them for the two sons, who had long ago escaped to freer air, leaving their places as clerks and general helpers in the store to be filled by another generation.

The old house stood at one side, bare, unpainted, unlovely, and the low building near it, a story and a half high, and used as a store, had been a source of supplies for years to much of the back country. It held also a shoemaker's bench, and Lyman was learning the mysteries of leather, drawing bristles and hammering pegs, with a hungry thought of the woods, and one no less hungry for Dartmouth college, where he meant some day to go. In the meantime he had to rest content with three months' schooling in the winter and much talk with Mark, who had the same hope and the same plan, with no more apparent success in prospect.

Mark was exactly his own age. The little houses, the Kennicott and Keith homesteads, had risen almost side by side in the two clearings, where the tree stumps still showed in the corn, and in the woods at the back they had hunted and fished and trapped, each in its season, and both knowing every inch of the ground. From the time when at six years old they had gone berrying together, and shiftless Joel Murray, who counted as village vagabond and haunted the woods from which most of his living was drawn, had taught them to make their first snare, they had been inseparable. Mark was slight and eager and sensitive, his deep blue eyes flashing with hasty wrath or looking out with wistfulness of apology, and with his mother and the little sister, who was the only one left of many children, he was tender as any woman. Lyman loved him with a sort of passion never put in words, since the old-fashioned New England boy had even fewer at command than the new. He admired him, looked up to him, believed in him in all conceivable ways, and all the more since this vile charge, at the thought of which he trembled and clenched his fist.

Mark was innocent and should be proved so, but how? That morning he had counted over his own little hoard, rolled in an old stocking foot and tucked into a deep crack by the chimney. He had earned every penny of this nine dollars by two years of trapping, of odd jobs of every nature, and it was the beginning of the college fund. One could live on a dollar a week he had been told, and so each dollar was a bit of the term for which he hoped. But three times that nine dollars would be needed to make up the loss, since the roll of money in the Elder's desk had held twenty-seven Spanish dollars, the quarter of the minister's salary, part of which was paid in kind. The Elder, himself, had made up the roll, taking the shillings and half dollars of the churchmembers, varied payments and adding them to the bag of coin, which he would presently carry to the county-town and the bank there. There had been delay in payment, and the roll had lain in his desk for three days before its disappearance. Even when Mark had been seen coming hastily from the dark corner where the desk stood nobody had thought what it might mean, and it was not till the minister chanced to come in that the Elder had lifted the lid, and, after a search which grew more and more excited, turned upon Lyman with a burst of rage.

"It's your doing," he shouted. "You would have that fellow in here, and this is the end of it! Why isn't he here to answer? The young thief!"

"He's no more a thief than I am!" said Lyman furiously, as at last he comprehended what had happened. The elder paid no attention. He had gone to a small chest in the corner where Mark kept the bedding which was used by him and Lyman in the nights which they took alternately under the counter, and where he had also a book or two and some odds and ends. The Elder threw out each thing, shaking it with fury, and making a strange sound, half snarl, half joyfulness, as a coin flew out and rolled toward a crack. The minister put out his foot and stayed it, but the Elder had already caught it.

"It's the proof, the proof!" he cried. "It's one of the very dollars that Bryce paid in on his mortgage. Twenty-seven of them, and all the same year. That don't happen once in a lifetime. I'll have a warrant for the rascal in less than half an hour!"

There was a slight sound overhead, but no one noted it. One or two men had come in, and shook their heads as they looked at the coin.

"Who'd 'a thought it?" they said.

"'Tisn't so!" said Lyman, passionately. "There's plenty of Spanish dollars round. You'll not make me believe that this one was ever stolen—not by Mark Keith, anyway."

"I'm going for a warrant," said the Elder. "This is evidence enough. I'll swear to it anywhere."

"Consider," said the minister, who had kept a troubled silence. "Wait a little. He may explain."

"I don't want an explanation," roared the Elder. "I'm responsible for the money, and he's got to be made to give it up! I'll flog him myself till he makes confession and restitution. The jail's too good for him!"

"You take it too hard, Elder," said the minister, but the Elder had already flung away, and soon, behind his old gray mare, was driving toward the town. Lyman sat down, half stunned, and tried to think. Mark had been there the night before, and in the afternoon Joel Barlow had come in and told them of tracking a bear the night before and then missing it, before he noticed the Elder at his desk in the corner. He had bought some molasses and one or two other things, leaning against a barrel while Lyman did them up, and lingering till the Elder had gone in to supper. He had not been alone a moment that Lyman could remember, and shiftless as he was, no one had ever thought of him as a thief. It was all a puzzle, and it grew more so, for Mark did not appear. The sheriff had come, and a man with him, the warrant made out, and they had looked over the ground and examined the dollar, and at last settled to keep watch near Mrs. Keith's house, since if he were in the neighborhood, that was the point to which he would probably return.

Night came and Lyman at last barred the door, arranged his bed and lay down full of sorrow and wrath, falling at last into troubled sleep and starting up, deep in the night, with a sense of something near him. Long ago the store had been robbed and the boy who had filled his place, left tied and gagged, and he sat up now listening and alert.

"It's me," came a whisper, "Mark. Don't be scared, Lyman."

Lyman put out his hand and caught at Mark. "Why weren't you here to answer for yourself?" he said. "Do you know what they are saying, Mark?"

"I wish I didn't," said Mark almost with a sob. "Do you know where I was, Lyman? I'd gone up into the attic to fill some more cans of paint for Otis, for I'd promised to have them ready, and I heard the whole thing. He said that he'd send me to prison. Do you suppose I'll go and be disgraced forever? I'll hide in the woods a year before that shall happen."

"But you could have explained."

"I couldn't. I saw the whole thing through that hole by the stovepipe. I don't know how that dollar got there any more than you do, and do you think I'm going to lie in jail, till court time comes, and wait for them to find out? I'll get away, to New London, maybe, and ship for somewhere till it gets straightened. I'm not sure that the Elder didn't put it there himself. He hates me enough. Now, Lyman, I'm going, and you must be still and bar the door after me. I don't know how to, but I must. It's easier for mother than it would be to have me in jail. I've been hiding behind the pile of skins in the corner all day, with the rats for company, and the old cat. I'll come back, for it'll come out somehow. It must."

"But, Mark—," began Lyman. He felt as if in a dream. "They'll say you ran away for fear."

"Let them," said Mark. "It's better than jail; and, Lyman, I leave it to you. You've got to find out."

"And what if I can't?"

"Then I'll never come back," said Mark with a catch in his breath, "never."

He crept toward the door and unbarred it. Neither spoke, and in a moment Mark had slipped into the darkness, and Lyman dropped the bar and lay down again, half dazed and wholly miserable. What could he do? What should he do? And this was still the question that went through his dreams and was with him as morning dawned.

THE PRESENT STATUS OF THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

BY H. A. DELANO.

First, no matter what the statistics and reports say, no matter of defeats and retrograde movements, we are sure of one thing, namely, the cause is strong. But that word strong!

Granted once, as politicians and many would-be savans tell us, that it is a moral question; then, we claim, the cause is just as strong as the cause of morality, of righteousness, and truth is strong.

In a republic like this where every Christian voter has opportunity to make and enforce law, where the three or four millions of Christian voters must of necessity decide by their "balance of power" the nation's liberties and laws, things will, at any time, be about as the highest morality shall elect.

If Oriental and pagan teachers have been shocked by the lawlessness, the immorality, and crimes of a great city like Chicago, they have seen a fair measurement of the present status of the conscience of the Christian municipality. This is either a fair truth and one that deserves to be told, or, otherwise, we have not the moral strength, numbers and character generally supposed. It will not do longer to say that these things are the result of indifference, apathy of conscience, or the expediency of wise legislation.

They are the result of license. They are the result of a majority which, up to date, is inclusive of the highest ideal or conscience we have attained. They are the result of a conscience whose high water-mark stops at party loyalty, at selfishness, cowardice or indifference. If figures and facts, trials and tears, vouchers and votes teach anything, they teach just this.

The temperance cause is as strong then, as what? As strong as our churches, our pulpits, our Sunday-schools, and our conferences; as strong as our ethical and economic teaching, as strong as our political ideals, and Christian (?) statesmanship; as strong as the political party we train with, in fine, as strong as the sentiment which crystallizes, concretes, and to coin a word—dynamites itself, in the ballot box of a Christian republic.

Politically: It is no great cause of discouragement that the temperance cause is politically weak. Bear in mind the fact that the cause of finance, the cause of sound currency, the cause of industry, yea, the weal of this entire nation—all suffers at the hands of a hireling senate. The politician is not only boss in our large cities, but he is boss of the whole country. Even the president becomes a figure-head, and sits impatient of delay and dally which jeopardize the financial and industrial interests of the entire country. Everything in this nation is politically weak as long as party is more than patriotism.

And yet, in Kansas, Iowa, in the Dakotas, in Georgia, Missouri, Maine and Vermont, the temperance cause is, politically, stronger than almost any other public interest which is left to the functions of the state. In Iowa and Kansas it is strong enough, at last, to intimidate the politician, and to dismember the party that trifles with it.

Socially: The drink problem socially is the man problem. The man or the race problem with all its questions of heredity, appetite, customs and manners is forever associated with the drink problem. If anybody knows the highest average line of manhood, self-restraint, purity and conscience in American society, then, at that line, he will find the utmost achievements of the temperance cause, socially.

While it is true that the masses drink, that even the "classes," as men go, in clubs, at parties and in the parlor drink, yet among the best, the noblest, the highest class of citizenship, or among artisans, railroad men, educators, clergymen, and the foremost ranks of business men, it is more and more a disreputable and despised practice.

In general, we must go back to the original proposition. For years and years the temperance cause has been, sentimentally, very strong. Sentiment at last ripened to a righteous indignation, and the few stalwart and hopeful, leaped to the final battle line of this whole question—prohibition absolute.

They saw, as good men see to-day, that the only thing to do with a saloon is to kill it. Back of this idea is a deepening conviction and a growing determination upon the part of hundreds and hundreds of thousands—men and women.

Who is sufficient for these things? None, but God. If it is His will to smile upon the church and society which license, guard and befriend a traffic as murderous and infernal as hell; if He is complacent and serene in view of the misery, ruin and death, wrought by this cruel trade, pleased to accept the sort of manhood and womanhood it creates, then it will tarry, vex and enslave, blight and destroy, as hitherto and always it has done. Otherwise, thank God, we are entered upon the beginning of the end.

The cause is as strong as God. It is the cause of humanity, the cause of religion, of ethics, of labor, of home, of economy, of the republic. More prayers, more tears, more literature, more men and women, and more votes are enlisted for it to-day than ever before.

THE ETHICS AND ESTHETICS OF DRESS.

III.

BY HELEN GILBERT ECOB.

The nineteenth century has witnessed the birth of a new order of woman. She is the first fruit of the higher education and the varied experiences and the larger responsibilities which, in the progress of civilization, are accorded to her. The general condition of woman in mediæval and modern society has been one of dependence. Her chief ambition has been social success through the avenue of personal attraction. Her education has been ornamental, her dress has appealed to the senses. Most women would choose a pretty face and attractive manner as the best gifts of heaven because they secure admiration, and admiration develops into love.

The emphasis, apotheosis, of woman's physical attractions has wrought endless mischief. It puts marriage on the plane of sensualism; it robs the home of intelligence and dignity; it leads to vanity and love of display. Time, money, even honor are sacrificed to this all-absorbing love of dress. So perverted have been our ideals that parents who would be quite unwilling to meet the expenses of a higher education for their daughters cheerfully lavish upon them lace and jewels and costly gowns.

The double standard in ethics, which society has reared for mankind and womankind, is clearly defined in relation to vanity. If a man has an absorbing passion for dress he is called a dude. If he seeks to attract attention by showy attire he is an object of scorn. A woman, on the contrary, may take secret satisfaction in the furtive glances cast at her as she passes through the street or enters the drawing-room. The gown and jewels which she wears at a reception are reported in the daily papers, and the fair wearer feels only a sense of pride in the honorable mention. What should we think of the manhood of a nation whose evening dress was described after this manner: "Mr. George S. wore a coat of rainbow-colored peau de soie, with trousers of rose-colored velvet. Beautiful white point lace was festooned about the neck, which was cut square in front. The gentleman's hair was heaped high on the head, and through every fold, wound in and out endless rows of brilliants ran. A band of superb diamonds encircled his throat, and he carried a fan of ostrich tips." What should we think of the manhood of a nation which supported numberless magazines devoted to the details of fashionable dress? What of columns in the papers bearing the significant headlines: "Masculine Foibles," "Follies of the Braves," "Lovely Man's Garb," etc. Shall we never learn that there is no sex in vanity?

The trade-world has taken advantage of woman's vanity and displays her wares as a bait to allure the willing victim. When a single dressmaking establishment in Paris derives a revenue of $6,000,000 mostly from American shoppers, female extravagance becomes worthy the consideration of the political economist. These follies do not really help the industrial world, they only create an artificial basis of trade. In monarchical countries, when the royal family goes into mourning the trade-world is in despair. Industries which supply only superficial wants never give true prosperity.

The lust of dress and the social parade which usually accompanies it, eats into the strength of our commonwealth. Young men are deterred from marriage because their salary is insufficient for the maintenance of family life. Husbands and fathers grow gray in the effort to provide for an extravagant family. The defaulter is goaded to crime by the desperate struggle to keep up the burden of fast living. Every class of women is involved in this hunger and thirst for dress. The fashion is set by that irresponsible wealthy class with which every civilized community is afflicted and from them the contagion spreads like wild-fire through the rank and file of the nation. All this elaboration, intricacy and expense in dress not only emphasize that which is trivial and valueless, but add immeasurably to the burden of life's perplexities.

The moral effect of this slavery and the responsibility of enlightened and intelligent women has never been more strongly set forth than by that champion of applied Christianity, Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, of Chicago:

"The second curse of woman's pride is the lust of beautiful dress, the charm of luxury which money alone brings. How this woos their feet into wayward ways, blinds their eyes to the true realities and throws the soul off its guard until too late to recover the lost ground! Here, again, 'let her who is without sin cast the first stone.' If you, the favored, the enlightened and the beloved, choke down so many noble aspirations, spend so much precious time and so many dollars, wanting which great things pine and die at your very feet, for your jewels, your laces, your cumbersome, costly and oftentimes outrageously inconvenient and indelicate costumes, how much courage have you to throw the stone at the shop girl who ignorantly puts herself in the way of temptation or treachery for the same ends? It was you who fired the ambition of the servant girl to make herself as nearly like you as possible. Some anthropologists have declared that democracy is impossible where the wearing of diamonds and costly jewels is in vogue. Some day we shall realize that not only democracy but virtue dies in the presence of such barbaric survivals. Simplicity and modesty are twin sisters. Chastity and economy live in the same house. If these weaker sisters are to be freed from the thrall of fashion, whose ways ever have a tendency toward death and degradation, you, the stronger and more favored sisters, must face the thrall."

The jeweler's shop and the milliner's showcase are to women what the gin-shop is to men. Both debauch the soul. "The jeweler's shop and the milliner's showcase make trade"? So does the gin-shop make trade. "Diamonds and pearls and precious stones are ours!" Not till the submerged tenth get out of the filth and darkness. Not while hunger and nakedness are in the land.

So long as American women remain in bondage to French fashion-mongers their dress will be fickle, extravagant and sensual, for these fashions are set by women of equivocal character who have no moral purpose in life, and whose empire in maintained through the art of toilette.

How will the new order of woman bear herself toward the subject of dress? Enlightened by true education she will cast off allegiance to absurd and senseless fashions; kindled by the consciousness of Christian sisterhood with her fellow women, she will clothe herself in a manner which will not excite envy or intimidate the humble; sustained by the principles of a self-respecting individualism she will scorn to attract attention by appeals to physical beauty. Her dress will show forth all the graces of true womanhood, simplicity, truthfulness, self-sacrifice, self-respect, love for her fellow-beings and reverence for the Creator.

Art and ethics are very closely allied. Hence it comes about that in redeeming dress from moral degeneracy we are led toward the standards which are truly beautiful. We might, in a humble way compare this reaction against the inanities of modern dress to the influence of the early Renaissance on the art of the middle ages. Science and philosophy were in bondage to ecclesiastical authority. Art was unnatural and unhuman. With the Renaissance came the emancipation of the intellect; the courage born of knowledge; reverence for the human body; patient and loving study of nature. To-day art is calling women away from methods which are artificial and points to those which have been and must be eternally beautiful. Already we see the day coming when there will be a demand for trained and educated mantua-makers.

To be equipped for this profession would require thorough instruction in anatomy; in art as it relates to texture, form, color and drapery; together with a thorough acquaintance with historic dress of early and classic periods. Already there is a demand for teachers in scientific dressmaking. As an example we might instance the New York Teachers' College. In the school connected with the college is a department for dressmaking. It was observed that the conduct of this class was a direct violation of the principles taught in every other department. The college teaches hygiene, the dressmaking class contradicted every law of hygiene. The college teaches art, the dressmaking class contradicted every law of art. The faculty is now endeavoring to equip this department so that it will not stultify the general work of the college.

While holding that the art instinct, in whatever material it seeks expression, may be trained and educated, we would yet emphasize the fact the sources from which it springs are in the heart; the laws which govern its development are established in nature. The artist does not make laws concerning dress, he simply studies nature and applies the teaching. The great value of art-study is that it makes us appreciate nature. The guiding principle in this study is that refined feeling which results from sympathy with nature and reverence for the Creator.

When we analyze the principles which are recognized as essential in artistic dress we find that they are simple, universal and democratic. Take for example the study of color which is the most important element; the development of refined taste in color began when nature's schemes were made a study Nature's great object lessons are open alike to poet and kitchen scullion. Take the structure of dress, and here we are held rigidly by the law of necessity; the form of dress is regulated by the needs of the body just as the telescope is adapted to the mechanism of the eye. Every one who has watched the unconscious grace of a little child may see that the spinal column should not be transformed into a species of ramrod, or the supple body into a hard wooden machine. Follow the law of simplicity, that great canon of art; no one then truly cultured at heart can clothe herself in an ostentatious or elaborate manner.

Artistic gowns are not for a few dilettante ladies who can buy lace by the piece and kid boots to match each gown. It is true of this as of other things, the poor often get what the wealthy fail to attain because their money blocks the way in ministering to display and extravagance. Faculty is born of desire, and those who really wish to break from the bondage of conventional dress find the way.

It is said that Mr. William Gladstone was one day discussing the relation of art and ethics with Mr. W. B. Richmond. The latter was on his way to deliver a lecture to a class of art students in London. As the statesman and the painter parted, Mr. Gladstone said very earnestly: "Tell those art students that they can only express beauty out of a beautiful soul." Herein is the secret of beauty in dress—be true to the Creator and to the highest impulses of your own soul.

Associate with the pure minded; hear the good law; think calmly; act righteously, and lead a life of purity for the complete extinction of suffering. . . . . .

If you want to make Christianity an influence in the East you must send there men of gentleness, lowliness, meekness and tolerance. Buddhism had its missionaries before Christianity was preached. It conquered all Asia and made the Mongolians mild. Its preachers did not go in this grand, fashionable costume of yours, but in the simple garb you see upon this platform. They did not go with a Bible in one hand and a rum bottle in the other, but they went full of love and compassion and sympathy. With these attributes they conquered and they made Asia mild. Slaughter-houses were abolished, public houses were abolished, but they are now on the increase because of the influence of western civilization.

The drink traffic around my field of labor is most distressing, dangerous and destructive to body, mind and soul. No one in Christian lands from which the drink emanates, can imagine the great destruction of the people in pagan lands. Will not Christians and other good people use their efforts to put down the monstrous evil? Will they not protect these people whose government is destroyed by Christian nations?

The Greek church looks upon the drinking of alcoholic liquors as very bad. Apostles and councils of the church oppose it, and the church teaches total abstinence. Europeans have introduced the drink habit, and it is growing upon the members of the Greek church, to its great sorrow.

I read in the Western books and papers all sorts of treatises regarding human rights and right of state, and also I see innumerable works in which profound ethical reason, based on the altruistic sentiment, is earnestly argued to promote human happiness. Again, I observe numerous churches of Christianity and their members, together with the rest of the nation who are sincerely toiling toward the advancement of human good. While I admire this placing of so much importance on these topics I do not understand why the Christian lands have ignored the rights of the 40,000,000 souls of Japan for forty years since the stipulation of the treaty.

You send your missionaries to Japan, and they advise us to be moral and believe Christianity. We like to be moral. We know that Christianity is good, and we are very thankful for this kindness. But, at the same time, our people are very much perplexed and somewhat in doubt about their advise. For when we think some years ago a Japanese was not allowed to enter a university on the Pacific coast of America because of his being of different race; when a few months ago the school board in San Francisco enacted a regulation that no Japanese should be allowed to enter the public school there; when our business men in San Francisco were compelled by some union not to employ the Japanese assistants as laborers, but the Americans; when we see some Western people in Japan who erect before the entrance of their houses a special post upon which is the notice "No Japanese is allowed to enter here," just like a board upon which is written "No dogs allowed"; when we are in such a situation, notwithstanding the kindness of the Western nations from one point of view who sent their missionaries to us, that we unintelligent heathens are embarrassed and hesitate to swallow the sweet and warm liquid of the heaven of Christianity, will not be unreasonable. If such are the Christian ethics, well, we are perfectly satisfied to be heathen.

Our people well know what abstract truth is in Christianity, and we, or at least I, do not care for the names if I speak from the point of teaching. Whether Buddhism is called Christianity or Christianity is called Buddhism; whether we are called Confucianists or Shintooists, we are not particular, but we are very particular about the truth taught and its persistent application. Consistency of doctrine and conduct is the point on which we put the greatest importance.

You, citizens of this glorious, free United States, who, when the right time came, struck for "Liberty or Death"; you who enjoy the fruition of liberty through your struggle for it; you, I say, may understand somewhat our position. And as you asked for justice from your mother country, we, too, ask justice from these foreign powers.

To the promoters of this parliament and the ladies and gentlemen of the world who are assembled here, I pronounce that your aim is the realization of the religious union, not nominally, but practically. We, the forty million souls of Japan, standing firmly and persistently upon the basis of international justice, we await still further manifestations as to the morality of Christianity.

There is an important relationship which Africa sustains to this particular gathering. Nearly 1,900 years ago, at the great dawn of Christian morning, we saw benighted Africa opening her doors to the infant Savior, Jesus Christ.

The very atmosphere here is pregnant with an indefinable, inexpressible something—something too solemn for human utterance—something I dare not attempt to express. Previous to this gathering the greatest enmity existed among the world's religions. To-night—I dare not speak as one seeing visions or dreaming dreams—but this night it seems that the world's religions, instead of striking one against another, have come together in amicable deliberation and have created a lasting and congenial spirit among themselves. May the coming together of these wise men result in the full realization of the general parliament of God, the brotherhood of man.

All true worship is twofold in its direction; it is Godward, and it is manward. The honor and love of God are sure to lead to the honor and love of man. Tenderness and sternness, rebuke and forgiveness mingle into a strange dignity. Meekness, penitence, gentleness, forgiveness, affectionateness, lofty indignation, weeping, compassion are attitudes of the love of man. The devotee is not only kind to man, but kind and compassionate also to all living things. The beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount, the sweet humanities of Buddha, thus become realities of the true instinct of worship. Oneness with God and man, therefore, in perfect love, is the ideal of eastern worship. Communion with God is impossible so long as the flesh and its lusts are not subdued. Hence, renunciation has always been recognized as a law of spiritual progress in Asia. It is not mere temperance, not mere morality, but absolute holiness. The passion for holiness conquers the passion for self-indulgence, and leads to much voluntary suffering. Poverty, homelessness, simplicity have characterized the East. The Brahmins do not charge a fee for teaching sacred knowledge; the missionaries of the Brahmo-Somaj never take a salary.

This great law of self-effacement, poverty, suffering, death, is symbolized in the mystic cross so dear to you and dear to me. Christians, shall you ever repudiate Calvary? Oneness of will and character is the sublimest and most difficult unity with God. And that lesson of unity Asia has repeatedly taught.

A NEW WORK IN THE CHICAGO SLUMS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The heathen at our own doors are more and more engrossing the attention of philanthropists and political economists. The first class named are touched with the pitiable condition incident to the environment of these unfortunates, while the second class see in them a menace to our property and cherished institutions. Although Dr. J. H. Kellogg is well known to be interested in philanthropic enterprise, it may be new to many of your readers that he, in connection with other members of the Battle Creek Sanitarium Company, has entered upon a grand scheme of practical Christian benevolence in Chicago. The Pacific Garden Mission, which was so successfully established by the late Col. George R. Clarke and wife, and which is still ably carried on by Mrs. Clarke, is located in a hall at No. 100 Van Buren street, and adjoining this may be found the Sanitarium Medical Mission work, which includes a free dispensary, free baths and free laundry appliances. It is also the headquarters of five or six sanitarium trained nurses and helpers who do district visiting among the poor, sick people who are unable to come to the dispensary, or who do not know about it. These nurses go about fearlessly and unmolested in quarters where it would be all a respectably dressed man's life would be worth to venture, even in daylight.

One of the sanitarium physicians can be consulted at the dispensary at certain hours every day, while Dr. Kellogg spends every Sunday there in giving personal ministration to poor suffering creatures who are sick, body and soul. This is no slight tax on a man already burdened with professional cares and arduous literary labors, and yet he considers it one of his privileges to thus help his brother men who are down and certainly in need of help.

Despite all that is being done by this and other home missionary enterprises, he says: "If the facilities were ten times as large and the workers ten times as many, there would still be more work than all could do. We are appalled when we think what was the condition of these poor creatures before our workers came to their relief, and how unhappy must be the great multitude of sufferers in Chicago whom we cannot reach, and how sad is the state of the unwashed, unkempt, unfed, sick, suffering, neglected, despairing millions in the great cities of the world."

Surgical cases, burns and various accidents, receive the most kind and skillful attention at the dispensary, while baths, electricity, massage and other forms of treatment are also prescribed and given there. The visiting nurses do not confine their labors to the immediate necessities of the sick whom they seek out, but they try the influence of the gospel of cleanliness upon the wretched tenement apartments, not hesitating to scrub and set things to rights with their own hands. They also give instruction in cookery and the laws of hygiene, and when they can, they find employment for the unemployed who are able to work. It is in a word, practical Christianity in one phase, and that is the only kind of Christianity worthy of the name. HELEN L. MANNING.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In reviewing the political field in Iowa the past month I am struck with the overwhelming evidence that the leaders of the National Republican party have united and agreed to repeal prohibition in Iowa. Dear readers, look here. Some pointers: 1. Ohio had a prohibitory law. The rum-ridden counties cried out for "relegation," "regulation," and "local option." The Republican party repealed prohibition and gave the state of Ohio the present infamous license, $200-Dow-tax-law, by which the saloons of Ohio have increased fourfold. And the whole Buckeye state will soon be wide open to free whisky.

2. New Jersey has been duped by the old party leaders into local option, and now they are forcing wide open, state wide, free whisky upon the prohibition counties of New Jersey.

3. The same program under Republican rule the past ten years has overturned prohibition in every Republican state except Iowa and Vermont, (Maine and Kansas and Dakota having Constitutional prohibition).

4. The Iowa Republican convention of Aug. 16, and the state press give abundant evidence that they propose to carry out the same deal to secure the whisky vote, boodle, and offices, that prevailed in other states.

For proof: The Whisky Republican papers of St. Louis, Chicago, New York, etc., congratulate the state of Iowa that "the grand old party is soon to be relieved of the incubus"—of a great moral principle. And the Register slyly winks the other eye, and yells "boodle," "$3,500 Alliance," etc., ad nauseam.

For proof: The liquor organs are shouting happy over the Republican plank 13.

For proof: The Republican and Democratic parties for license and revenue are making up fusion tickets all over the country, anything to beat prohibition.

For proof: The "grand old party" has not a word for prohibition in scores of states. In Virginia they have not even set up a ticket. They have been absorbed by the rum Democracy. The same absorption is going on in Iowa. But some of us don't absorb. A good friend says "one party or the other is sure to be in power." Not at all. The next legislature may (doubtless will) be so divided up between five parties that no one party can carry a partisan issue.

For proof: The Prohibitionists in six years have grown from nothing in Ohio, to poll 30,000 votes. They will poll 50,000 this fall because of the treasonable action of the Republicans toward prohibition which has repeatedly defeated their own ticket, while the Third Party grows like an oak tree. We are not raising pumpkins.

5. We are told that a third party vote "will elect the Democrats." Well. How much more complete could it be? Is not the whole administration Democratic? House, Senate and President? How can it be any more so? And suppose a few more Democrats are elected. There is not much difference between the platforms, policies or principles. Neither one advocates prohibition. Both conspire to destroy it. The above facts and figures go to prove it. They will soon seek to destroy the Prohibitory laws of Maine, Vermont, Kansas and the Dakotas. The national bosses have given the orders, and the State Register is obedient. It will not be four years until the same papers will be clamoring for state wide license and free whisky, as the same party organs are doing in a score of states that once rolled up big Republican majorities. Under the license policy of the Republican leaders, God and good men have deserted the once grand old party until in twenty states their big majority is gone, in several states they are in a minority, and in others they have no state ticket nor organization. Rum is fast wrecking the party.

It will soon reduce Iowa to the beastly drunken level of Ohio, get a Dow law in here, fill Des Moines with beer gardens and breweries and fill the Senate with Democrats. But meanwhile the Prohibition party will roll up its tens of thousands year after year as Ohio has done, and the old party will be buried forever, and its epitaph: "DIED OF DELIRIUM TREMENS." B. S. A SOLDIERS' W. C. T. U.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A very pleasant incident of the recent Kansas state convention was a visit to Fort Riley, the United States military station, said to be situated at the exact geographical center of our country (if we do not include Alaska). We were very courteously received by the officers, and Chaplain Lowell had prepared a lunch for the entire delegation, of which the lack of time prevented our partaking. We were entertained by special drills from artillery and cavalry corps and by the band.

But what pleased us more than anything else was meeting the members of the W. C. T. U. of Fort Riley, a union composed of a hundred soldiers, not a woman being a member. They are heartily in earnest. They sent three delegates to the convention, who made an excellent report. In the evening two of them took part in our exercises, delighting us with their recitations.

Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. Smith and myself visited the "canteen" stores, and were told by the steward that their sales for liquor average $3,500 a month. He told us, also, that there were about eight hundred soldiers there. We found that as about one hundred of these were "W. C. T. U. boys," it left only seven hundred who contributed so largely each month to the liquor sales. How can our government be a partner of such a system? Our convention was a remarkably pleasant one in every respect.

THE ANCIENT COPTIC CHURCH USED UNFERMENTED WINE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I find the following in the Prohibition Advocate. As it strengthens our principles on communion wine, and confirms other testimony, I send it on for publication in your columns. The statement, as follows, is valuable testimony:

"In reading 'Historical Scenes from the Old Jesuit Missions,' I came across an account of the use of unfermented wine—wine from raisins—in the Sacrament, by the monks of the Monastery of Saint Anthony, in the Desert of Saint Anthony, or of Lower Thebes, near Mount Sinai and the Sinai Desert. The late Right Rev. Wm. Ingraham Kip, D. D., L. L. D., Bishop of the Episcopal Church, is the compiler of this historical book. It was published in 1875 by Anson D. F. Randolph & Company, of New York, and the book is dedicated to Leonard Kip, of Albany, N. Y., brother of the Bishop. The account is contained in the twelfth chapter, entitled, 'Monasteries in the Thebaid Desert, 1716.' It consists of a letter from Father Sicord, missionary in Egypt to Flenrion, giving an account of the visit he made, in the year 1716, to the Coptic monasteries of St. Paul and St. Peter and St. Anthony in company with Joseph Assemanni, the librarian of the Vatican library. Assemanni's special object in visiting these Coptic monasteries was to procure ancient manuscripts for the Vatican library. The account states that these monks had excellent wine in their stores made from grapes raised in the monastery grounds, which wine they drank sparingly. Therefore it is clear that it was not for the lack of such wine that the Cops used the unfermented raisin wine. The account is as follows:

"We arrived there before sunset; and Father Synnodius, who had been half converted in our interview with him, gave us a warmer welcome than we had received at our first arrival at his monastery. We proposed to him to conduct us the next day to the Cave of Saint Anthony, that we might say Mass there, which he very willingly agreed to do. After overcoming difficulties and making wide circuits, we at last reached the cave, where this glorious Father of the anchorites presented to God the continual sacrifice of his life, and where we hoped to be able to offer the holy sacrifice of our altars. We arranged ourselves in this solitary place, which inspires devotion, to commend the Holy Mass, when Father Synnodius presented me with the wine he had brought. The color and smell at once attracted my attention, and I asked him 'what kind of wine it was.' 'It is,' he answered me, 'the wine of Abreke.' 'What is this wine which you offer me?' I said. 'It is not the kind of wine required for the sacrifice of the Holy Mass.' In fact, this pretended wine is nothing but an extract which our Coptic fathers derive from the dried raisins which they import from Greece, and which they soak in water to draw out this wine which they call Abreke, which translated from the Arabic means benediction. It is sweeter than any other kind of wine, and we had no other to use at the altar. I contented myself, therefore, with saying to him 'that this wine could not form the material for the Sacrament.' We offered up our prayers in this place of devotion, and then descended from the mountain, like Abraham, without having consummated the sacrifice which we had hoped to offer to the Lord." X.

En route.

Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Above all taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.—Eph. 6: 10, 16.

One of the noted visitors at the Temple this week was Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, of East Orange, N. J., the youngest sister of General U. S. Grant, a woman well worthy to be the sister of such a hero. When a resident at the Danish Court (her husband being resident minister to Denmark at the time), she was so appalled at the drinking customs of the country that she signed a pledge of total abstinence. To carry out such a pledge at a foreign court required heroic courage. Mrs. Cramer, however, is possessed of faith, courage and piety of a high order which, if necessary, would enable her to go to the stake unflinchingly. She is quite an artist and studied painting for many years abroad. She especially excels in china painting, a specimen of which meets my eye as I write. In line with my desk here in my study at home, is a little easel on which rests a plate, on the rim, painted in beautiful illuminated text, are the words, "Let your hands be strong that the temple be built." This precious souvenir I have kept constantly before me in my study for the last five years. When faint and weary it has upheld and strengthened me. It is like a flash light from God, penetrating and dispelling every cloud.

In 1888 Mrs. Cramer attended the first Woman's Council which was held at Washington, D. C. I met her there for the first time. She came laden with gifts. It was just the year after I had made public the plan of our contemplated Temple; she had read all about it. Her faith grasped it as a thing that was to be. In her home, a thousand miles from mine, without communicating with me, she painted the plate above described. When she presented it to me at Washington, she said: "I know you will often get discouraged before your great work is completed. I want you to keep this always before you to strengthen your faith." At the same time she presented me with two beautifully painted tiles, one was to be sold for the benefit of the Temple (which has been done). The other is a unique and beautifully painted monogram containing the mystic letters so dear to all white-ribboners—W. C. T. U. This she told me she painted for the Assembly Hall of the Temple, and desired to have it set in the wall. Now after five years have elapsed this woman of faith is going to see her beautiful monogram placed in Willard Hall. It is to be over the door opening into the vault room in which is to be stored, beside the state books of record, in which will be placed the names of all individuals who have given a dollar or more to the Temple, everything pertaining to temperance that has been published the last quarter of this century. Mrs. Cramer was delighted with the building. The beauty of Willard Hall she said far surpassed her expectations.

Our faithful little friend, Ethel Stout, of Melbourne, Fla., editor of the Midget, has again been heard from; she sends $25, which completes the payment on the Jennie Casseday tablet. The Midget is a capital child's paper, and costs only ten cents a year. Every child in the land should subscribe for it. It grows better and better. One-tenth of the subscriptions from the Midget go to the Temple. In recognition of little Ethel's faithful services, her name is to be put on a tablet in Willard Hall. This is a deserved, as well as a rare honor. When before in the history of the world has the name of a little girl eleven years old been graven on marble in recognition of services done for her Master? Noble Jane Weeden's name also goes on a tablet in honor of services rendered the Temple, in raising for it a fund of about two thousand dollars. These are the only two names that go on the panels of Willard Hall without the sum of one hundred dollars being first paid.

The following unions have pledged $100; the amounts noted below have lately been received from them on their pledges: Alameda, Cal., $5, making $21.35 this union has paid; the Scandinavian W. C. T. U., Chicago, Ill., $15, making $75 paid; $5.46 from Humboldt Park union, Chicago; Princeton, Ill., union sends $15, making $25 paid; Joliet, Ill., $25. making $50 paid; Rockford, Ill., sends $14, making $44 cash. This money has been raised through the earnest efforts of the Temple superintendent, Mrs. Luella Neff. Apologizing for the long time it has taken this large and influential union to secure so much, Mrs. Neff says: "Our women are in earnest about raising their pledge, but it is hard for them to give money just now. As a union we love and admire our Temple, and want to help make it ours." Six dollars come from Garden City, Kas., union; from Minneapolis, Minn., Coffee House W. C. T. U. employés, $5. Our good friend, Mrs. Van Meter, Ellendale, N. Dak., who has raised so many Baby Bands, has been made superintendent of Temple work in her union, and sends $7; we feel sure she will not be long in completing the union's pledge; Hannibal, Mo., union sends $5; the Carendeld W. C. T. U., St. Louis, Mo., sends $10; the Tilton, N. H., union sends $10; the Central W. C. T. U., Sioux City, Ia., sends $10.

The Illinois tablet in the Willard corridor in the Temple bears the names in the following order of unions which have paid $100 or more toward its erection: Chicago Central, Shabbona, Moline, Decatur, Chenoa, Marengo, Elgin, Aurora, Pittsfield, Griggsville, Englewood, Irving Park, Chicago, Evanston, Paxton, Grant Park, Chicago, West Peotone, Pana, the Social Temple, Rockport, Grand Crossing, Bloomington, Jacksonville, Macomb, Morriss, Lincoln, Canton, Belvidere, Jordan, Windsor, Lake, Sandwich, Jerseyville, Danville, Mendon, Belvidere Y's, Grand Crossing Y's.

THREE WORDS.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light
Upon the hearts of men.

Have hope. Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith. Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know thou God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have love. And not alone for one,
But man as man thy brother call,
And scatter like the circling sun
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, faith and love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind.

TWO MOTHERS.

BY J. L. HARBOUR.

This is a literal account of a conversation I could not help hearing between two mothers who sat in the same seat with me on an open electric car one day recently, and I give it because the subject discussed is one that concerns every father and mother of young children. One of the mothers asked:

"Do you allow your children to play with the K—— children?"

"No, I do not," was the decided reply. "Do you?"

"Well, yes," was the reply, given in a tone indicating some irritation. "I can't help it very well."

"I would devise some means of helping it if I were you," replied the other woman, quietly. "You know the character of the K—— children, don't you?"

"Oh, I know that they are bad children."

"Bad? They are simply immoral in the degree of their wickedness. I do not allow my children to associate with them in any way."

And this was the reply of the other woman, the other mother:

"Well, I'll tell you just how I feel about it, Mrs. H—— I've thought the matter all over, and I've just come to the conclusion that our children are bound to come into contact with all kinds of wickedness sooner or later anyhow, no matter how careful we are of them, and we might just as well make up our minds to it. And Mrs. K—— and I are real good friends, and so I just let my children play with her's to save any hard feelings and because I think that they're bound to know what sin is from some source or other before long in spite of anything I can do. Now isn't that true?"

"Admitting that it is true," replied Mrs. H——, "I feel that it is my sacred duty to keep my children pure just as long as possible. My children are gaining in character and in true power to resist evil every day that I keep them pure. Do you not think that if I keep my boy pure until he is fifteen years old that he will be better able to resist temptation than he is now at the age of ten?"

"Well, I suppose so," replied the other woman, weakly, "but I don't see how one is to keep children good and pure up to the age of fifteen."

"It cannot be done by allowing them to choose their own companions and to associate freely with children of acknowledged bad character."

"Well, I suppose not, but I hate to refuse to allow my children to associate with a neighbor's children. I like to be on pleasant terms with everybody."

"So do I, but I am not willing to 'be pleasant' at the expense of my children's morals and manners and of their eternal welfare."

Bravely spoken words! Let every mother say "Amen" to them! Let every mother resolve, as this true mother has resolved, that she will keep her children pure to the very last moment that it is possible to keep them in the purity and sweetness and innocence that God gives to the newborn child.

Your children will be better able to resist evil at the age of fifteen than at the age of ten. Every day of purity is a gain of moral strength and courage. It is criminally wrong for a mother to deliberately subject her children to evil because "they will know all about it some day, anyhow." Such mothers bear heavy burdens of sin on their own souls.

The child must know in time what sin is and it is not possible to keep him ignorant of it, but it is possible to keep him innocent. It is possible to keep children sweet and pure and strong in mind and heart and body until they can say out of their own strength of character "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Is it for you or for the corrupt child of your neighbor to teach your children what sin is? Keep your children pure by protective knowledge, imparted by yourself; curiosity disarmed will diminish the power of evil from within and without, knowledge is power even in the nursery.

THE COMING WOMAN.—A BIT OF HISTORY.

BY SIDNEY C. KENDALL.

It is interesting to have, from other days and other lands, an expression of opinion as to what is the true and legitimate sphere of woman's work and influence. I have found in an old French magazine a most curious article by one M. Toussenel, dating from among the thirties. It is entitled "The World of Birds." The following is the summary of its translation:

"Birds stand at the head of animal creation in their exalted life and their capacity for higher enjoyments. They display a power of love, a strength of conjugal attachment, and a degree of domesticity not seen in other creatures. The intense energy of their sentimental nature is expressed in the thrilling sweetness of their songs. They lead an ardent, passionate, ecstatic existence.

"One striking feature in their social order is that the female is supreme. They acknowledge the supremacy of the sex which attracts over the sex which is attracted. In the world of beasts, where brute force governs, the male is supreme; but among birds where sentiment prevails, homage is paid to the femaie."

Our writer infers from this fact that: "The happiness of individuals and the rank of species are the direct proportion of female authority." He claims that as human society develops from the condition in which brute force rules to the condition in which the higher sentiments prevail over the coarser passions, it will leave the order of beasts where the male predominates by his strength, and will model itself upon the order of birds, where the female reigns by her gentleness. "Woman is smaller than man, but more perfect, hence more beautiful. Woman is more human, man more animal. Man finds his ideal, not only for the individual but for the race in woman. The personification of the state is always a female."

Just so: Even a republic must have its Columbia. Liberty is a female. The three Christian graces are females. Everything above the level of brute strength and animal passion is invariably personified as a female. The instinctive and universal tendency to look for excellence and perfection in woman rather than in man is seen in the worship of the Virgin Mary.

"God has delivered the world into the hands of races of the Germanic stock who have made it a duty to honor woman. The most powerful of these nations is England (183-) where the sceptre is in the hand of a woman and whose most illustrious monarchs are named Elizabeth, Anne, Victoria. The Russian Empire which is next in power to the British, is an empire of mixed blood, but whose greatest sovereigns are Elizabeth and Catharine. If the fortunes of France are inferior to those of England and Russia, it is the fault of the Salic law, by which no woman is allowed to reign. France would rise to her destiny by giving woman large share in public affairs, for in no country are the women so superior to the men as in France."

"The Iroquois and the Yankee (sic) are at the extreme steps of the social ladder in America. Why is this? Because by the one, woman is honored and by the other she is despised."

Here is a sentence which displays our author's own style: "Noble children of the land of France, sons of the land of Love and Glory, let us hasten to return to the suggestions of our Germanic nature which tell us that in woman all wisdom lies.

"History and the birds teach us that God has refused durability to every institution in which woman, the pivot of attraction, does not occupy the first place."

An article which recently appeared in the English Leisure Hour strikingly shows the superiority of the French women over the French men. Well would it be for that country if the women governed.

Those who think dubiously of female suffrage and who fear that woman's gentleness may be ruffled and her sweetness tainted in the squabbles of the caucus and the hustings will find some consolation in our author's crowning proposal, which is as follows:

"The Legislature shall consist of an Upper and a Lower House, the first consisting entirely of women, the latter entirely of men.

"The Lower House shall propose only, the Upper House shall dispose of all laws. Thus there shall be no legislation affecting society as a whole that shall not have the consent of women as well as of men. The members of the Upper House shall receive their appointments from national associations of women."

Like a chivalrous gentleman of the "land of love and glory," he would allow the ladies the last word. And, moreover, he would preserve their delicacy from rough contact with the coarser elements of politics by making their election a matter which concerned women only. I will close with another sample, as nearly as it can be expressed in English:

"The institution of a female legislative assembly is the death-wound of brutal force, the funeral of the sabre and leather breeches, the sentence of imposture, corruption and venality, the end of corporal and mental prostitution, the dawn of harmony, the era of clemency, justice and charity."

WORDS TO THE WISE.—ACCORDING TO LAW.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

In the last Words it was shown that in any kind of organized life, from the humblest plant up to a nation, the good of the whole absolutely depends on the good of the individual members. Just so far as this separate good is secured, just so far can each individual member serve the interests of the whole, and no farther; and on the other hand it is this return service which enables the whole to serve the interests of each. Such is the law of life, and as all life is from the Divine, we may call this the law of God —with penalty attached.

Applying this law to human affairs we were to first settle what is meant by "the good" of an individual and "the good" of a nation. It is safe to say that every created thing should be good for what it is made to be good for. In other words the creature should serve the purposes of its creation. Thus it is for the good of a bird that it be able to fly; for the good of a grasshopper that it be able to hop; for the good of a plant that it be able to grow and produce. It will help the illustration if we imagine in these cases an inability to use the special faculties. As if birds could but slightly move their wings, or a grasshopper's joints had but a feeble springiness, or a plant failed in its fruitage; and let us note here that only as the plant life quickens each entwined leaf are the leaves enabled to assimilate nourishment for the plant.

Coming to the higher creation, humanity, we may say that "the good" of human beings means that they be so quickened that their powers for good be fully developed. The more complete the development the more valuable the individual to himself, and also to the nation. A nation is composed of individuals. It is therefore for its interest to bring out the valuable faculties of each, realizing that it is a high human valuation which ennobles a country and gives it place among the nations of the earth. "My country, 'tis of thee," "Of thee I sing," "Thy name I love." What is it that we love, and that we exalt in song? And as to that matter, what constitutes a country? Of the Indians once in possession here it can hardly be said that they had love of country in the usual sense of the term. There were natural resources without limit; fertile soil, mineral wealth, mighty rivers, navigable lakes, mountains, plains and valleys, interminable coast lines, territory stretching across a continent, plenty of inhabitants, but to constitute a country something yet was lacking. This minus quantity was human value. The people were not in a high state of development.

It is plain, then, that "the good" of a nation means something more than territory and all manner of natural resources. To insure its prosperity are needed mind-power in full activity, and solid foundations in the way of character. From this latter we should get truth, justice, honor, integrity, loving kindness, righteousness, energy. Lacking these, a country cannot remain a country any more than a mountain could remain a mountain without the steadfast forces which alone give it solidity. From the first named essential we should get excellence in the arts and literature, progressive thought, research, inventive skill, aptness for discovery, all, indeed, that in a general way may be called applied intelligence, by no means omitting a development of the spiritual nature, sole dependence of all else.

To thus bring out individual possibilities must not only exalt a nation in character, but must serve it in all useful ways, since by applied intelligence its material resources would gain ever increasing value and the unseen forces be made more and more available, no one knows to what extent. And it may be added that justice and righteousness will see that the increased advantages be shared equally by all.

The aim of this present writing is to show that a nation should consider every child born in regard to its possibilities for good, and should establish a system of education—scarcely yet dreamed of—which shall bring out such possibilities, wherever found, recognizing them as so much national wealth. And in however high a direction they might unfold special conditions should be furnished for just that unfolding, and this regardless of money cost; for money itself is not wealth and has value only as it may serve to bring out human value.

FALSE KINDNESS.

The softest little fluff of fur!
The gentlest, most persuasive purr!
Oh, everybody told me that
She was the "loveliest little cat!"
So when she on the table sprung,
And lapped the cream with small red tongue,
I only gently put her down,
And said, "No, no!" and tried to frown;
But if I had been truly kind,
I should have made that kitten mind!

Now, large and quick, and strong of will,
She'll spring upon the table still,
And, spite of all my watchful care,
Will snatch the choicest dainties there;
And everybody says, "Scat! scat!
She's such a dreadful, dreadful cat!"
But I who hear them, know, with shame,
I only am the one to blame,
For in the days when she was young,
And lapped the cream with small red tongue,
Had I to her been truly kind,
I should have made that kitten mind.

WHAT AILED COUSIN FRED.

BY LIZZIE YOUNG BUTLER.

"Oh, there's Uncle Benson! there's Uncle Benson!" called 'Riah Lacey to her little city cousin, as she raced down the walk, her curls flying in the wind. "Hurry, May. He's just turned the corner," said 'Riah, halting a moment and looking back to the more quiet May, who had stopped for her hat.

"Uncle Benson's just splendid!" continued 'Riah, with great emphasis, as the two little girls hurried along. "He's the one who has just bought the great big farm, with bushels and bushels of apples and the juiciest pears," smacking her lips, "and grapes and plums, and, and"—unable to find other words, "everything. Little bossies and pigs, and oh, May, we're going out there to-morrow.

"There he is, there's Uncle Benson," cried she, as they hopped around the corner and saw his farm wagon drawn up in front of one of the houses. "Good-morning, Uncle Benson. This is Cousin May, and we're going out to your house in the morning," was 'Riah's greeting, as they neared Uncle Benson. A fine face, wearing a most genial expression, lighted up by a pair of twinkling gray eyes, turned toward the little girls as they reached him, panting and warm.

"Good-morning, good-morning," called he, handing each a large, purple plum. "So you're coming out to my house to-morrow? Well, that's right; come along. Me and your Aunt Rachel will be right glad to see you. Just wait a minute, and I'll give you a ride round the square and home. I've some garden stuff for your mother," finished he, pinching their cheeks. Then he picked up a jug from the walk and carried it into the house. When he came out he lifted the two little girls into the wagon, and at 'Riah's request, handed May the reins.

"What have you to sell this morning besides plums, Uncle Benson?" asked 'Riah.

"Apples and pears, garden stuff and new, sweet cider. I'll give you little folks some when you come to see me."

"I don't want any, thank you," said May, and almost at the same moment 'Riah exclaimed:

"Oh, Uncle Benson, you're not selling cider! If you make that on your farm I guess I'd rather stay at home." Then how Uncle Benson laughed; laughed till the tears rolled down his cheeks and lodged in his whiskers.

"Tut, tut, child! what does such a midget as you know about cider? There's no harm in selling it nor drinking it, either. Why, it's nothing in the world but apple-juice, and my cider's made from the best apples, too, from none of your wormy things." Then, after a pause he added in an amused tone: "What should I do if I neither drank nor sold the cider, little woman?"

"Don't make it!" said 'Riah, nodding her head and speaking with earnest emphasis.

"I'd rather get my apple-juice when I stick my teeth into an apple, then I'm sure it's new and sweet. That woman who was here not long ago said that the worst kind of drunkards were cider drunkards; and when I heard that I said to myself that I'd never touch a drop of cider; that if any one could get drunk drinking it, it wasn't good for little girls to drink," and then, as she cuddled up close to Uncle Benson's side and patted his rough hand with her little soft palm, she added with a world of entreaty in voice and face:

"I wish you wouldn't sell it, dear Uncle Benson, you might make somebody's father real sorry."

"Well, well, little woman, we'll see, we'll see. You know pretty well how to coax your old uncle, don't you," answered he, squeezing 'Riah's hand, but as she looked up into his face she saw the twinkle in his eyes, and the peculiar curve to his lips, so with a little sigh she folded her hands while a grave look crept over her face.

Just as they turned the corner, 'Riah's face brightened, for coming toward them on the walk was Uncle Benson's youngest son Fred who was a prime favorite with 'Riah. As soon as he came within hailing distance she called out: "Cousin Fred, Cousin Fred! here I am just going home. Go back with us, won't you?"

Cousin Fred looked at 'Riah in a dazed way, bobbed his head a little, then with a sickly smile passed the wagon. 'Riah's lips began to quiver. Cousin Fred, who was always so glad to see her and so jolly, passing her without a word!

"Oh, Uncle Benson, what's the matter with cousin Fred? I never, never saw him do so before. Do go for him, he must be sick. Poor Cousin Fred!"

The sorrowful look in her face was reflected in Uncle Benson's as he looked after his Fred with a sinking heart, yet his voice was firm and earnest as he drew up to the walk and lifting the little girls out, said:

"Yes, Cousin Fred's sick. But I tell you what, little girl, Uncle Benson has decided that the only thing that cider's fit for is to make vinegar, so I shall turn mine that way."

"Oh, thank you, Uncle Benson," cried both little girls, so absorbed in the new turn affairs had taken to well nigh forget Cousin Fred. They skipped away never noticing the weary sigh which escaped Uncle Benson as he turned down the road to overtake Cousin Fred. Could that ambling figure be the same that he had left at home in the morning? He could hardly believe his own eyes, so different was the bearing of the boy ahead from the erect, buoyant one who called good-bye to him from the farm gate not more than two hours before.

"My boy!" groaned he; then with a catch in his voice and a dimness in his eyes: "I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it. The argument is a strong one, too convincing to crawl round, if I wanted to, and Uncle Benson makes no more cider for drinking I can tell you."

A LITTLE BLIND GIRL'S LETTERS.

Helen Keller, the deaf, blind and dumb girl for whom so much has been done at the Perkins Institution for the Blind in South Boston, and who has been at the World's Fair, recently wrote thus to her teacher:

"I wish to write about things I do not understand. Who made the earth and the seas and everything? What makes the sun hot? Why does not the earth fall, it is so very large and heavy? Tell me something that Father Nature does. May I read the book called the Bible? Please tell your little pupil many things when you have much time." In a letter to Bishop Brooks she said:

"Why does the great Father in heaven think it is best for us to have very great sorrow and pain sometimes? I am always happy, and so was little Lord Fauntleroy; but dear little Jakey's life was full of sadness, and God did not put the light in his eyes, and he was blind, and his father was not gentle and loving. Do you think Jakey loved his Father in heaven more because his other father was unkind to him? How did God tell people that His home was in heaven? When people do very wrong, and hurt animals and treat children unkindly, God is grieved, but what will He do to them to teach them to be pitiful and loving? Please tell me something that you know about God. I like so much to hear about my loving Father, who is so good and wise."

A CHINESE MAXIM FOR CHILDREN.

It is a good thing for a boy or girl to be busy. If a boy has to work a little out of school hours, let him be glad that he is getting in training to be a useful man. And if a girl finds that she must help her mother about the house or run on errands, she may do so cheerfully, because she can be sure that she will be a happier and more contented woman by and by than though she had grown up idle and with no knowledge of home-arts. Try to busy yourselves, boys and girls, and you will always be glad that you have done so. The Chinese have a queer maxim which they teach to their children. It is on this very subject—that of never being idle. The maxim says: "For every boy who does not work, and for every woman who is idle somebody must suffer cold and hunger."—Selected.

I WONDER why it is we are not all kinder than we are? How much the world needs it! How easily is it done! How infallibly it is remembered! How superabundantly it pays itself back! For there is no debtor in the world so honorable, so superbly honorable, as love. "Love never faileth."—Prof. Drummond.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—As your eyes rest upon the Children's page this week, there is gathered in Chicago at the now well-known Memorial Art Palace, a splendid company of women. They are the temperance workers of the World's and National W. C. T. U. who have met to make plans for another year of work and to tell what has been done during the past twelve months.

Some of these white-ribbon ladies have come long distances and from far-off countries to attend the great meeting of the World's W. C. T. U. in Chicago. There is a Japanese lady from Tokyo, others from the Sandwich Islands, from South Australia, from France, Iceland, India, New Zealand, Jamaica, etc. Besides these there are the three round-the-world missionaries, Miss Jessie Ackermann, Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell. As you look up these different countries on the map, you will get an idea of how far our white-ribbon army extends.

Be sure to read in the coming UNION SIGNALS all that these temperance ladies have to say about the work in their countries, and of what they have done for temperance.

Yours affectionately,

Aunt Jane

And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.
And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.
And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?
And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.—Mark 16:1-4.

"WHO WILL ROLL AWAY THE STONE?"

This Scripture scene is a marvelous commentary upon woman's quiet, indomitable, determined faith. Hope is hopeless, life smitten and dismayed, and yet she will do something. She will go and see the place where Jesus sleeps, embalm the body with her spices, shed a few more tears—maybe something will happen.

But who will roll away the stone? The huge boulder was there against the slab that held the Christ entombed, it was there as the obstacle that defied their access to Him. They could not remove it; and now, who could?

When they looked, lo, it was rolled away. The strong angels of God were there, to do what, and all, these women could not do. God works by His own methods, but always by instrumentalities. Faith without works is dead, being alone. All the miracles of Old or New Testament were a coöperation of the divine and human. Faith goes to the absolute line of attempt, and God does the rest.

The boulder of the saloon lies right in the path of progress, lies over against the fairest things and best we know, and it entombs the hope and happiness of sixty-five millions of people. It rests against the door of every home. No home in all this fair land is free. No mother knows when her boy leaves the fireside, whether he will come back untainted and unharmed. It may be the walk to business, to the postoffice, or the social call; it may be on his way to the house of God, that, alas, the pitfall throws its alluring, enticing glamour across his way. In order to recruit the saloon and support it, in order to fill the depleted ranks of the great army of jaded, ribald, specter-ridden drunkards doomed and damned by it every year, it must rob from seventy-five to eighty thousand homes annually.

The saloon is the boulder that is wrecking our railroad trains. A prominent railroad superintendent recently said to us, "We fear the drunken engineer or switchman more than we do broken bridges, overworked men, or all the other infelicities of the business. Seven times out of ten when accident occurs, we find the drink curse has gotten in its work somewhere and made somebody incompetent."

The saloon stands right in the way of the development, social, mental, and moral, of the voting classes. In Boston, New York and Chicago, the saloon has already wrested the municipal government from the hands of the sober, industrious classes, and given it to the lawless, the ignorant and vicious. The inebriated and imbruted classes hold the reins, and the man who drives the brewer's wagon drives the mayor, the police, the council and the courts. The saloon is the boulder resting hard against the financial prosperity of the country. Eight hundred thousand dollars for paupers; forty million dollars for crime, courts and jails; two hundred and twenty-five million dollars waste in industrial power; one hundred million dollars for the insane; nine hundred million dollars for the drink. Add these and you have only the approximate cost of this mighty load which the nation has legalized and is trying to carry.

And yet, good men are telling us to lift this stone by prayer. They gather in its presence and sing gospel hymns, reassure each other as to the promises of God, and believe that by some rare miracle of grace God will, at last, lift the awful shadow from our hearts and homes.

The newspapers are not going to roll away this stone so long as three million Christians in this land are thinking that the saloon must stay, saying that it must stay, voting with parties that are pledged to have it stay, the newspaper is going to throw its influence upon that side. That editor who should begin warfare to-morrow upon the saloons of Chicago, and call for a great party to vote them out of existence, would lose his readers. He knows it; he knows what the people want. No, the newspaper won't roll us away the stone.

Business men won't do it. They are not doing business for that purpose. As things are, it wouldn't pay. Think of the cost of working over the saloons, the dives, and the flats used in Chicago, for example, for immoral purposes, into dwelling houses and homes! Think of changing the gilt-edge prices paid for an elegant saloon "plant," for the price that some average, respectable renter could pay for the same property.

"Business is business," don't you know? And it pays; this saloon business is a pathway of blood, and tears, and sorrow and crime, but it pays; a cent's worth of good Bourbon to a glass of water will sell for ten cents, and a smoky, reeking, damp, dark by-way of a room, that a city mission society couldn't afford to pay one hundred dollars per month for, will rent for two hundred and fifty dollars as a saloon. No, business men are not going to roll away the stone.

The politician and the partisan are not going to roll it away. Why? Because they don't roll away the people's burdens. This is why the land is restless and old parties are breaking up. This is why there is a People's Party and an Alliance Party, and a Silver and an Anti-Silver Party.

We are humbled and chastened, embarrassed and perplexed by these hard times, and the politician and partisan in the Senate at Washington are discussing things. By a natural law of supply and demand we are recruiting ourselves, and no thanks to the United States Senate. The partisan and the politician are glad to have the patriot elect them, and they go up to the semi-annual wrangle over "seats," and spoils, postoffices and pension bills, but they do not feel that this Christian government would like to have them meddle with the high-license policy.

Conscience reposes under the influence of that opiate, and the land is at rest. Oh, pity of God, that these things be so; and that it is not sarcasm but plain, unvarnished truth when we state them.

But somebody goes back and says, "Why not, then, rely upon God's power entirely? Sing, and pray, and write, and preach, and nothing other?" "Why not just pray?" Who knows anything to exceed the moral grandeur of the Woman's Crusade of twenty years ago? How it spread from the old Hillsboro church, outward, throughout Ohio and its adjacent states! In what passion of fear, anxiety, doubt, yet belief, tears, entreaty; beneath the pitiless rain, in the mud, on the street, in the snow, and unsheltered by aught save the blasts of that cold, belated spring, those wives and mothers knelt and prayed. They prayed and prayed and stormed the sullen face of heaven with prayers. The cry was importunate, "Who will roll us away the stone?"

The legislature said, "Not I. I would not be reëlected." The newspaper said, "Not I, for it would be unpopular." The politician said, "Not I, for it would pull down my party." The church said, "It is not in me."

The earthquake of resolve, the tempest of pledge-signing, the fire of prayer, seemed, none of them, to have the power, and at last, those women said, it was the whisper of the small, still voice, "Rise, we must, and work. We must educate, we must begin in the home, must teach the power of heredity; must look after the mother and the child; must educate in the day school and Sunday-school; must indoctrinate the pulpit and the pew with a higher thought of man's ethical relations; must have a better political economy, a cleaner and higher standard of politics, a purer public sentiment, use the printed page, 'rescue the fallen, care for the dying,' visit the jail, sow literature broadcast, legislate, petition, travel, belt the globe with the life and light of a redeemer's thought, must, with our own hands, roll away this accursed stone."

This is just what the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been doing. We have been attempting the most impossible and making it the actual. We have learned to wait, to be patient, to ask much and receive little. We have been criticised, we are human; we differ sometimes as to methods, but around one central, one supreme, unyielded and unyielding idea, we have gathered, watched, worked, planned, prayed, and never tired in crying to the heart of manhood and womanhood, the conscience of the church, the powers of the state, to the God in heaven, "Who will roll us away this stone?" And this is the central thought of the great convention assembled this week in Chicago.

A MISSIONARY OUTLOOK.

It was natural and desirable that the influence of the religious parliament should extend to the congress of missions which immediately followed it, and that its thought should color in a very perceptible degree the discussions of missionary workers. Indeed, one of the questions which agitates the minds of Christians inclined to take a pessimistic view of the parliament is, what will be its effect upon missionary enterprise? This presentation of ethnic religions by their ablest representatives—will it not, as a member of the liberal association declared, "cut the spinal cord of missionary effort"? We think otherwise.

The effect of placing Christianity side by side with Oriental religions has been, says the conservative churchman, to convey the impression to the people at large that they have been lavishing a good deal of uncalled sympathy on the "heathen," and that Christian churches are wasting time and money in sending missionaries to the land of the Brahmo-Somaj, or of Buddha or Confucius, but we consider that one immense benefit which will result from the great gathering of the world's religious leaders is a needed arrest of thought along all the lines of missionary effort. The speeches and the papers presented in this conference of missions give evidence that good seed was sown by the parliament, much of which has found lodgment in productive soil, and will, we hope and believe, tend to strengthen and perhaps to modify our present system of missionary work.

We cannot too highly honor and applaud the self-sacrificing, the Christ-like labors of the men and women who, in the face of apparently insurmountable difficulties, have carried the gospel into foreign lands. The missionary record of the Christian church is a glorious one. It is true, as was declared by the congress, that but for the work of Christian missions the great parliament of religions would have been an impossibility. Unconscious to the Oriental himself it may be, but it is true that Christianity alone has so far broken down the barriers of "caste" as to render it possible for the Hindu priest to be the guest of a Chicagoan and to break bread at his table without becoming an outcast among his own people.

The missionary work of the past employed the best methods possible under the conditions of the past, and, like all effort, its beginnings were necessarily crude. The world is growing from childhood into maturity, and new methods for its evangelization naturally follow the new conditions. A better understanding of human nature in its relation to the divine, must perforce bring about an improved system of spiritual education. So that while it is true, as before said, that the labors of Christian missionaries made possible the parliament of religions, it is also true that the parliament has a mission to Christendom. The message it brings to the churches may be summed up in the suggestive words of Mr. Bonney: "Henceforth the religions of the world will make war not on each other but on the giant evils which afflict mankind."

It is a noteworthy fact that our foreign missionaries are beginning to recognize and to emphasize the necessity for more thorough missionary work in the home field. All thinking Christians of America will gladly echo the declaration of Rev. Dr. Bristol, of Chicago, made in a ringing speech before the Missionary Congress, that missions, like charity, should begin (not stop) at home. "We have been forgetting our first duty," he said, "to begin at Jerusalem, and have been going out to Judea and Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth, while our own great cities are famishing for the bread of life. The churches spend millions of money every year to send out missionaries to foreign countries, while they are neglecting their own heathen right at home." The command of Jesus to "go into all the world" is just as imperative now as ever, but don't let us forget that Chicago and New York are as much a part of the world as Calcutta or Pekin, and the street Arab and city waif, the coming voters of our country, just as worth saving as the Hindu or the Chinaman.

In reply to the criticisms of our Oriental friends concerning, not, bear in mind, the teachings of Christianity, but our application of it, one of the speakers in the Mission Congress attempted to shirk the responsibility of our national sins by declaring that while we were a Christian people, our government was not a Christian government, in that it did not confess allegiance to any particular religious faith. Now the world knows that this government asserts its superiority over all others by reason of its claim to be a government of and for and by the people. And even those who are not ready to admit this claim must acknowledge that the professedly Christian people hold a balance of power in this land, and could, if they would, Christianize the entire administrative policy of the nation in both home and foreign affairs. Instead of trying to shirk responsibility, let us honestly confess our shortcomings, and earnestly endeavor to do better in the future.

We gathered from the Congress that there are three main obstacles to successful missionary effort in foreign lands: (1) Lack of reformatory work at home, (2) existence of the liquor traffic, and (3) the rivalry of sects.

In view of these difficulties we can but regard with pride the methods of our own great missionary organization, the W. C. T. U. In the first place it begins its work at home. The local union is the center round which the more extended and more complicated machinery of organization operates in ever-widening circles until the whole world is in touch with the gospel of Christian temperance. In the second place it does not go, as has been rather severely charged of the Christian church, "With the Bible in one hand, and the rum bottle in the other," but it goes with the Bible in one hand and the polyglot petition in the other; and in the third place, throughout all its manifold branches of work, at home or abroad, it knows no sect or creed.

In these three important things lies the main strength of the W. C. T. U. as a teacher of applied Christianity, and future missionary effort will, we believe, follow largely in the path thus marked out by our white ribbon round-the-world missionaries.

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER.

In regard to the temperance societies of England, Lord Shaftesbury says: "As I go up and down through the length and breadth of England, I am more and more convinced of the indispensable necessity for these associations. I am satisfied that, unless they existed, we should be immersed in such an ocean of immorality, violence and sin as would make the country uninhabitable." In this tribute to the work of temperance societies there is food for encouragement, but also much that is not so hopeful, at least the intimation that these societies are doing more than to stay the tide of drunkenness is conspicuous for its absence.

It is great cause for thankfulness that they prevent the land being "immersed in such an ocean of immorality, violence and sin as would make the country uninhabitable," but does Lord Shaftesbury think that the work they are doing will not have to be done over and over again continually? Are they reaching the disease, the evil itself, or merely ameliorating its sufferings? Are they destroying the evil or simply averting some of its effects? These are the questions which have forced themselves upon earnest temperance workers and their answer has driven many of them to resolve that while none of these things shall be left undone (the education of the children, the care of the victims of the liquor traffic, the reformation of the drunkard), yet that above all we will strike at the root of the matter and by all right means seek the destruction of the curse itself, the liquor traffic. Yet this purpose it is, we are told, which makes impossible for many good temperance people to work with us. We are ready, as we have said again and again, to work heart and soul for any temperance measure, however partial it may be. We are willing for the time to lay aside any disputed means while we work for the simple point of exterminating saloons, electing men to office who will enforce whatever temperance laws exist or anything else that will help in any measure the cause of temperance. But because we will not at all times and at all places lay aside all means which are obnoxious to any one who calls himself a temperance advocate, we are declared to be injuring the cause, and great lamentation is raised over the disunion of the temperance host.

Emerson practised the optimism that he preached. When his library was burning, Louisa Alcott tried to express her sympathy. He replied cheerfully: "Never mind, Louisa; see what a beautiful blaze they make. We will enjoy that now."

Our "Chieftain" claims that the amount of force exerted at a given moment to compress the waists of women by artificial methods would, if aggregated, turn all the mills between Minneapolis and the Merrimac, while the condensed force of their tight shoes, if it could be applied, would run many railroad trains.

One of our white-ribboners in England recently wrote to a dear friend in a comforting fashion that will do all of us good, so we make this extract: "What a beautiful thought it is that our Lord would have shared even His deepest agony with those stupid, dear, ignorant disciples, (many of ourselves just like them), not a bit able to grasp the great meanings of the work for the world! It struck me strongly yesterday as I was reading that thirty-eighth verse of Matthew 26, telling us that in the hour of His grief and desolation He wanted their sympathy. 'Abide ye here and watch with me.' He did not wish them to go away although one might think He would have shrunk from the presence of any human being in that experience of extremest anguish—let alone the presence of poor, 'half saved' Peter, John and James. I felt it such a cordial to my heart that He even now wants our sympathy in spite of all our pitiful narrowness and ignorance, because He knows that we desire to be lifted up into the light of God."

A vigorous eighty year old lady of New Hampshire gives these rules as her secret of life: "I never allow myself to fret over things I cannot help. I take one nap and sometimes two every day; and I try to oil all the various wheels of a busy life with an implicit belief that I can trust Him who rules this great universe."

On listening to evil reports, these five excellent rules were laid down by a good man for his own conduct:

1. To hear as little as possible whatever is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind until I am absolutely forced to it.
3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an evil report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindliness which is expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.

A worn old book lies on my table, rescued from the stores of an ancient attic. It is entitled, "The Journals of the Rev. John Wesley, M. A.," and bears the date 1711. It is full of rich lore to repay the reader. Among the rarely interesting letters is one written to Wesley's pater by Susannah Wesley, detailing to him how she cared for the home circle. "In your absence I cannot but look upon every soul you leave under my care as a talent committed to me under a trust by the great Lord of all the families, both of heaven and earth. . . . . Those who have the honour of speaking to the great and holy God need not be ashamed to speak before the whole world: but because of my sex I doubt if it is proper for me to present the prayers of the people to God. Last Sunday I would fain have dismissed them (friends outside of the family) before prayers, but they begged so earnestly to stay I could not deny them." It has been such brave spirits facing plain duty, who even nearly two hundred years ago paved the way for woman's enfranchisement. A little further down the page, in a letter to her son embodying certain temporal regulations for her children, is this statement: "They (the children) were suffered at meals to eat and drink (small beer) as much as they would. Drinking or eating between meals was never allowed." Thus hand in hand went strict temperance in eating such as American children know little of to-day, and a cultivation of the taste for beer at which all modern friends of temperance would shudder in reasonable horror.

RHODE ISLAND.

CONVENTION DAYS.

"We gather in annual convention to-day, not as retired soldiers to recall impressive scenes and heroic deeds of the past, to tell with complacency and pride of battles sought and victories won, for we are yet in the midst of the conflict, facing the enemy strongly entrenched behind the bulwarks of law and accumulated capital, daily becoming more and more aggressive and more and more determined to gain and keep control of all municipal, state and national affairs. . . . We gather again to-day to make fuller and better preparations, to burnish our weapons, to enlist new recruits, to enlarge and strengthen our army for the conflict deepens; more and more determined seems the enemy to despoil our loved and cherished home for the safety and purity of which no labor is too hard, no sacrifice is too great."

With these stirring words, our valiant leader, Mrs. M. A. Babcock, began her address to the state forces of our W. C. T. U. in convention assembled. With clear and comprehensive vision she went over the battlefield where our moral warfare is in progress, showing how much of the enemy's strength lies in the fact that those who ought to be enlisted on our side do not carry their highest convictions to the ballot box, but give their good wishes to the cause of temperance and their vote to the legalized liquor traffic. She dwelt upon the enlarging sphere of womanhood, and looked hopefully forward to her complete emancipation. Lines of aggressive work were reviewed and new ones suggested, and the thought pressed home that our *out*look must always be an *up*look, for the victory which shall surely crown our efforts is of the Lord.

Mrs. Barney's Bible reading, coming at the first noontide hour of convention, was like a fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit. Her message was this: God's workers must be lost to all consciousness of self ere they can know the fuller, deeper consecration which shall fit them for the larger work which awaits our W. C. T. U.

Our memorial service, which was held in the still hour "between the lights," was led by Mrs. A. M. Paine. One by one the names of our comrades gone before were spoken with loving remembrance of their true-hearted loyal service. Mrs. Gulliver, the aged saint of ninety-four years, and Lois Smith, belong not alone to us, but as Cassie Smith was called upon and gave her tribute of affection, telling of the wonderful triumph of the spirit over acute bodily suffering, we rejoiced that "such as these have lived and died." Many a burdened heart found comfort as our leader of the hour spoke, not of the sleeping here, but of the glad awakening to a fuller, more perfect life above. "It takes the overflowing heart to give the lips full speech." To one who has passed down into the valley with a loved one, and as the gates opened for a moment, has caught a glimpse of the glory beyond ere they closed and left her to come back alone—to such an one more fully than to any other, comes the blessed privilege of leading sorrowing souls out of the shadows up to the heights of Beulah with the promised land in view. May the tender Shepherd guard her with His love till she too shall go "Out of the chill and the shadow;

Into the thrill and the shine!
Out of the dearth and the famine,
Into the fullness divine.

"Out of the sigh and the silence
Into the deep swelling song!
Out of the exile and bondage
Into the home gathered throng."

There is so much to tell it is hard to know where to draw the line. The report of each superintendent deserves special notice. Miss Larry's stirring address in behalf of the franchise department, gives promise of an able champion for womanhood. Miss Olney, but recently elected to the department of peace and arbitration, made a forceful presentation of the subject. Mrs. A. W. Chase is doing all in her power to promote thorough temperance instruction in our schools. Papers on the effects of alcohol, by Dr. M. D. M. Matthews, and on domestic economy, by Mrs. L. P. Bates, were useful and interesting. Two hundred thousand pages of literature, not including papers, have been circulated, Woonsocket and Newport leading the van.

Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of the Providence union, is enthusiastic over the opportunities opening up in the Elisha Dyer Vinton Home, the management of which has been assumed by that union during the past year. It is a large work, but we feel sure of its success under such able leadership.

Providence Y's report great good derived from the services of Miss Gordon. She gave nearly fifty Bible talks to the young women who patronize the tea rooms, and they hope that her visit may be repeated the coming winter. Her work with the Newport Y's was also greatly blessed.

We are very proud of our Outlook with its devoted editor, Mrs. H. J. Smith, assisted by Miss E. P. Nichols. It is free from debt now, and needs only the liberal support and patronage of its friends to make it an ever increasing power for good in our state.

Seven unions have sent one hundred dollars each for tablets in the Temple: Providence, Providence Y's, Phenix, Mt. Pleasant, Middletown, Portsmouth, Seekonk and East Providence.

An amendment to our constitution was brought before the convention and will be acted upon next year, by which the state will be divided into districts appointing their own presidents who will serve ex-officio as vice-presidents of the state organization.

Our helpers from outside were Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin, Miss E. W. Greenwood, and Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, and their helpful words will be held in grateful remembrance.

The church in which the convention met, Richmond Street Free Evangelical of Providence, for fifty years has kept its doors wide open for reforms; and its present pastor, Rev. J. H. Larry, is the editor of our state prohibition paper, The Independent Citizen. The enthusiasm of members, and the unity of the spirit together with the warm hospitality of the entertaining union and church have marked our session as red-letter days in our W. C. T.U. calendar.

I cannot do better than to sum up the year's work in the words of our secretary, Miss Nichols, whose faithful labors have done much to make the record so hopeful: "In reviewing the work for the year there is much to rejoice over. The open air meetings held by several of the local unions, have been the means of sowing good seed in the name of the Master. The work among the fallen, in the rescue missions of our state has had the active sympathy, support and coöperation of our members. The unions have helped our prohibition brethren cheerfully in arranging for public meetings before election, and the results were excellent. The pastors of our state have invited our women to speak in many of their churches, and the collections that have gone to our work show the interest of some of the people. We have been much blessed in having the services of Mrs. J. K. Barney the past year. She has helped us in many towns, speaking to and influencing the people to think and to act on the right side. Her efforts in behalf of the police matron bill were brave and successful. We thank God upon the remembrance of all her faithfulness."

Mrs. H. D. Walker has also helped us in our time of need, and her gospel services are highly appreciated. Speakers from other states have been numerous and helpful.

Our workers are growing, developing and becoming better trained by each year of service. Warm words of commendation come to us about the work and words of our president, whose field has been well tilled this year. Our superintendents are growing and several have done good work. Our place in the deliberations of the Woman's Council has helped us to exert our influence in a helpful way for the better protection of our sex, and we believe that the union and coöperation of Rhode Island womanhood will achieve grand results in days to come.

"Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate
Still achieving, still pursuing
Learn to labor and to wait."

We have been upon the Mount during these days, and have seen the glory of the Lord. We would gladly linger and build our tabernacles of memorial; but down in the valleys below are sin and suffering and unbelief, and, strengthened by the vision, we must go down, each to her separate task with the touch of healing and the prayer of faith, "reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord" until our lives shall become like unto His life in our ministries of love.

NEBRASKA.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

York was chosen this year for the gathering of the clans in their nineteenth annual convention. This was a happy choice, for York is a city, and a properous one, without a saloon. More than that, it has made its growth without one, thus refuting the argument of saloon supporters, that the saloon is a necessity to healthy growth. The women appreciated the privilege of even a few days residence in a prohibition town.

The members of the York union are very earnest, devoted, capable women and spared no pains to make the convention a grand success. Neither were the brothers backward in their efforts to make our stay among them pleasant and profitable. We were welcomed by the mayor, Hon. J. M. Steinbach, by Hon. E. A. Gilbert, in behalf of the business men, by Rev. C. T. Cross, of the Congregational church, in behalf of the church, and by Mrs. J. George, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. These addresses were responded to by Mrs. D. V. Wheelock, Miss Lillie Williams, Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley and Mrs. C. M. Woodward. This program filled the first evening, September 26. But I want to call to my aid all the most happy forms of expression in which to speak of the beautiful music furnished by Prof. Parks and his assistants. Three evenings the male quartette sung. Their rich voices blended most harmoniously, and called forth many words of praise. The High School girls' quartette, also trained by Prof. Parks, sang one evening, and on Friday, franchise evening, the male quartette rendered a song composed by Prof. Parks on that day and dedicated to the Nebraska W. C. T. U. The title was "When the women all shall vote in Nebraska," and it was received with delighted applause at the close of nearly every line. This song is to be published in sheet music form, and sold for the benefit of the state treasury.

The completed report of the credential committee gave us one hundred and twenty-seven members of the convention, rather more than was expected in these hard times. The railroads raised their requirement to one hundred and fifty certificates, but by the indefatigable efforts of our superintendent of railroad rates, Mrs. Woodward, extra visitors were secured and the rates given.

The last forty-five minutes of each forenoon were set apart for a devotional hour. The first day this was conducted by Mrs. Wellman, of York, a sweet-faced, white-haired woman, who gave an inspiring talk upon Christian courage.

The second day Mrs. S. K. Dailey, of University Place, took charge of the hour, her subject being prayer and praise. This being the day of the election of officers and delegates the hour was encroached upon, and only the first part of the subject was presented, but a very helpful exercise was given. The third day our young L. T. L. superintendent conducted the devotional hour—Miss Lillie Williams, of Meadow Grove.

The treasurer's report showed a better financial condition than was expected. The number of unions in the state is 222, an increase of forty-four. The number of members is 3,055.

The different departments were reported, a preference being given to those superintendents present over written reports sent in. Among the more noticeable of these were the report of railroad work by Mrs. S. M. Smith, of Lincoln, who has been ably assisted by Mrs. Woodward, National superintendent. These two have made a record in Nebraska in railroad work, and leading railroad men now give permission to refer to them as to the value of work done among their employés.

Mrs. Clark reported the Open Door and the same feature is noticeable again this year as formerly—about seventy per cent of girls cared for are American born. What a need of education to both mothers and girls. In the foreign department, the work of Mrs. Bryant, of Omaha, was very interesting and much to be commended. Also the description given by Mrs. Bigelow, of Lincoln, of a Chinese funeral which was conducted by herself with Christian rites and by Chinese friends with their own customs.

The Sunday-school temperance report by Mrs. L. P. Hartley, Lincoln, showed a very active year with a great increase in interest throughout the state. The work is now well organized and Mrs. Hartley has shown herself a genius in this department.

Franchise work was well-reported, showing much work done by its capable superintendent, Mrs. Z. A. Wilson, Lincoln, in the legislature for municipal and full suffrage. Though the bills failed to pass, the education of both legislators and citizens will help our cause and future work.

In the Temperance hospital work, Mrs. Jones of Hastings, reported the Nebraska room as progressing finely and hopes soon to raise the balance needed. She gave an interesting account of her visit to the hospital this summer. Mrs. Kate Northup, of York, reported the Temperance Temple work, that $561.23 had been sent from Nebraska to the Temple, with several tablets to be completed. Resolutions were adopted condemning the efforts made by sending derogatory literature into the state to create distrust and weaken the Temple management and reaffirming our confidence in Mrs. Carse and pledging our financial and moral support.

The department of physical culture was represented by an object lesson—a rainy day dress similar to the one worn by Mrs. Smith at Denver. Mrs. S. M. Walker, of Surprise, was the brave woman who wore it for the two days that the much-needed rain poured down upon York and the convention. I don't know as it takes much courage when one looks as well in it as she does, but if Mother Putnam or I should don it, we should have brave hearts indeed.

On Friday afternoon, a Y hour was given, conducted by Mrs. Carrie Heald, the new Y superintendent. Memorial services were also held for Miss Mary A. Ripley and twenty-one others who have laid down their work and gone on to the other shore during the year. Mrs. M. D. Evans, of University Place, conducted the services.

Friday evening was devoted to a "franchise symposium." Papers were read by Mrs. Zara A. Wilson on "The Legal Advantages of the Ballot," and by Dr. Freda Lankton on "The Social Advantages of the Ballot."

Mrs. Belle Bigelow gave an address on the home interests and Rev. B. Spurlock and Rev. C. E. Bentley spoke on the subject.

In the evening Rev. Frances Townsley, of Ashland, gave a masterly address which greatly pleased those who heard her.

The election of officers and delegates resulted as follows: President, Mrs. M. A. Hitchcock, Fremont; vice-president, Mrs. S. M. Walker, Surprise; corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. V. Wheelock, Beatrice; recording secretary, Miss Ella M. Watson, Bellwood; treasurer, Mrs. M. M. Lantry, Omaha. Delegates to National Convention were, Mrs. M. S. Putnam, Brunning; Mrs. Gibbs, Central City; Mrs. L. E. Bailey, Cowles; Mrs. S. K. Dailey, University Place; Mrs. F. W. Pease, Albion; Mrs. Nettie Doty, Wauneta; Mrs. C. E. Bentley, Lincoln, delegate-at-large. Delegates to the World's convention were Mrs. Hitchcock, Mrs. Woodward and Mrs. Lantry.

Superintendents of departments are: L. T. L., Miss Lillie Williams, Meadow Grove; L. T. L. and kindergarten, Miss Una B. Moore, Palmyra; Sunday-school work, Mrs. L. P. Hartley, Lincoln; evangelistic, Mrs. S. C. O. Upton, Lincoln; work among soldiers, Mrs. Olive M. Leader, Chadron; railroad work, Mrs. S. M. Smith, Lincoln; jail and prison and flower mission, Mrs. Angie F. Newman, Lincoln; physical culture, Mrs. Lottie Luce, Fullerton; health and heredity, Mrs. J. H. Battles, Auburn; purity, suppression of impure literature and mothers' meetings, Mrs. G. W. Clark, Omaha; legislation and petition, Mrs. Nellie Richardson, Gering; press and literature, Mrs. C. C. Cobb, York; franchise, Mrs. Zara A. Wilson, Lincoln; fairs, Mrs. N. M. Bunting, David City; Y work, Mrs. Carrie Heald, Osceola; Sabbath observance, Mrs. L. E. Bailey, Cowles, parlor meetings, Mrs. Pugh, Omaha; school of methods, Mrs. C. M. Woodward, Seward; narcotics, Mrs. A. Roberts, Lincoln; Temperance Temple, Mrs. K. G. Northup, York; foreign work, Mrs. Belle Bigelow, Lincoln. The department of mercy was taken up, and Mrs. Smith Hayward, of Chadron, elected as superintendent. Mrs. O. H. Jones, of Hastings, is continued editor of Union Worker.

CONVENTION JOTTINGS.

The first convention of the Nebraska W. C. T. U. was held in Lincoln in 1875. But two delegates from out of the city were present. These two were presented together to the York convention, Mrs. Hitchcock and Mrs. Isabella Spurlock, assistant superintendent of the Mothers' Jewels Home at York. Each spoke a few words, the latter saying, "The little one has become a great host. Praise the Lord!"

Rev. Alice Draper, of the Christian Church, was one of the visitors introduced to the convention, also Rev. Frances Townsley who was to speak in the evening.

A nice drawn rug, made by Mother Putnam, and containing in its pattern various symbolic letters and emblems, is to be sent to the Nebraska room of the Hospital.

Mrs. Anna Downing, a former district president, was present with her eight weeks' old baby. Baby was introduced to the convention, saluted, and had the white-ribbon tied upon her arm and the name of Willard added to her present name of Jessie. Although a wee woman, she declined to say anything in return for the courtesy.

Mrs. E. M. J. Cooley, Grand Vice-Templar of Nebraska, was introduced and spoke in her well-known pleasant way.

Mrs. Woodby, wife of the eloquent colored prohibition lecturer, was a delegate from Omaha.

Mrs. Bigelow presented a new word coined by a correspondent in the work among foreigners—"saloonatic."

When Mrs. Hitchcock was elected president a telegram was sent her daughter, Mrs. Lombard, of Fremont. On motion of Mrs. Woodward, who declared herself a believer in the rights of men, a telegram was also sent Mr. Walker, announcing his wife's election as vice-president. Then Mrs. Walker rose and gave this tribute to her husband: "When Mr. Walker wants to thresh, he comes to me and asks, 'Wife, what are your engagements?' I consult my calendar and the threshing is set for the time when I am at liberty." And those women cheered Mr. Walker.

In a striking letter from Chancellor Canfield, of the State University, upon the subject of the ballot for women, and read by Mrs. Wilson in the franchise symposium, occurred this strong sentence: "Pray, do not argue this question any longer. He who is not now convinced, cannot be convinced. Do not entreat but demand that which is just and equitable." These are manly words from a true friend. May the number of such friends increase.

A resolution condemning in strong language the treatment of the state W. C. T. U. exhibit in the Nebraska building at the World's Fair was passed unanimously, and will appear in the leading papers of the state signed by the entire executive committee and be also sent to Governor Crounse.

The state W. C. T. U. expended between three and four hundred dollars on an exhibit, and Mrs. Hitchcock went to Chicago in April to arrange it. The lady commissioners at the Nebraska building were not very courteous but the exhibit was placed. After Mrs. Hitchcock returned home, a large crayon portrait of herself, picture of the executive committee, and several other photographs were taken down, boxed up and hidden away where they could not be found though repeatedly hunted for by visitors who insisted upon the attendants' assistance in their search. A large number of state minutes designed for distribution were burned. The exhibit was rearranged in about half the space first granted, lunch tables were set in front of it and screens put all around these. The exhibit appeared to be anything but a credit to our state union when they were through with it, whereas, at first it was nicely arranged and a very creditable display. This is the treatment that caused the indignation of the women and the passing of the resolution.

Want of space could not be offered in excuse for the action, as any one knows who has seen the large exhibition room upstairs in the Nebraska building. The ladies feel it to be an insult to the W. C. T. U. and to the cause of temperance.

TENNESSEE.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The twelfth annual convention of Tennessee W. C. T. U. was held in the beautiful and progressive little city of Maryville, Tenn., September 27, 28 and 29. This was one of the most interesting and successful conventions ever held in our state, though darkened by a sad event that hung like a pall over the assembled white-ribboners throughout the session.

Our state treasurer, one of the brigthest women in our union and the life of all our conventions, was met as she alighted from the train with a telegram announcing the death of her only son. And all hearts were so saddened with love and sympathy for her that it seemed at first as if the work of the convention could not go on. But being already assembled for the convention all felt that the work must be done, though with saddened hearts; and she herself, though so sorely stricken, would not have had it otherwise.

The convention was held in the auditorium of the New Providence church, (Presbyterian) a beautiful building which was handsomely decorated with flowers and banners, and ribbons yellow and white, while the beloved features of Frances E. Willard smiled upon her followers from among the decorations.

Rev. Frank E. Moore, the pastor, gave cordial greeting in words of welcome and encouragement, and Rev. Mr. McAllister, pastor of the M. E. Church South, also extended salutations of cheer and sympathy. The music, under the management of Prof. J. G. Newman, of the Maryville College, was ably rendered, and proved an acceptable and pleasing feature of the convention.

Almost the first work of the convention was to arrange for an organizer to come to our state and do some much-needed work along that line.

Then the Mary Allen West memorial school of methods at Waynesville, N. C., was presented for consideration. Motion was made and carried that Mrs. Tomlinson be invited into the state to canvass for help to complete this work, and that the unions assist her all they can.

The subject of the indebtedness of the W. C. T. U. Temple at Harriman also came up for consideration, and the motion was carried that the unions assist them all they can in their efforts to liquidate this indebtedness.

A committee was appointed to bound the different districts in the state that local unions might unite to hold district conventions.

At the afternoon session the various committees were appointed. And then came the reports of superintendents of departments, which were continued from session to session until all were in. These reports showed an unusual amount of activity in the various departments, with much faithful work done all along the line.

Wednesday night was a mass meeting, in which were extended words of welcome from the pastors of the town and by Miss Henry, of the Maryville W. C. T. U. These were responded to by Mrs. Gardner, of Nashville, in her usual happy, inimitable style. Then followed three-minute talks from representatives of the various local unions, which were spicy and interesting.

Thursday morning, in addition to the reports of superintendents, two papers were read, one on "Literature and Vice," by Mrs. Kirby, of Nashville, and one on "How to Train the Young," by Mrs. Gardner. Both papers were well received. Thursday afternoon memorial services were held for our promoted soldiers. A paper by Mrs. Holman was read, which was a loving tribute to the memory of Mary Allen West. One by Mrs. Abernethy, in memory of Jennie Casseday, and one by Mrs. Roach, in memory of our own loved, bright, jolly, true-hearted Belle Sasser, who died nearly a year ago, and who was one of the best loved women in the Tennessee W. C. T. U.

Thursday night came the president's annual address, which sparkled with wit and humor, poetry and pathos, such as she only knows how to commingle, and which all who have had the privilege of hearing our highly gifted president, remember so well.

Friday morning came reports of several district conventions, then the report on social purity and corresponding secretary's report and the report of state treasurer. This last report shows our finances in a healthy condition, with a good balance in the treasury, as it always is under the guidance of our faithful state treasurer.

Then came the election of officers, when all the old officers were reëlected by a large majority.

Most of the superintendents of departments were retained, as last year, only a few changes being made. Two or three new departments were taken up. Kindergarten work, Mrs. Louise McHenry of Nashville, superintendent; railroad work, Mrs. Caldwell, of Athens, superintendent, and flower mission work, Mrs. Akers, of Jonesboro, superintendent.

Invitations were sent in that the convention be held another year either at Athens, Jackson or Union City. The motion carried that executive committee choose among them for the place of next meeting. Friday night, Mrs. Meriwether delighted a large audience with another of her inimitable lectures, entitled, "A Twentieth Century Home," which should be heard to be appreciated as it deserves. This closed our last, and one of our very best conventions.

DISTRICT CONVENTION.

One report has been sent in since my last. This from Jonesboro which reports the meeting of their district convention. This was held in Johnson City, with a fairly good attendance, four unions being represented. They had three meetings, morning, afternoon and evening. Their time was occupied with a number of interesting papers, some beautiful recitations, and quite a number of impromptu speeches. The officers elected were Mrs. Kate Simpson, of Jonesboro, president; Mrs. S. B. Paul, of Bristol, secretary; Mrs. Adams, of Johnson City, treasurer, and Mrs. Wilson of Johnson City, district organizer. Mrs. Wilson was a Crusader, and read quite an interesting paper on "Personal Reminiscences of the Crusade." Their resolutions gave evidence of the wide-awake, progressive nature of the convention, one of them being, "Believing in the equal rights of women before the law, we hereby pledge ourselves to lend our influence in all right directions to secure the ballot for women."

MAINE.

A GRAND CONVENTION.

We have just returned from our nineteenth annual convention feeling that it is "the best yet." The gathering place of our clans was the First Baptist church of Rockland, where the salt winds of the Atlantic seemed to exhilarate even the quietest of our women. Every thing was done for our comfort and pleasure from the beautiful decoration of the church in which the pastor and his wife assisted, to the cordial welcome we received in the pleasant homes of the city.

Eleven years ago when our state convention was held in the same place there were but forty-six delegates. This year the report of the credential committee showed that 206 voting members were present beside many white-ribbon visitors from all parts of the state.

The session opened on the morning of Tuesday, Sept. 26th, with a Bible reading and devotional meeting conducted by Mrs. Lucy Snow, our evangelistic superintendent. Mrs. March, secretary of the Rockland Y. W. C. A., kindly led the singing during the entire meeting. She was assisted by Miss Jessie Bartlett of Fort Fairfield, who rendered several beautiful solos, and at one of the evening meetings by the Congregational choir.

This year instead of reporting the department work by counties most of the state superintendents gave only a resumé of the year's work together with practical suggestions, leaving most of the time allotted them for free discussion. The plan worked admirably, their discussions proving one of the most helpful features of the convention, bringing out many bright ideas which will be utilized in the future. Indeed our state president, who every one knows is a model parliamentarian, said some quite flattering things to us about the correct manner and distinct utterance with which the business was translated. And it is undoubtedly true that never before have so many different members spoken so much to the point.

Tuesday evening was a feast of good things. After devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. H. J. Bailey, and the beautiful rendering of "If I were a Voice," by Miss Bartlett, Mrs. Emma Hall, president of Knox county, in which Rockland is situated, and formerly president of the local union, extended the charming welcome, representing the Rockland sisters. The real heart to heart welcome we had already received. Mrs. Hall was followed by her pastor, Rev. J. N. Parshely, in behalf of the churches. It has often been our privilege to receive words of encouragement and commendation from the clergy, but seldom have the merits of our organization been set forth as by this eloquent speaker. "You teach that character and not money is the foundation stone even of material prosperity. You have brought forward the most magnificent roll of public women that ever characterized a nation. The lifting of womanhood to the side of man in deciding publicly as well as privately the destiny of the race, is one of the great achievements of this organization. I am proud of you, though at times a little envious that it was not organized by a man." These are only a few of the nice things said about us. Mr.

Parshely concluded by prophesying that the overthrow of the liquor traffic is not far distant, on the principle that the greatest boldness of iniquity signals the coming of righteousness.

Mrs. Elizabeth Robbins, of Deering, and Miss Lubelle Patrick, of Groveville, fittingly responded for the union and the Y Branch respectively.

An original poem was read by Mr. W. O. Fuller, Jr., editor of the Rockland Tribune. It was a prophecy of the good time coming when the Christian temperance women get their way.

Mrs. Stevens followed with her annual address, and it was one of her very best. It would be unjust to attempt to quote fragments of it.

We were fortunate in securing Mrs. Josephine Nichols and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore for the two remaining evenings. To Mrs. Livermore we have often listened with pleasure, but few of us had ever heard Mrs. Nichols. Her subject was, "The Home versus the Saloon," and for about an hour and a half she held the closest attention of the large audience. It seemed to us that few out of the many gifted speakers whom the W. C. T. U. has brought forward equal Mrs. Nichols for combined culture, eloquence and logic. Her closing illustration will never be forgotten by any who heard it. At the close of her address many local presidents were saying, "She must speak for our union." Plans are already on foot to bring her back to the state. While at Portland Mrs. Nichols was invited by Bishop Healey from the sacred desk, an honor which I think has never before been conferred upon a woman by this conservative Episcopalian divine.

In no previous state convention have the young women taken so prominent a part. Several departments are superintended by young women, and beside their reports an hour during the second afternoon was placed at the disposal of the Y Branch. The superintendent, Miss Lubelle Patrick, presided in a most pleasing manner. Reports of flower mission work and of several local Y's were presented. Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, daughter of our president, made a bright and sensible speech and appropriate music was rendered. Altogether the Y hour was a great success and was enjoyed by all. Telegrams of greeting were sent to the Kansas, New Jersey and New Hampshire conventions and to Mrs. Margaret Merrill, long our state purity superintendent, also a cablegram to our beloved National leader.

The nucleus of a lecture bureau was formed with Mrs. Flora Wright and Mrs. Seamans, two plucky Aroostook women, as its beginning. In this way our unions will be able to obtain helpers without the expense which places speakers from out of the state beyond the reach of some of the smaller unions. Mrs. Wright has already traveled 3,000 miles, held fifty-eight mothers' meetings and spoken fifty-four times in the interest of her department.

Those of our number who during the year have been called up higher were tenderly remembered in a beautiful memorial service. The list of names included many who have wrought long and faithfully for our blessed cause, among them one of our state superintendents, Mrs. Alice Hammond, superintendent of temperance literature and agent for THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Abbie Shapleigh, of Cambridge, Mass., paid a tender tribute to her friend and co-worker, the late Mrs. Amelia C. Thorpe, whose summer home was in our state, and to whom Maine white-ribboners had become strongly attached.

The convention received many interested visitors, including clergymen of all denominations and two of the local editors. But no guest was more welcome than the press superintendent of the Rockland union and also of the county, Miss Cora Loring. For several weeks Miss Loring had been preparing the way for our coming by explaining our work and giving something of our personnel in the paper. For more than six years she has been an invalid and though a member of the church in which the session was held the few hours spent with us were the first passed in any public assembly during all that time. When Mrs. Stevens announced her presence the entire convention rose and gave her the Chautauqua salute. Soon afterward Mr. Fuller, the author of the poem above mentioned, made us a second visit and on being presented remarked, "They tell me that you want to vote and I think you ought to." Thereupon Miss Loring decorated him with the yellow ribbon.

Another incident not soon to be forgotten was the bringing in of a five weeks' old baby girl at the close of Mrs. Wyman's report on securing homes for homeless children. The little one was nameless and homeless, but Mrs. Stevens at once conferred upon her the honored name of Frances Willard, together with our "badge of snow." The baby behaved in a way worthy of her name, and on her departure our president pronounced over her the W. C. T. U. benediction. Before the convention closed a good home had been secured for the baby, and also for a lovely little girl of six, who was also presented to the convention. At the close of the last afternoon meeting a very enjoyable reception was tendered the delegates at the Home of the Good Shepherd, a home for needy children recently founded under Episcopalian auspices.

We enter upon the work of a new year with the best of courage, harmony in our ranks and our beloved leader in command placed there for the seventeenth time, and without a dissenting vote.

PENNSYLVANIA.

MERCER COUNTY

W. C. T. U. held its annual convention, September 7 and 8, with a good attendance and excellent program.

The state Y organizer made a fine address the first evening, which was followed by a Y reception at the home of the county president.

Mrs. Marian B. Baxter delighted all the second evening of convention with her masterly presentation of "Society as it is." Mrs. Baxter has been engaged to lecture at various points in the county.

The officers of this county for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Mrs. G. D. Devitt; corresponding secretary, Miss Adda Burch; recording secretary, Miss M. L. Crawford; treasurer, Miss Ina Stewart. Miss Sarah Pew was elected delegate to the National Convention, with Miss Adda Burch as alternate.

CLEARFIELD COUNTY

held the eighth annual session at Houtzdale in August, with a large attendance of delegates and visitors from all parts of the county. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. Learick, and response by Mrs. S. J. Shaw. The various clergymen, of whom there was a large attendance, made brief addresses. Dr. Anna Shaw lectured the first evening to a large audience.

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of the county occupied the second evening with a fine entertainment, under the direction of their able superintendent, Mrs. Wilson. The county Y banner was presented to the Chester Hill Y for the best record, and the second place was won by the Lumber City Y, that prize being a handsome book. The Y girls presented their county superintendent with a purse containing money to pay her expenses to the state convention, as a token of esteem for her. This county has done exceptionally good work during the year, and it has been promptly reported.

TIOGA COUNTY

held its tenth annual convention at Mansfield, August 17, 18; a large delegation was present, nearly all unions being represented. Three new unions were organized during the year. The reports of superintendents show an encouraging increase in activity and an awakening interest in Woman's Christian Temperance Union work.

One evening was given entirely to the Loyal Temperance Legion which was well represented on that occasion. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap conducted a school of methods during the last afternoon of convention and in the evening lectured on "Woman and Reform." Among the visiting clergymen from various parts of the county were Rev. A. S. Elliott, of Arnot, Rev. Troxwell, of Mainsburg and Rev. Peterson, of Whitneyville.

POTTER COUNTY

convention was held at North Bingham, September 13, 14, 15. One good feature of the new law regarding the purchasing of text books is that under its provision many of the schools in this county have been supplied with the indorsed physiologies.

Ulysses union had Rev. John Hector to lecture for them. The Ulysses Y's send out invitations to their entertainments in a unique way—in the shape of peanuts tied with a white ribbon. When the ribbon is untied the nut falls apart revealing the invitation. The Ulysses unions unite with other temperance citizens to pay the expenses of an inebriate who was sent to a gold cure. This is a practical work which many of our unions might well imitate.

VENANGO AND NORTHUMBERLAND.

Venango County held its annual convention at Franklin, September 20. Rev. Henrietta Moore was the speaker for one evening and a gold medal contest was held the second evening.

Northumberland County will hold its annual convention at Northumberland September 28 and 29; Mrs. Anna Hammer, state president, lectures on the 28th.

THE FIRST PHILADELPHIA Y W. C. T. U.

is doing most excellent work, and the members are zealous and active in various lines of work. A house was taken in June in which they have their headquarters. A flourishing kindergarten is carried on by them, also a song service every Saturday afternoon. They conduct a Loyal Temperance Legion and are active in flower mission work. These Y's have also taken poor children to the park and on excursions on the river.

POINTS.

Demorest contest work is growing in interest; one thousand four hundred and sixty-one silver medals, one hundred and twenty-five gold, and five grand gold have been distributed.

The nineteenth annual state convention was held in Lancaster, October 6 to 10, inclusive; a good program has prepared and with Dr. Anna Shaw, Miss Greenwood and Miss Sanborn with us, together with all our grand state workers, it proved one of the best conventions ever held. A full report will be given later.

After all the preceding conventions perhaps some might imagine that Pennsylvania has been doing nothing but convening. We have done something else as witness the grand array of new unions organized and reported since our August letter, for twenty-seven new unions besides a new county (Greene) have been organized.

With sadness we record the death of two of our workers, Mrs. Tillie J. Moore of Cameron county, also Mrs. C. W. Jessup. Thus God calls His workers to "come up higher" while we who remain to do His bidding here must awake to renewed vigor.

Mrs. Marian Baxter and Mrs. Helen Bullock will be in our state during the months of September and October.

In glancing briefly over our list of contributing members, one might well be led to believe that some of the good sisters believe strictly in adhering to the Bible injunction of not letting "the right hand know what the left one does," either that or their extreme modesty prevents them from reporting their good deeds.

The school of methods, held at Ridgeway, was participated in by the unions of the counties of Allegheny, Westmoreland and Indiana.

NORTH CAROLINA W. C. T. U.

Since convention two unions have been organized, one at Statesville by our president, Mrs. Woody, on her way home. The other at Pleasant Garden with ten active and eight honorary members. This union I believe to be the outgrowth of sentiment created by the Demorest contest, eighteen of which have been held during the past year, sixteen silver and two gold medals. The last gold medal was won by Mary King, a little girl ten years old. This work is being actively engaged in by many outside the W. C. T. U. in our state.

We are so glad to welcome Mrs. McDowell, president of the W. C. T. U. of Harriman, Tenn., who will make North Carolina her home and engage actively in the work.

Miss Burnett, of Ohio, who has spent a year at Tyron and was helpful in state convention, went to Dillsboro to aid the union there. The W. C. T. U. of Dillsboro is erecting a tablet sacred to the memory of Mrs. Merrick, who laid out her life in starting the work in that section of North Carolina.

Mrs. M. E. Morrison and two daughters who have been missionaries to China, will make Dillsboro their home during the winter where they will engage in teaching school, and other Christian work. Dillsboro union will be much helped by these ladies.

Miss Burnett, before returning to Ohio, visited the teachers' institute and at an opportune time secured the floor for a six minutes' talk on the enforcement of scientific temperance instruction; the institute was so thrilled with her stirring appeal that the chapel rang with applause. It is the purpose of the North Carolina W. C. T. U. to push the work as never before during the coming year.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS WILLARD'S birthday was splendidly celebrated by the W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. of Deer Lodge, Tenn. Scripture reading, the Lord's prayer, recitations by the children, a fine address and singing, comprised the exercises. The pledge was explained, and the happy young folks went home after enjoying a picnic lunch.

MRS. MARY MCGEE SNELL is holding great tent meetings in Tennessee, as an evangelist of the W. C. T. U. She has spoken to many thousands. Hundreds of unconverted men have sought her aid for salvation, and it is reported that at Greenfield she has "about cleaned up the town." A liquor dealer promised to quit the business and let her knock in the head of the first barrel of his wares he emptied into the gutter. God has been leading Mrs. Snell out in evangelistic service in a wonderful way.

INDIANA NEWS.

Ere this reaches you my successor as state reporter may be named by our state convention, which is held this year in the Quaker city of Richmond. For the first time in ten years I shall not be in our annual meeting. My work as an evangelist in the United Brethren church will be in Illinois principally this year. The Lower Wabash conference received your unworthy servant as a member at its annual session held in Terre Haute, August 30, 31, and September 1, 2 and 3. She hopes to finish her reading course during the coming year, and be ordained at the next annual conference, which will meet at Westfield, Ill. At the conference above named Miss Alma Button was ordained as an elder in the church. Miss Button is the first lady ordained by our conference. She preached the opening sermon of the conference. Her sermon was full of dignity, love and power. Miss Button is a very successful pastor as well as a strong preacher. Her circuit this year is in the neighborhood of Casey, Ill. She is a white-ribbon sister, too. Sister H. J. Musselman, well known to white-ribbon women of Illinois, is also an evangelist in our church. She will be ordained next year.

At this conference many of the lay delegates were women, and the majority of them wore a little badge of white. This fact was comforting to us. As a token of comradeship, the Frances Willard W. C. T. U., which has its home or place of meeting at the First U. B. church, gave each visitor a cabinet photograph of Mrs. J. R. Nichols, Indiana's beloved white-ribbon daughter. At the close the conference held a meeting in honor of Miss Ellen Groendyke, returned missionary from West Africa, in our church. Miss Groendyke is also delegate from the W. C. T. U. of West Africa to the World's Convention.

Our quartette sang "Round the World with Ribbons White," Rev. Ed. Long, our brave young brother, offered prayer, Mrs. S. Tremaine, our brave president, introduced Miss Groendyke, who, with an enthusiasm born of God, told of West African W. C. T. U. work. God help us to hold up the hands of those who go abroad to carry our gospel of peace to all the world. She spoke so lovingly of the work and efforts of our own Alice R. Palmer that we felt more willing to let her stay. Miss Groendyke is an Indiana woman, too. After a hearty handshake of fellowship and Godspeed the benediction was pronounced by Miss Button.

Vigo county W. C. T. U. held its convention last week. Miss Margaret Dickson made the address.

September 29 the Frances Willard union celebrated Miss Willard's birthday. By force of circumstances they were obliged to defer the meeting until the 29th. The quartette sang appropriate selections. Mrs. Tremaine presided. Mrs. Stephens, county president, led the devotions. W. H. Hickman, D. D., and Rev. J. B. Connett made addresses appropriate to the occasion. Little Maud Lappin recited, and on the whole the meeting was an excellent one.

The state liquor dealers' association met in Terre Haute during the month of September. They were welcomed as law-abiding citizens by the mayor of our city. They were feasted and highly entertained. Hulman & Company, wholesale grocers and liquor dealers, gave a banquet which they attended in a body. The number entertained at this banquet including the association, citizens and visitors were fully four thousand. In view of this fact the Frances Willard W. C. T. U. asked for the state convention this year, but as we had had the convention in 1890 it was thought best to go to some other point.

I know this is merely a Terre Haute letter, but the fault lieth in the reporter and not in the faithful white ribboned host of Indiana. God bless them, they are faithful and true. Their correspondent has not been able to keep in touch with the field work during the last two months on account of hard study and close examinations.

She now lays down her pen, knowing they can easily select one from among their number who can do them much more credit than she has done. But with all that she lays the pen down reluctantly. To lay down service for you is like saying good-by for a long separation. But, comrades mine, I always expect to march with you in the rank and file. I shall loyally wear our white ribbon badge while I live.

"The department of News From the Field," may it grow better from week to week. God bless our paper and the cause it represents.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

THE Kewanee, Ill., union recently passed hearty resolutions upon the value of the services of Dr. A. W. Tracy and Col. Sobieski, who have been holding extensive series of meetings there. As a result of one of Dr. Tracy's talks to mothers, fifty-five ladies gave their names to the W. C. T. U.

WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

Patrons and lecturers are invited to visit the headquarters of the Woman's Lecture Bureau in the organization room of the Woman's Building at Jackson Park. We will be pleased to see you and talk over the work for the winter for which we are now arranging. It is necessary to urge upon all the necessity of coöperation in this line of the work and we trust that each union will do all that is possible to place the lecture work upon the footing it deserves.

We wish to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available for woman's clubs in the East until February, and in the West for the remainder of the winter.

The following lecturers are under the management of the Bureau and will be available during the fall and winter.

BUREAU NOTES.

The Woman's Lecture Bureau wishes to call special attention to the fact that Mme. Fanny Zampini Salazar, of Italy, will be available in this country during the fall and winter. She will lecture on the arts, habits and literature of her own country.

Owing to the difficulty of unions in assuming the responsibility of raising money to compensate speakers for their lectures, Mrs. Marion B. Baxter has decided to devote a portion of her time each year to a special plan of work, particulars of which may be obtained by applying to the Bureau.

We wish to call attention to the talent displayed by Frank Dwight Denny in his recitals and lectures. Unions desiring to make arrangements for this class of entertainment in lecture courses for the winter will secure all information by addressing the Bureau.

NOTICE.

To prevent the possible misconstruction, by inference not intended, in my article published in THE UNION SIGNAL, September 28, announcing the new discovery in orificial surgery securing "deliverance of women from suffering," I wish to state that only the last case of the forty-one was performed at our National Temperance Hospital. Perhaps it was too much for me, in closing that article, to have requested every member of the W. C. T. U. to make known that our hospital is the place above all other places for the care and treatment of diseased women. But here there is no alcohol or alcoholic liquors, opium, morphine, tobacco or tobacco fumes, profanity, or anything else used or practiced which is opposed by the W. C. T. U. The hospital is run by God-loving, God-fearing, devoted Christian women, in the interest of women, for women, and I thought all good, pure and true women should give this institution their unqualified indorsement and support. Very respectfully, WM. D. GENTRY, M. D.

Our Library Table.

WILL THE OLD BOOK STAND? by H. L. Hastings, Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. This is a lecture delivered by Mr. Hastings before the sixteenth annual convention of the Massachusetts Y. M. C. A. Dwight L. Moody unhesitatingly pronounces this one of the best things of its kind and it carries its own indorsement in that it is now in its third million edition. It deals most uncomprising blows at infidelity and makes the Bible Christian rejoice for his own allegiance to the Book.

IMITATION OF CHRIST, by Thomas á Kempis. Illustrated with fifteen drawings depicting scenes in the life of Christ, by H. Hofman, director of the Royal Academy of Arts at Dresden.

"The Imitation of Christ" takes its name from the first chapter. It has been a classic with Christians of all denominations for many generations and bids fair never to lose its popularity. In the middle of the last century the King's Library at London had sixty-three editions including translations into eight languages. This new edition, convenient in size, daintily printed, appropriately illustrated, and beautifully bound, will appeal to people of the most correct taste and will be found particularly suitable for gifts.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

A CHAPTER ON CHOLERA FOR LAY READERS, by Walter Vought, Ph. B., M. D. The author of this not untimely work is the Medical Director and Physician-in-Charge of the Fire Island Quarantine Station, Port of New York. Before the reader has gone very far he will say to himself, "The summer is over and Dr. Vought's prophecy has not come to pass," viz., that we had reason to believe the dread disease would appear among us during the summer season. In less than one hundred pages the author gives a definition of the disease, its history, the cause of cholera in America, causes of the disease, the disease in human beings, the germ in the body, its epidemic form, symptoms, diagnosis, prognosis, treatment, prevention, cholera on shipboard, quarantine, disinfection.

The author, 12 W. Tenth St., New York City.

Is not this the era of beautiful booklets? Thomas Y. Crowell & Company have real genius in fitting to becoming dress the many thought-treasures that are submitted to their care. Bound in white leatherette, artistically decorated, only about twenty-five pages in length, but not so easily measured in breadth and height and depth, is the booklet, WHAT IS WORTH WHILE? by Anna Robertson Brown, Ph. D. All life is characterized by some kind of effort and the question title is pertinent—What is truly worth while? The author answers broadly, clearly, philosophically—Christianly. The last sentence of the sermonette is a typical one: "Letting go the unworthy things that meet us, pretence, worry, discontent and self-seeking—and taking loyal hold of time, work, present happiness, love, duty, friendship, sorrow and faith, let us so live in all true womanliness as to be an inspiration, strength and blessing to those whose lives are touched by ours!"

A suitable companion to the above in dress and contents is YOUNG MEN: FAULTS AND IDEALS, by J. R. Miller, D. D., whose writings have not infrequently been given favorable notice in these columns. GIRLS: FAULTS AND IDEALS, was very much to the point and these kindly criticisms touching young men will doubtless be as cordially received.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., 46 E. 14th St., New York City.

Mrs. Florence G. Buckstaff's paper on "Married Women's Property in Anglo-Saxon and Anglo-Norman Law, and the Origin of the Common Law Dower," in the late ANNALS of the American Academy of Political and Social Science is a scientific study of the origin and growth of those disabilities in respect to owning property under which married women were placed until within most recent years. This paper is an evidence of the increasing interest which women are taking in all the problems of political economy and political and social science. In the department of Briefer Communications, Dr. W. W. Willoughby makes an earnest plea for the establishment of "A National Department of Health." Mr. W. F. Harding explains the mode of operation of "A Successful School Savings Bank" at Bloomington, Ill. Prof. John R. Commons presents a solution for the present financial troubles in his paper on "Bullion Notes and an Elastic Currency," and Dr. Leo S. Rowe gives an account of the "Congress of the Society of Social Economy at Paris" last June.

THE heads of the Berlin Jewish community, many of them wealthy and influential, are to send a petition to the Emperor protesting against the anti-Semitic excesses.

A VACANT parish in Scotland sent out a list of questions referring to the fitness of candidates. Among them was the significant one, "Is he an abstainer from spirituous liquors?"

IT is stated that one of the noble characteristics of Russian women is their devotion to one another. Many have suffered martyrdom to rescue their countrywomen who are political offenders.

ONLY ten per cent of the British soldiers in India are allowed to marry, but a much larger per cent of native soldiers marry and in consequence the latter lead much more respectable lives than the former.

IN Glasgow last year women's votes gave five total abstinence candidates to the Municipal Council, and this year three out of four. Glasgow is by universal admission one of the best governed, if not the best governed city in the world.

THE annual convention of Christian workers in the United States and Canada meets this year in Atlanta, Ga., November 9–15, under the auspices of the International Christian Workers' Association. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins, well known as gospel singers, will direct the music, and extensive preparations are being made for aggressive work.

FULTON Street Daily Noon prayer meeting celebrated its thirty-sixth anniversary on the 23d of September, sending out a simple souvenir program for the occasion, containing a cut of the old North Dutch church and an interior view of the chapel at 113 Fulton street, where the daily noon gatherings are held. The little chapel might well be called the business men's spiritual lunch room, for there hungry and thirsty souls are refreshed and starving ones satisfied with the bread which perisheth not.

A GIRL'S OWN BOOK
KORADINE LETTERS

By ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D., Author of "TOKOLOGY," and LIDA HOOD TALBOT, Interpreter of Delsarte.

Koradine is a bright girl, alive to impressions, quick in discernment and clear in intuition. In telling her story she carries the reader into philosophy, metaphysics and the conduct of life, revealing progressively the development of a young girl in body, mind and spirit. THE KERNEL of the book is CREATIVE LIFE, a detached supplement being a private letter from Dr. Stockham to young girls. This is bound separately, and inclosed in a pocket in the back of the book; it can thus be given to or withheld from the reader at discretion.

Prepaid, $2 Circulars Free. Best Terms to Agents.

—"A dirty house creates a strife, between the good man and his wife."—

To secure peace

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

LOVELY CHRISTMAS CARD

Designed by Lady Henry Somerset.

For Christmas, Lady Henry Somerset has drawn a lovely card, which has been engraved in colors at Nuremberg, by Nister & Co., the most celebrated art publishers in the world. It represents a mother and child of whom it might be said, "In the whole city full, home they had none," and bears the name, "A Nineteenth Century Nativity." It has a quotation from James Russell Lowell, and bears Lady Henry's autograph. The price, post free, is 25 cents, and it is a large-sized card.

Orders can be sent from now on, and specimens will be on view at the World's and National Conventions.

WINTER BLOOMING BULBS FREE!

The Lovely, Fragrant Cinnamon Vine! Two Bulbs of this Delightful, Sweet-Scented, Winter-Blooming Climber Absolutely Free to Every Reader of this Periodical! A Great Offer by a Well-Known, Old Established and Thoroughly Reliable Publishing House! The Cinnamon Vine is one of the most charming of all plants for the window garden. It grows very rapidly, soon attaining a height of twenty feet or more, and completely surrounding the window, making it a perfect bower of beauty. Its leaves are beautifully shaped, and it blooms freely, producing in great profusion a delicate white flower, which emits the delightful odor of cinnamon. If the bulbs are set in pots now the plant will attain a large growth and bloom during the coming winter, or the bulbs may be set in the open ground in the Spring, when the vine will completely cover any trellis or arbor, producing a beautiful effect. Desiring to introduce our charming magazine for ladies and the family, THE LADIES' WORLD, into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following special and extraordinary offer: Upon receipt of only 12 Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months, and to each subscriber we will also send Free and postpaid, Two Bulbs of the charming Cinnamon Vine as described above. THE LADIES' WORLD is a large 20-page, 80-column illustrated Magazine for ladies and the family circle. It is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fancy work, artistic needlework, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc. Remember, 12 cents pays for the magazine three months, and two bulbs of the Cinnamon Vine are given absolutely free to every subscriber. No lady can afford to miss this wonderful opportunity. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of both bulbs and Magazine if you are not satisfied. Ours is an old and reliable publishing house, endorsed by all the leading newspapers. Write to-day—don't put it off! Six subscriptions, with the two bulbs free to each, sent for 60 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER! To any lady sending us 12 cents for above offer, and naming the paper in which she saw this advertisement, we will send free, in addition to the Cinnamon Vine Bulbs and the Magazine three months, one Bulb of the charming Freesia (Refracta Alba), a beautiful winter-blooming plant, producing large, pure white flowers, in elegant clusters, delicate and fragrant. The Cinnamon Vine and Freesia together will make a beautiful window garden. Address:

Happy indeed are the homes which contain "Garland" Stoves and Ranges.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure Bilious and Nervous Ills.

"THERE'S NO SUCH WORD AS FAIL."

So said the great Richelieu to his doubting adherent. Make up your mind to succeed, and the battle is half won. The faint-hearted and vacillating are born to failure. The determined and energetic march unflinchingly to the goal of success. Mountains dwindle into mole-hills in their path. There is a French proverb, "Rien ne succede comme le succes." (Nothing succeeds like success.) One success begets another because it inspires self-confidence, which is the grand actuator of determined effort. The field of enterprise is strewn with failures, and conspicuous among these are proprietary medicines. Flamboyant advertising cannot save them. They are lost at the start.

No claim has ever been put forth in behalf of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda which the testimony of the public, physicians, and the press, does not fully justify. It is a remedy of the highest order for disorders of the throat, chest and lungs. This, of itself, would commend it for family and professional use, but it is no mere specific, because in all wasting maladies, and particularly for children, it is widely useful. Feeble women experience great benefit from it, and it is a matter of record that an ounce of this famous nutrient is frequently equivalent to a gain in bodily substance of a pound avordupois. Milk is scarcely more acceptable to the palate, and on this account children swallow it with avidity.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

Of our children's temperance literature on the table in the library of the Children's Building, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates writes: "I will keep some of the cards and papers upon the library table as long as they last. They are certain to be carried off, which is probably what you wish. No one can tell which of the seeds strewn along the highway may grow and blossom. None of these, I hope, will be wasted."

Are you helping to scatter seeds?

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

We wish to call the attention of all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to the announcement on page 16 of the reorganization of the Subscription Book Department of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. It is the object of this department to publish and sell through the medium of canvassing agents, moral and instructive books at popular prices. It is, therefore, capable of not only doing incalculable good, but of providing pleasant and profitable employment for thousands of young men and ladies.

The business of selling popular and standard books by subscription is one about which little is known to the general public. Few are aware that it is a source of steady income and a regular life occupation with a large number of very intelligent and worthy people. Of late, nearly all the more important books have been published on the subscription plan. The works of Gen. U. S. Grant, James G. Blaine, Gen. John A. Logan, and the more important of Mark Twain's, were all sold in this way, and the day will come when every important work will depend upon the canvassing agent for a successful introduction to the reading public. By the subscription method, publishers are warranted in undertaking what would otherwise, in many cases, prove hazardous undertakings, and, but for this method, many of the best books could never have seen the light of day. The book store is, of course, a necessary institution, but it accomplishes only partially the great work of disseminating literature. Even the most extended advertising will not bring a really meritorious work to the attention of those who would gladly purchase it if made aware of its merits, and instances are innumerable, prior to the advent of the canvassing agent, of really great works which proved a dismal failure, from a financial standpoint, simply for the lack of proper introduction. But the subscription method changes all this. It guarantees the success of meritorious books, and enables the publisher, by increased sales, to fix the retail price of valuable, and, oftentimes, necessary works, within the reach of all. And thus thousands of people are induced to read who rarely see the inside of a library or book store, and the cottage without a small collection of books is now a rare exception.

A list of eminent men who have been book canvassers, comprises many authors and statesmen. George Washington, Napoleon, Grant, Bismarck, Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Jas. G. Blaine, Jay Gould, Emerson, Ex-Pres. Hayes, and many others whose names emblazon the pages of history, largely owe their success in life to the experience obtained while engaged in the laudable and honorable calling of a book agent.

Among the books published by the Subscription Book Department are "Glimpses of Fifty Years," by Frances E. Willard; "Childhood; Its Care and Culture," by Mary Allen West; "The Junior Partners," by Abel M. Rawson; "Boys of the Bible," by Thos. W. Handford; "The Golden Links," by Mrs. E. A. and Bishop Newman, and that magnificent portfolio of photographs, "Glimpses of the World," by the great traveler and lecturer, John L. Stoddard. The latter particularly is well adapted for Christmas trade. All are attractive in make-up, and works of genuine merit, which cannot fail to prove satisfactory to subscribers. We trust that all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL and friends of the W. T. P. A. will aid in making this department in every way a success.

To the Members and Friends

...OF THE...

Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

We take pleasure in announcing that the SUBSCRIPTION BOOK DEPARTMENT of THE WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION has been reorganized under NEW MANAGEMENT, and a strong effort will be made to place it on a paying basis. As one of the objects of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association is the publication and circulation of temperance and religious books, we earnestly solicit the co-operation of every member and every Christian worker. If you are not in a position to represent us in your neighborhood yourself, try and induce some worthy young man or lady to take up the work. IF YOU CAN DO NO MORE, at least fill out and mail us the coupon, below, giving the names of several energetic persons in need of profitable employment.

The best season in the whole year for selling books is now at hand. Thousands of books will be sold during the next few months for Christmas presents alone, and, with your assistance, GREAT RESULTS may be accomplished. WILL YOU AID US, AND, AT THE SAME TIME, BENEFIT YOUR COMMUNITY BY THE INTRODUCTION OF INSTRUCTIVE AND MORAL BOOKS?

We have the finest line of subscription books published, and WILL PAY ESPECIALLY LIBERAL COMMISSIONS TO AGENTS. Among our publications may be mentioned:

"FOR GOD AND HOME AND EVERY LAND."

"GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS."

An Autobiography of FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Prepared by special and unanimous request of the National W. C. T. U.

In this work is portrayed the life of the most widely known woman in America, as well as the only complete history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Kindred Organizations. In this book is told the story of a prairie girl's career, far transcending in interest and influence that of any other modern woman. The work is splendidly illustrated. Among the illustrations are a full-page steel portrait of Miss Willard and a double-page lithograph in gold and colors of the battle flag of the White-Ribbon Army. Miss Willard's popularity and the low price of this work insures an immense and steady sale. The book is 9½ inches long by 6½ inches wide, and contains over 700 pages. It retails as follows:

Fine English Cloth, Marble Edges,	- -	$2.25

"CHILDHOOD: ITS CARE AND CULTURE."

By MARY ALLEN WEST.

"THE CHILDHOOD OF TO-DAY IS THE NATION OF TO-MORROW."

There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual and spiritual. A whole library in one book. Every parent needs it.

The Standard.—This book is a revelation as to the duty of parent to child.

Toledo Blade.—It is a work that all true parents will gladly welcome in their households, for it breathes a Christian spirit through every page.

North American Review.—The subject is one of vast moment, and deserves the exhaustive treatment it has received.

Northwestern Christian Advocate.—Parents will greatly enjoy this book, and not a little of it may be used to the great advantage of children themselves.

This splendid book contains over 750 pages, with 16 full-page illustrations and 13 pieces of music.

"THE JUNIOR PARTNERS."

By ABEL M. RAWSON.

A WONDERFUL, POWERFUL AND REMARKABLY INTERESTING STORY

Of social and commercial life, the saloon and the insane asylum.

Its arguments are subtle, clear, comprehensive, convincing, and cover new ground in the relation of drink to insanity. It will command and enchain the interest of thousands of readers who consider moderate drinking as being without danger.

Denver Times.—"The Junior Partners" is a powerful temperance story, and has for its fundamental truth the theory that intemperance is a disease, inherited in many cases, and should be treated as such.

Philadelphia Inquirer.—It is a transcript of real life, and full of interest.

The Sunday Item, Philadelphia.—The descriptive powers of the author are of a high order, a delirium tremens scene being unusually powerfully drawn.

Brooklyn Eagle.—It is more than a temperance story. It is a notable compound, in true American style, of knowledge of the Western world and its temptations for young men and old.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Agricultural Congresses met in the Art Palace, Chicago, during the week.

Felix Charles Gounod, the renowned musical composer, passed away October 19, at his home in Paris.

The great Conventions of the World's and National W. C. T. U. came to a close last Sunday evening.

It is reported from Cape Town that the British forces have defeated the natives in two battles in Matabeland.

Forty deaths a day from cholera were reported last week from one steamer carrying Arab pilgrims from Mecca to Morocco.

Emperor William, of Germany, unveiled a monument to his dead father, the late Emperor William I. at Bremen, last week.

A great fire, involving a loss of four million dollars, occurred among the manufacturing warehouses of New York, October 19.

Lady Henry Somerset preached the annual sermon of the W. C. T. U. conventions, Sunday afternoon, in the Memorial Art Palace.

While the French are honoring the Russian naval fleet, that of Great Britain is being royally entertained on the Mediterranean by the Italians.

The Moors are still besieging the Spanish forts in Morocco, and the latter government is finding it no easy matter to put down the rebellion.

The American Bankers' Association discussed financial matters at its nineteenth annual gathering in Chicago last week, congratulating itself upon the way in which American banking institutions had withstood the recent financial strain.

The South Park commissioners decided October 20, to hold the World's Fair Directory strictly to its bond to remove the buildings before May 1, 1894, and were positive in their refusal to permit the continuance of the Fair another year.

The Trenton battle monument, commemorating the victory of Gen. George Washington over the combined British and Hessian forces, December 26, 1776, was unveiled at Trenton, N. J., October 19, with military parade, speech and banquet.

The famous collection of Lincoln souvenirs was removed last week from Springfield, Ill., to the national capitol by the Memorial Association of Washington, and has been placed in charge of the custodian who has cared for it during the past ten years.

The famous ex-field marshal and ex-president of France, Patrick Maurice de MacMahon, Duke of Magenta, died last week at Paris in his eighty-sixth year, and was buried with great pomp and ceremony, October 22, from the Church of La Madeleine, Paris, the remains being interred in the Hotel des Invalides.

EXTRACT from a prominent Chicago daily of October 23: "It was the first Sunday that all the concessions were open. The chair pushers worked and even perspired, and answered questions unceasingly. Every peanut stand was open and well patronized. Water, too, could be had. Electric launch and gondola carried many a party of time-pressed sight-seers who would not be denied a view of the Fair from every possible point. The restaurants, cafés and lunch-counters were all doing business. The tired faces of employés as darkness settled down told that the crowd had been there all day." We print the foregoing for the benefit of our readers who want to know what has become of the Sunday opening question. The ways of the evil one are devious, and here is proof afresh that familiar with his face they "first endure, then pity, then embrace."

THE board of lady managers is making an effort to secure individual recognition from our government for those whose skilled labor has been the means of making the exhibits of the World's Fair a success. The labor people warmly second this effort and a petition to Congress is being circulated and signed by prominent labor leaders.

AN error appeared in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL of Friday which strangely enough also appeared in other papers that reported the speech of Lady Henry Somerset during the Temple discussion on Thursday afternoon. She is reported as saying, "In heaven there will be no more sin." This is what she did say: "All of us generally have some text that brings to us particular comfort. The text I lean on a good deal just now is that in heaven 'there will be no more sea.' It seems to me that it will be a comfort to some of us perhaps to know that they will see no Temple there either." In view of the fact that the speech intended an allusion to her own journeyings by sea to and from the Conventions the point is entirely lost by the incorrect quotation.

THE Hall of Columbus was the scene of a large overflow meeting from the Hall of Washington on Sunday afternoon where every inch of standing room was occupied. Mrs. Hammer, president of Pennsylvania, presided. Mrs. Davis, of Kentucky, led the devotional exercises, and was followed by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap who is ever heartily welcomed by her audiences. Miss Conybeare, of England, spoke most acceptably, also Mrs. Mary T. Burt, Dr. Mary Wood Allen and Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper. An unusual but beautiful feature of the exercises was the baptism of the two little daughters of Mrs. deCondres of Evanston, by Dr. Anna Shaw. Their mother had "set her heart" upon their being baptized by a white-ribbon woman and seized the auspicious opportunity. They were named Frances Anna and Mary.
